INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th January, 1905.

Fall of Port Arthur.

1. THE Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th January, says :—So at last Port Arthur has fallen. It reflects great credit on those who designed and constructed the fortress that it should have taken the Japanese such a long time to take it. It reflects still greater credit on the heroic General Stoessel and his army who have immortalized themselves by their gallant persistent defence of it in face of the greatest odds, that they should have held out so long and so stubbornly for the honour of their Sovereign and Fatherland. But of course the most brilliant lustre is shed on the singular military prowess of the invincible Japanese that they should have been able to capture a place as nearly impregnable as we can think of. The capture of Port Arthur is a much more brilliant feat than even the magnificent victories of Liao-yang and the Sha-ho, and it is of so important a character that one may without rashness venture the prophecy that the issue of the war is no longer very doubtful.

CITIZEN,
2nd January, 1905.

Rumour regarding Lord Curzon pursuing a new policy during his second term of administration of India.

2. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd January, says :—We cannot persuade ourselves to believe that the rumour is reliable that Lord Curzon is going to turn over a new leaf as regards his policy, and that he will act henceforth with an eye not to giving serious offence to the educated communities in this country. It is said that this advice has been imparted to His Excellency by the members of the British Cabinet, and that Lord Curzon has accepted it without much reluctance. We fervently hope that all these rumours are not unfounded, but, as we have said, we can hardly induce ourselves to believe them. Lord Curzon would be acting most wisely by paying due regard to the opinions of the real leaders of the Indian people, viz., their educated members. The first thing that His Excellency should do in order to conciliate the Indian public is to bring about the separation of executive and judicial functions, and then to abandon his pet scheme of the partition of Bengal, and to carry out police reform in a manner that would meet with the approval of that great representative assembly, the Indian National Congress. All other acts and measures of His Lordship must also show that he is not perversely inclined to ignore the advanced Indian public opinion on political and administrative reform.

CITIZEN,
2nd January, 1905.

The coming Darbar at Calcutta.

3. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd January, says :—We hope the rumour is true that it is the intention of Lord Curzon to make the coming Darbar in Calcutta as cheap an affair as possible. If the Darbar is held in the Throne Room of the Government House, that would save the cost of a temporary Darbar Pavilion, of which there seems to be no necessity. Moreover, the Throne Room will make as imposing a Darbar Hall as any temporary Darbar Hall that can be erected. Some Feudatory Princes are expected to be present at the ceremony, and as they, according to a regulation introduced by Lord Curzon, are to be guests of the Government of India, the hospitality to be shown to them will cost a good round sum. Besides, the entertaining of Sirdar Inayat Ullah will be answerable for at least a lakh of rupees. This is after all an item of expense which should be classed under "Imperial." If the advice of the Royal Commission of Indian Expenditure were respected, this item would be met conjointly by the Home Government and the Government of India. But this suggestion of that great Commission has up to this time been set at naught, and we do not know if it will ever come to be recognized as a principle of the financial administration of India.

CITIZEN,
2nd January, 1905.

Sir Henry Cotton's Presidential speech at the Bombay Congress.

4. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd January, says :—The speech of Sir Henry Cotton is unquestionably one of the grandest speeches delivered from the Congress platform. Rich in sympathy and teeming in sound political observations, simplicity and earnestness are not its least charms. He dwelt at length on some of the important subjects on the Congress programme, viz., the necessity of increased representation of Indian affairs in the House of Commons; the economic drain of India and the desirability of the conservation of its resources by indigenous industry; the reconstitution of the Civil Service; and the separation of Executive and Judicial functions. "The keynote of administrative reform is the gradual substitution of Indian for European official agency." The ideal of India's future is its growth and expansion as a federated State under the autonomy (suzerainty) of Great Britain. The seeds of growth have already been cast, and the object of the Congress has in certain respects come to a partial fruition; but the Congress has still a good deal to accomplish. He warned the Congress people of the risks they were exposed to by reason of "petty internal bickerings and dissensions, by unworthy jealousies and ignoble depreciation of the life-long labours of the foremost men of your generation."

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th January, 1905.

Sir Henry Cotton's Presidential speech at the Bombay Congress.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th January, says:—Sir Henry Cotton's Presidential address is cast in different mould. It gained in weight by the sober style in which it was written, and is bound to receive wide attention. It was said by some one that a pronouncement to be received with respect outside most proceed with authority from its author. Sir Henry Cotton is a perfect master of all the subjects with which he dealt in his address. He was for thirty-five years a member of the Indian Civil Service, and filled from the lowest to all but the highest positions its members are entitled to. He thus knows the true inwardness of Indian administration. Having been himself engaged in the practical work of administration he knows its difficulties, and is thus not apt to belittle the worth of the services rendered to India by British rule. At the same time he has a native sympathy for people of India, understands their feelings and aspirations, and is anxious for their political and economic regeneration. He has also, as he himself said, been a watchful observer of the growth of the Congress movement from its very inception, and has an exalted conception of its future possibilities. Such a man was bound to make a weighty pronouncement, and Congressmen were not disappointed in their expectation. They are profoundly grateful to him for his address which they will ardently treasure as one of the landmarks in the history of their great movement, and will cherish the honoured name of its author as one of their great friends. Three other speeches delivered at the Congress calling for special mention are those of Babu Surendranath Banerji on the Public Service Resolution, the Hon'ble Mr. L. A. Govinda Raghava Iyer on the Land question, and Mr. V. Krishnaswami Iyer on Representation.

In one and all respects the Bombay Congress was so singularly successful that Congressmen could wish for nothing better than that the rulers of the country should read full and impartial accounts of it with a view to form their own independent opinion on its merits. The verdict is then sure to go in their favour. At any rate, let us hope that when Sir Henry Cotton will personally place the Resolutions of the Congress before his Excellency the Viceroy, he will not fail to get a respectful and sympathetic hearing on behalf of the Congress.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

HINDOSTHAN,
3rd January, 1905.

The Kabul Mission and the Amir.

6. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 3rd January, says that it is reported that the Amir of Kabul intends laying three proposals before the British-Indian Mission recently sent there, viz., (1) that His Highness should be allowed to keep an envoy in England, (2) that the annual subsidy of 18 lakhs granted him by the Indian Government should be increased, and (3) that he should be free to hold intercourse with Russia or any other foreign Power. As regards the first proposal, it was made by the late Amir, but it was not granted by the British Government at that time, and there is little chance of its receiving any better response now, the Amir not having the status of an altogether independent sovereign. The second proposal must be summarily rejected: the grant of Rs. 18 lakhs to the Amir could be justified so long as there was some dread of Russia; but now that Japan has so crippled her power, the subsidy should, properly speaking, be stopped altogether, rather than increased. The third proposal is simply absurd, and the Amir is not well-advised, if he really makes it.

AKHBAR-I-IMAMIA,
20th December, 1904.

Indictment of the Aligarh College by certain Muhammadan theologians.

7. The Akhbár-i-Imámia (Lucknow), of the 20th December, publishes a verdict of certain Muhammadan theologians that it is unlawful and improper for Musalmans to give any kind of help in the spread of such education as is inconsistent with their religious tenets and injunctions, and that anybody who does so is an enemy to God and the prophet, and is doomed to severe punishment in the next world. Such deleterious education, the theologians contend, is given in the Aligarh College, the students turned out by it generally refusing to believe in the traditions of the prophet, &c.; and hence true Musalmans should not have any concern with that institution, or subscribe funds for its up-keep, &c., if they desire to save themselves from spiritual sufferings in future.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
1st January, 1905.

The Shahna-i-Hind on the opposition of certain Muhammadan theologians to the Aligarh College.

8. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 1st January, states that a verdict has recently been published, bearing the seals of ten Shia and Sunni ulemás (learned men or theologians), in which they first lay down that it is not proper to render any aid to an educational institution—in which religious education be given only nominally, and the (principal) education given be opposed to the religious beliefs (of the Muhammadans); whose scholars make comments on the Qoran according to their own opinions, refuse to believe in the traditions relating to the prophet, his descendants and companions, and reject miracles altogether; and so forth—and then add in the end that all these disqualifications exist in the Muhammadan College at Aligarh. The above verdict, the editor observes, is a very serious indictment of the Aligarh College, amounting almost to a libel, so that each and every trustee of the College can, if he is so minded, institute a criminal prosecution, for the same, against the signatories of the verdict. Moreover, to question the propriety of the kind of education given in the Aligarh College and thereby deter Muhammadan boys from receiving English education, is surely a great disadvantage to the Muhammadan community: why, it is to destroy it, considering in what reduced condition the Muhammadans generally are, and how all their worldly progress depends on the spread of English education among them. The Muhammadan ulemás should therefore reconsider what suicidal policy they have adopted in condemning the Aligarh College.

SHRI GOPAL PATRIKA,
November, 1904.

Question of promoting female education in India.

9. The Shri Gopál Patrika (Lucknow), for November, referring to the agitation which educated Indians have set up in every part of the country for giving education to Indian girls, says that as only a very small percentage of the male population receive any education at all, there is little hope of the agitation meeting with any considerable success, so long as special efforts are not made both by the people and Government to make male education much more general and wide-spread, and thereby largely increase the number of literate men, who may be able to appreciate the benefits of education and withdraw their opposition to the education of their girls. But to effect this desideratum, it is very necessary that the tuition fees that have lately been raised so high should be reduced, and the courses of studies made easier, so that not only rich men, whose number is very small in this country, but also other classes may be able to give education to their boys. The editor then dilating upon the need and advantages of giving education to woman also, who is the better half of man, and on whose sagacity, intelligence, &c., largely depend the well-being, happiness and prosperity of a family, calls upon the people to give at least as much education to the female members as will enable them to keep their household accounts and to attend satisfactorily to their other domestic affairs.

HINDOSTHAN, 3rd January, 1905.

Certain Postal proposals to the Government of India.

10. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 3rd January, states that the Vaishya Sabha at Calcutta has made a representation to the Government of India urging (1) that letters weighing not more than three-quarters of a tola be carried for half an anna postage, (2) that daily newspapers weighing not more than 2 tolas be carried for half a pice stamp (made for the purpose), and (3) that postage charged on parcels up to 10 tolas be one anna. All these proposals, the editor thinks, are very reasonable and fair, and will greatly benefit the people if they are adopted.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th January, 1905.

The fall of Port Arthur, and a suggestion to the Czar to make peace with Japan.

1. THE Indian People, (Allahabad), of the 8th January, says:—Now that by repeated victories Japan has proved herself to be something more than Russia's equal in land warfare, that Port Arthur has fallen, that Russia's Pacific Fleet has been destroyed and her Baltic Fleet either cannot go to the front at all or will be useless if it succeeds in going there, and that on either land or sea the chances of Russian victory are remote in the extreme, should not the great Czar reconcile himself to the immediate termination of hostilities for the sake of his own people and of humanity? Even in the improbable contingency of his army winning in the end, the loss of reputation that has so far been suffered cannot be made good as the defeats received have been so crushing and decisive. The finances of his kingdom are in no good condition, and the mood of his people seems to be the reverse of favourable to the continuance of the war. If Emperor Nicholas be a statesman, he will be well-advised in accepting the mediation of neutral Powers with a view to stop the war, and in devoting himself to such reform in the methods of his government as will allay popular irritation and produce contentment. Has he not paid dearly enough in all conscience for the maintenance of the present vicious autocratic form of rule? Where is now his favourite Minister M. de Plehve? Let the war with Japan act as an eye-opener to him and his evil geniuses.

ADVOCATE,
8th January, 1905.

The fall of Port Arthur, and a suggestion to the Government of India to increase the Indian army.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th January, says:—The inevitable has taken place. Port Arthur has fallen, and the entire civilised world is glad that the impregnable fort has fallen; glad not so much in the discomfiture of Russia, as in the hope that the fall of Port Arthur means the beginning of the end. It is now likely that the butchery which has been going on for months together might come to an end. There is difference of opinion as to whether the war will be continued or come to an end with the closing chapter of Port Arthur. There is the opinion that Russia will fight more doggedly in Mukden, and will prevent the attempt of the Japanese in getting Manchuria vacated. There is another party which feels that Japan having gained the object she had in view, namely, mastery of the Yellow Sea, will herself bring the war operations to an end. We take the last view, and think that the war will come to an end as soon as Japan is able to convince the Czar's Ministers, if they require further proofs of the earnestness of Japan, that the moment the Baltic Fleet encounters the victorious fleet of Admiral Togo, it will sink like paper boats. The story of the defeat of the Russians by the Japanese will be repeated in all parts of Asia, and nowhere will it be heard with greater attention than in India. It is no exaggeration to say that if ever any war roused enthusiasm in India, it is the present war, and the majority of Indians have been on the side of the Japanese. It is true that the late Russo-Turkish War roused great enthusiasm in India, but that was confined to Muhammadans only. In the present war all sections of Indians are interested, and the rejoicings with which the news of the fall of Port Arthur has been received have been general. The assaults on the besieged army, the bombardment of fort after fort, the repulses with which the Japanese met, the studied indifference with which General Stoessel's army looked on its own fate, its intention to burn itself to death in a sortie, and the perseverance of General Nogi and his brave army, have all been watched with deep interest in this country, and admired by all sections of the people. This admiration for bravery of both Russian and Japanese soldiers is natural, and if it is accompanied by a pang that Indians have no longer field open to them to distinguish themselves in the manner in which these Japanese soldiers have done, it is no fault of theirs. The fault is of the short-sighted policy which has killed all military ambition in the people. The very eagerness with which the events in Manchuria have been followed, the keenness with which the news of the fall of Port Arthur has been received even when Indians are in no way directly or indirectly concerned, ought to open the eyes of the rulers of the land, and should induce them to avail themselves of the material near at hand. Two articles have recently appeared in the London Times dealing with the effect of the Manchurian war on the defence of India. The writer finds in the defeat of the Russian arms in Manchuria cause for lament. If Russia with a base at a distance of five thousand miles could flood Manchuria with troops, could on one single line send five hundred thousand men at the rate of 25,000 men a week, what achievements may she not perform on the Afghan frontier to which she has two lines of railway instead of one, on both of which from every side two trains can run and flood Herat with Cossacks? The writer laments over the inadequate military preparations of India. Without going into the question which can only be discussed by experts, whether the present British and Indian army can defend India from the attack of Russians if they are of the stubborn nature as we have witnessed them in Manchuria, what a pity that even now it does not occur to the rulers of the land that the best policy at the present moment which they should adopt is to replace the policy of suspicion by that of confidence. Instead of laying down that there should be one British soldier for every two Indian soldiers in North India, and for every three in Bombay, Bengal and Bombay (Madras) Presidencies, they should increase the number of the Indian garrison. The fear that by increasing the reserves of the Indian army they would be increasing the armed population should give place to the confidence that as Russia and Japan could in the present war draw upon an indefinite number of reserves, the Indian Government should have armed people to fall back upon in case of need. The present occasion is most suitable for the inauguration of a new military policy in India. The fall of Port Arthur has witnessed expression of a strong feeling in the country against a nation which means ill to India; it has roused fervour and enthusiasm for a military career in the people; it has strengthened the belief that Asiatics if properly trained can compete with trained European soldiers, and if given equal opportunities will fight face to face with the bravest soldiers in the world. Indians believe that if a military career were opened to them in the manner it is open to the Japanese, they would be able to render Russian attacks, real or imaginary, impossible. Will the Government of India avail itself of the outburst of the popular feeling by inaugurating a policy of confidence in place of that of suspicion?

HINDUSTANI,
11th January, 1905.

The fall of Port Arthur, and a suggestion to the Government of India to increase the Indian army.

3. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 11th January, referring to the fall of Port Arthur, endorses the views of the Advocate that if Indians are given military training and the native army increased, the British Government will find in them as tough a match for Russian soldiers as the Japanese have proved themselves to be. It is high time that Government ceased to pursue its present policy of distrust, and fear of increasing the armed population of the country.

HINDOSTHAN,
11th January, 1905.

The fall of Port Arthur, and its probable effect on the system of government in Russia.

4. The English Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 11th January, says:—The fall of Port Arthur marks the close of a stirring chapter in the Russo-Japanese war. A new chapter now opens; but whether by a decisive engagement with the Russian troops near Mukden, or by a naval engagement with the Baltic Fleet in the Pacific, remains to be seen. Of one thing, however, we may be sure: the surrender of the fortress has created consternation among the people in Russia. The Boer War revealed many defects in British military organisation and a lamentable state of British military inefficiency. The present war has similarly opened the eyes of Russia to the weak points of her administration, and she now stands unmasked before the world and discloses the ugly spots in her system of government. If, therefore, the present war leads to healthy internal reforms and secures more rights and privileges to the Russian people, it will not have been waged in vain.

Comments on the paper recently read by the Earl of Ronaldshay on Russian progress in Asia before the Central Asian Society in London.

5. The Indian People, (Allahabad), of the 8th January, says:—The Earl of Ronaldshay, who read a paper before the Central Asian Society in London on the 14th December on Russian progress in Asia, seems to be one of those easily misled alarmists who if they had their way would plunge this country in ruin and bankruptcy by their forward schemes. Having said 'that we, whose interest in the preservation of equilibrium in the East could scarcely be exaggerated, had every right to keep such a watch upon the progress of events amongst the peoples of Central Asia as would enable us at all times to preserve from possible danger the sacred trust of the East,' the Earl proceeded: 'As guardians of the Indian frontier we should be guilty of neglecting our duty if we shut our eyes to the fact that a harmful intrigue had only too often accompanied Russian commercial activity in Asia in the past.' He thought that the blue-book on Tibet was hardly calculated to reassure them (Englishmen) as to the disinterestedness of Russia's motives. Sir West Ridgeway, who as an experienced administrator might have been more cautious in his statements, said that Russia could with much facility and quickness 'convey an army of hundreds of thousands of men to the frontier of Afghanistan and feed them when there. It would be unwise to close our eyes to the fact that that frontier was at the mercy of Russia, and he was certain that the day would come when the frontiers of the two great Empires would be conterminous.'

The above calculation coolly forgets that there is the entire length of Afghanistan to traverse even when Russia gets to its western frontier. And Afghanistan, as Colonel Hanna has said more than once, is a very difficult country to conquer and nearly impossible to hold. Then, if Russia will actually succeed in subjugating Afghanistan, how will she fare with the warlike tribes through whose difficult and inhospitable country her troops shall have to pass to come to India? And what will be her reception at the hands of the Sikhs and the Rajputs? The readers will remember that it was only recently, in discussing General Kuropatkin's alleged scheme for the invasion of India, that the Spectator said that the Russians would have to pass through lakes of fire in this region. Is it likely that after her experience in the present war in the Far East, Russia can think of an invasion of India at least for ten years to come? Will she even then be so demented as to undertake the perilous enterprise certain to land her in destruction? If she actually will do so, are not the existing Indian troops sufficient to crush her? Sane and responsible thinkers and military men who are also statesmen answer these questions in a way different from the jingo fire-eaters, those afflicted by the K. C. B. and other manias, and the people of India agree with them.

Comments on Lord Curzon's refusal to permit Sir Henry Cotton to personally present to His Lordship a copy of the resolutions passed by the Bombay Congress

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th January, referring to Lord Curzon's refusal to accord an interview to Sir Henry Cotton to personally present to His Lordship a copy of the resolutions passed at the recent session of the Congress in Bombay, says:—The reasons given for declining to see Sir Henry Cotton in his capacity of President of the Congress are as cogent as those advanced by Lord George Hamilton against receiving a deputation from the Indian Famine Union, and by Lord Curzon's Government against the institution of the village economic enquiry recommended by that body. If it be inconvenient for the head of the Government as distinct from the Government, to discuss problems of administration, then how are Viceroys and Governors able to do so in their tours? Besides, Lord Curzon's objection would be conclusive if he were asked to arrive at definite decisions on those problems. But nobody is so foolish as to make that demand of him. When, again, Lord Curzon is afraid of creating a precedent, he is unnecessarily fastidious. Does every Viceroy follow the example of every one of his predecessors on every matter? If so, Lord Curzon himself might have followed the example of Lord Dufferin and given a party at Government House to the distinguished Congress leaders who were at Calcutta in December 1901. For ourselves we are sorry that a unique opportunity should have been thrown away by Lord Curzon of knowing at first hand something about the great Congress—the greatest of all its sessions—held at Bombay, from the mouth of its illustrious President whose worth could not be belittled as an amateur politician, and whose pronouncement was a piece of constructive criticism of the highest value.

Attitude of Lord Curzon towards the Indian National Congress and the Indian Commercial Conference respectively.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th January, says:—The National Congress and the Commercial Conference, both Indian, affect the nerves of Lord Curzon differently: the Viceroy is almost afraid to accept personally from its President the resolutions passed by the Congress; His Excellency not only expresses his sympathy with the objects of the Conference unresevedly, but allows a member of the Government to open the proceedings. While he invites Sir Henry Cotton, with the Congress stain on his mind and dress still, gingerly to a luncheon and treats the conversation as table-talk, he gives a dinner to the commercial delegates right royally. Yet, one is at a loss to make out what differentiates the Congress from the Conference. Both aim at improvement—the Congress political, and the Conference commercial; both criticise the measures of the Government, condemn some, eulogise a few and suggest others; both broad-base their opinion on loyalty to the British throne. Why then is scant courtesy shown towards the one and flowing kindness towards the other? There is, however, one difference, very plain; it consists in the fact that while the Congress represents all sections of people living in India, the Conference only those engaged in commerce, and of such, only Anglo-Indians who form the majority of members of the several provincial Chambers. In this case, then, sympathy is based on the very old but powerful sentiment, blood is thicker than water.

Alleged objects of the Kabul Mission.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th January, says:—The objects of the Kabul Mission ooze out gradually. Apart from the outstanding questions about the relations between the Amir and the Viceroy, it is now plain that the defence of Afghanistan is itself one great topic for discussion. The Amir is to be induced to earmark the subsidy for military purposes in order to strengthen the defensive works on Herat side and improve the lines of communication with India, so that the British Government may practically be within beck and call in case of emergency.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th January, 1905.

Comments on Lord Curzon's attitude towards the Indian National Congress and the Indian Commercial Conference respectively.

1. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th January, says:—It has been one of our chief complaints against Lord Curzon that while he maintains an attitude of aloofness and distance from Indian national movements, he has nothing but rosewater and kisses for his British exploiting friends and comrades. This has received fresh illustration during the last few days in connection with the Indian National Congress and the Conference of Chambers of Commerce respectively. He would not so much as grant an interview to the President of the Congress, nor accept at his hands personally the Resolutions of that great convention of the empire, but he entertained the delegates of the Chambers of Commerce at dinner at Government House. He who has violated the spirit of the constitution more than any of his predecessors had a pious horror of personally, dissociated from his colleagues of the Government, discussing the subjects of the Congress Resolutions with Sir Henry Cotton; but he had no such scruple in entering into an elaborate explanation of certain acts of his Government before the commercial representatives, who also talked politics in their Conference.

Sir Henry Cotton, qua President of the Congress, was carefully kept at arm's length, but the commercial delegates 'I cannot deny myself the privilege of welcoming... here, and of saying how greatly I esteem the honour that you confer upon me by coming as my guests to-night.' 'The interests that are represented by the gentlemen,' who represent the microscopic minority of the Anglo-Indian Chambers of Commerce, but not those represented by the Indian National Congress, 'are commensurate with the whole field of economic development upon which the future prosperity of this country so largely depends,' and 'they affect the vital interests of the country at large!' The responsible head of the Government of India, charged with the onerous duty of safeguarding and advancing the material and moral interests of the people of India, saw nothing incongruous in openly proclaiming the 'community of interest between Government and (Anglo-Indian) commerce in this country,' and in saying 'that by an inevitable and mutual approximation both Government and commerce recognise the identity of their common interest'—we suppose against the people of the country.

ADVOCATE,
15th January, 1905.

Mr. Chamberlain's preferential duties scheme considered from the standpoint of India's interest.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 15th January, says:—Mr. Chamberlain has been asked to consider the position of India in relation to his fiscal solution proposed for England. In presenting his case to the British public he altogether ignored India, while the British Government cannot do so for the simple reason that India is the only paying concern in the British Empire. Mr. Balfour's Government asked for the opinion of our Governor-General in Council. Considering the fact that India enjoys a large measure of the advantages of the free exchange of imports and exports, and that she may have something to offer to the Empire but little to get in return, rather she has a great deal to lose or risk, the Government of India replied "that we should not be justified in embarking on any new policy of the kind unless assured of the benefits greater and more certain than any which so far presented themselves to our mind." With this view many sensible men have reason to agree, including the writer of the Times' articles on Indian affairs. The Government has also the Indian public on its back. The Congress supports the position taken up by the Government; the Chambers of Commerce do the same. The unanimity of opinion in this matter is of great importance.

The reason for the above attitude is fear of loss by exchange. India is a debtor nation. Her net obligations are some 16 millions sterling per annum, and it is essential to her financial stability that her exports should exceed her imports by at least 16 millions sterling per annum. India accomplishes this by exporting some 11 millions worth of goods to the Far East, receiving thence only two millions' worth of merchandise. She thus secures half the balance. Great Britain deflects the balance. She enjoys two-thirds of India's import trade, but only takes one-fourth of her exports, and if the British Empire as a whole be considered, there is a balance of 7½ millions against India. To secure her object India must, therefore, at present look to foreign countries. We find that Great Britain has the lion's share in import trade, but that her hold is relaxing year after year owing principally to German activity in India. The apprehension of the Government is therefore very well-founded. But the writer of the Times' article has a lurking desire to see some change made in our fiscal policy. Says he:

"Whatever there is of trade and prosperity is due to the efforts of the British, and provided that nothing be done to retard the future development of this magnificent estate, to add to the burdens of the tenants, to increase the cost of living, or to restrict them—a relatively poor people—in the enjoyment of cheap import, Great Britain has the first claim to India's produce and to India's custom. And if, coincidentally, a change be made in Indian taxation, consonant and congenial to the peculiar prejudices of the people, many administrative difficulties in the future will be prevented."

Then he shows the way to bring about the change. In thinking of it the German bogey appears to him a real demon. It has been calculated, he says, that a discriminating tariff in favour of the United Kingdom affecting a trade of ten millions sterling could be framed; but this estimate was based on figures which gave the import trade of India as £50,000,000. The trade of India is growing. Surely there must be possibilities of mutual usefulness which will present themselves to the mind of the Indian authorities. Cotton import and excise duties should not be disturbed. He is afraid Lancashire cannot continue to hold the Indian market for ever. The time is fast approaching when Indian mills shall have to be seriously reckoned with. The hand-looms have not only a vitality unsuspected by many, but efforts are being made to introduce improved looms. Then there are experts working hard to introduce Egyptian and American varieties of cotton. The endeavours of the British Cotton-growing Association will also be helpful towards spinning finer counts and weaving finer cloths in India. Thus, it would be well for England, opines the writer, to safeguard her industries other than cotton from foreign competition in India. The idea sought to be induced is that India has nothing to fear from foreign countries as far as her cotton industry is concerned.

The export trade is a source of strength to India and through this department, the Times' writer thinks, India can be of possible help to the United Kingdom. The question is put: "Could not India add to her revenues and at the same time send food to the heart and brain of the Empire, discriminating against foreign rivals by export duties on her practical monopolies of production?" This suggestion is made on the generally admitted theory that export duties may be levied on those commodities in which the exporting country has practically a monopoly of production. There is, we are told, a trade of about 11 millions' worth of exports which would fall under this category, and there are other products in which India has great commercial strength, such as rice, oil-seeds, and spices. This strength is due to the cheapness in their prices and to their being produced in so few parts of the world. Surely cheap labour and cheap agricultural production give India a vantage ground which few countries possess. The case of wheat is also mentioned to prove India's growing strength. Thus does the writer imply that this country would be no loser by participating in a fiscal policy for England based on preferential duties.

There are practically three parties in India to be consulted on every proposal for a change in the existing order of things: Indian, non-official Anglo-Indian and official. On Mr. Chamberlain's proposal, the attitude of the Indian Government has been made plain in no uncertain terms. The European merchants and professional men have only recently given out that India should be free in directing the course of her trade. Indians are also in the same boat with the merchants and the Government. The writer thinks, however, that if exploitation of India by people other than those of India is to be submitted to, Indians would give preference to the English. The writer is sorry that the colonists do not look with favour upon the Indian. But he thinks "the day is coming when the Empire will realise the enormous importance and possibilities of India's labour force and fighting force, but if these are to be used to their best and fullest in the fields of peace and in the fields of war, the great continent in which the workers and fighters and their families live must be treated with generous sympathy. It is dangerous to spoil the Indian, but it is still more dangerous to slight him." Because the poorest Indian courts honour first, and shrinks from slight. The writer may rest assured that the Indian will be the first man in the Empire to respond to sympathy, but not till he is satisfied that generous and honest efforts towards mutual advantage are being made by those who now look down upon him.

RAHBAR,
14th January, 1905.

Native Chiefs' present visit to Lord Curzon in Calcutta, and the Rahbar's suspicion of their being required by His Excellency to increase their Imperial contingent forces, in view of possible Russian troubles on the frontier.

3. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th January, says, that it is not known what difficult problem Lord Curzon is engaged at present in solving, that several Native Chiefs should have already visited him in Calcutta (presumably to give him the benefit of their counsel), while others, including even the Nizám, it is said, will soon follow suit. The public can probably have no reason to think that Government wants at present to annex any portion of any Native State, unless it be Kashmir. But as the British Government labours under an unusual dread of Russia at present, it is quite possible that it wants to take the Chiefs into its confidence regarding the need for increasing the fighting strength of India ; and if so, the public can readily realize what practical shape this secret consultation with the Natives Chiefs will ultimately take.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th January, 1905.

Apprehension of increase in the British Army in India from Mr. Arnold-Foster's Army Reform scheme.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th January, says:—Referring to the comments of the Calcutta Statesman on Mr. Arnold-Foster's British Army Reform scheme, says:—It is significant, our contemporary adds, that the announcement of the scheme has been speedily followed by rumours of an intention to increase the British army in India. We join in the hope, expressed by the Statesman, 'that the Government of India will not fail to speak out strongly regarding it, and that if they feel that the adoption of the scheme requires them to acquiesce in an increase of the British army in this country, they will, at the same time, insist on the obligation under which it places the Imperial Government to take upon itself the additional expense involved.' Whether the rest of the War Secretary's scheme will be carried out or abandoned, 'the effect which the feature we are discussing would have of enabling the Government to reduce the military expenditure of England at the cost of her great-paying dependency is so obvious and so alluring that it may be regarded as a foregone conclusion that, whatever else may be dropped, it will be retained.' Well, we can only hope that before there will be time further to proceed with such a sinister scheme, the Government may be defeated.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th January, 1905.

Creation of the post of a new Member of the Government of India, for dealing with Commerce and Industry.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th January, referring to the speech Lord Curzon delivered at the dinner he recently gave to the delegates of the Chambers of Commerce at Government House, says :—Naturally enough, Lord Curzon on that particular occasion made the creation of the new Department of Commerce and Industry the burthen of his song, and he waxed eloquent on the same, lavishing praise on Mr. Hewett, the first head of that Department. From the view-point of the people of this country, whose interests are distinctly antagonistic to those of the Anglo-Indian merchants, we have never been able to see anything for congratulation in the creation of this latest highly paid job, and Lord Curzon's remarks contain nothing in them to induce a change of opinion in us. But when he boasts of having achieved a great feat before Great Britain itself has found it necessary to create a ministry of commerce, we may remind the Viceregal orator, talking high falutin after dinner, of the British Board of Trade which is not an altogether useless department of his Majesty's Government. Lord Curzon thinks it anomalous that " you cannot add to the functions of the Government of India, or at any rate you cannot create a new department, without passing a bill through the Houses of Parliament at Home'!

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL, 16th January, 1905.

Alleged delay made in the office of the North-Western Provinces High Court, in granting copies of judgments to the public.

6. The Allahabad Law Journal, of the 16th January, says:—Complaints have reached us from various quarters that an unreasonable delay is made in the office of the High Court North-Western Provinces in granting copies of judgments. Our own experience, too, in this matter has not been happy. At times we have had to wait for weeks before we have obtained copies of judgments for publication in this journal. It is clearly impossible to keep pace with the expectations of the profession in regard to an early publication of the rulings of the Court, unless copies of judgments are obtainable without much loss of time. If the delay is due to the copying department in the High Court being undermanned, we have no doubt that the matter need only be brought to the notice of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice, and the complaint will soon be removed.

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL, 16th January, 1905.

The Rolt case, and the need for separation of the Judicial and Executive functions.

7. The Allahabad Law Journal of the 16th January, says:—Our readers have no doubt been following with interest the proceedings in the case of Emperor v. Rolt, tried by Henderson, J., in the last criminal sessions of the Calcutta High Court. The hard treatment which the accused, now honourably acquitted, received from the Executive Government, has created quite a sensation, and the learned Judge used language, none too strong, when criticising the conduct of the Magistrate responsible for the prosecution, and demonstrated that an intentional insult and indignity had been heaped upon Mr. Rolt, and that the entire prosecution story was the result of a conspiracy which had been got up in order to ruin him. But, as our readers must be aware, there was really nothing extraordinary about this prosecution. It has rightly been termed a "public scandal", but such scandals are not, unfortunately, at all rare. And it is possible that the Rolt case would not have attracted so much public attention if the accused had not been a European. All the same the lesson that it teaches is one of supreme importance, and it is high time that the Government now turned its attention to the much-needed reform of separation of the Judicial and Executive functions.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR, 16th January, 1905.

Prosecution of certain members of the Árya Samáj at Agra for publishing an obscene notice, and the punishment of the manager of a press with a fine for printing the same without disclosing the name of the press.

8. The Surmá-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 16th January, states that in connection with a criminal prosecution recently instituted against the local Árya Samáj for publishing an obscene notice, the manager of the Rafiq-i-Hind Press at Agra has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 200, or in default to simple imprisonment for two months for printing the said notice without disclosing the name of the press. As regards the accused members of the Arya Samáj, Prán Sukh, a banya of Kagarol, and Mathura Prasád, the vice-chairman of the Samáj, have been let off on account of their very old age as a matter of mercy, while the remaining seven members have been duly charged with the offence (of publishing an obscene notice), and ordered to produce witnesses in their defence.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th January, 1905.

Need for abolishing the cotton excise duty as recommended both by the National Congress and the Commercial Conference.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th January, says:—The Indian National Congress and the Conference of Chambers of Commerce thought alike at least on one important subject. Both bodies passed resolutions urging the abolition of the cotton excise duty. The Indian mill industry deserves well of Government. It has been built up under serious disadvantages, and it may be said with truth that on its success will greatly depend the growth of other indigenous industries. But unfavourable seasons, the plague epidemic, Government's currency policy,—all have hit the industry hard, and the excise duty has produced disastrous consequences both directly and indirectly. While it is not inconsistent with the principles of free trade to abolish it, we may say that Government is under a special obligation—of course we mean moral—to take it off as it is responsible for the currency policy which has so appreciably injured

Indian producers. Justice and policy alike demand compliance with the request of the Congress and the Commercial Conference, while the financial condition of Government makes it extremely easy. Will then an act of justice be done, or Lancashire be allowed to prevail?

HINDI PRADIP,
November-December, 1904.

Inauguration of the new system of education in India under the recent Universities Act.

10. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), in its joint issue for November and December, 1904, observes that whenever a Commission is appointed by the Government of India for enquiring into any matter, it generally does more harm than good to the people, and says that it is difficult to understand what object Lord Curzon had in view in appointing the Universities Commission and passing the Universities Act. His Excellency's policy was certainly a deep one, and it is not easy to fathom it. Indians are generally inclined to believe that Government does not like to give them liberal or higher education any longer, or else why should the tuition fees have been raised so high, and education made thereby prohibitive to the poorer and middle-classes to all practical purposes, and other various restrictions introduced in schools and colleges. It is said that the British rulers now desire to pursue a retrograde policy in the matter of education, in order to bring back the Indians to the same state of grovelling ignorance in which they found them at the commencement of their rule in this country, or at least to prevent them from continuing to make uninterrupted progress in education, lest the latter should go ahead of them, and beat them hollow in competition. If such be really the thoughts of Englishmen, they are certainly mean, and ill-become them. The writer is, however, not prepared to attribute any such motives to the British authorities. But unless the British Government gives equal facilities and freedom to Indians in acquiring education as it does to Englishmen in England, its present educational policy in India cannot in any sense be called liberal. In conclusion, the writer says he expects little good at any rate from the new system of education that is being inaugurated under the provisions of the recent Universities Act.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th January, 1905.

Need for permanently changing the time for holding the several examinations of the Allahabad University on account of the prevalence of plague during the cold season.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th January, says:—We are informed that the students of the various colleges in the United Provinces have applied to the Syndicate requesting that, on account of the virulence of the plague, the holding of the University degree examinations be postponed to some time in July next. We must admit that we see a good deal of force in at least one of the grounds which the students have put forward. In Allahabad, almost all the hostels and boarding houses in which the majority of the students live have been infected, and as plague is also bad throughout the Provinces, the contention of the students that they cannot do any serious work, which the nearness of the examinations demands of them, is perfectly just and sound. In view of the yearly recurrence of plague about this time of the year we consider it necessary that the University should seriously consider if it will not be acting wisely in permanently changing the time for the several examinations, say, to some time in the first week of December each year. For the present, however, something should be done for the applicants. We trust the Syndicate will consider the matter favourably, and comply with the request of the applicants.

THE ADVOCATE, 19th January, 1905.

The partition question of Bengal, and an alternative suggestion for substituting a Governor in place of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th January, says:—Partition or no partition, a change is really needed in Bengal. Heaviness or no heaviness of duty, a departure in the system of administration is really called for. That is no other but the appointment of a Governor brought out from England and assisted by experienced counsellors. The advantages of the proposal are clearly set forth by Sir Henry Cotton. The most obvious is that a nobleman, appointed by the Secretary of State and come direct from England, will be more independent than any Lieutenant-Governor is or possibly can be. The latter officer is appointed by the Viceroy and cannot be expected to oppose his master. Opposition may not cost the appointment then held, but may mar the prospects of securing a membership of the India Council in London. The Englishman supports Sir Henry Cotton's plan, and the Indian Daily News some days ago drew a moral in favour of the proposal from the abandonment of a portion of the partition scheme as it affected Madras because of the opposition of the Governor.

Plague, and its alleged connection with the consumption of foreign sugar in India.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th January, publishes the following letter from a correspondent:—Dear Sir,—I have heard from a vaid (doctor) that it is mentioned in old Vaidyak granths (medical books)—Atrai Sanhita, etc.,—that the khánd (sugar) which is prepared with the mixture of bone and blood produces mahamari (plague). And as it has been ascertained from reliable English books of Dr. Ure and Dr. Hassal of London, that foreign sugar is prepared by the mixture of two, and also vaids, doctors, hakims, etc., are of opinion that foreign sugar, in addition to the loss of money suffered by India, through its spread, has produced many diseases, such as plague, etc., in this country, I therefore request the favour of pandits, vaids, doctors, etc., who are well-wishers of India to ascertain fully and properly in which of the old Vaidyak granths the fact is mentioned, and let me know what are their prices and where they can be had.

Need for provision of separate railway carriages for the accommodation of European and Indian travellers.

15. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th January, publishes a letter from a correspondent as follows:—Sir,—For some time past the Pioneer has been publishing letters from European ladies and gentlemen, complaining of the hardships they undergo and the inconvenience to which they are put, by travelling with Indians in the same compartment. For instance, "an Englishwoman" complained that she had once to travel in the same compartment with a Hindu mother and baby who had whooping cough, and two Musalman women who were urged by her to go to the bunks, and who ate half the night through some evil-smelling curry and who in addition were talkative. Imagine, please, the great unbearable hardship borne by "an Englishwoman." As for the curry one would not, I think, be easily led to believe it was evil-smelling when the Musalman ladies were travelling second class. Possibly mummies should have been more suitable companions for the Englishwoman.

A gentleman says that as he was going to occupy a second class compartment he happened to observe therein two Indian prostitutes whose only fault was they were "grinning," and for which reason he was compelled to travel first class, on paying the extra fare of course; he also relates how a "Babu" having arranged his kit in a second class compartment had gone to see his friend, the station-master, when in his absence four sergeants came, deposited his kit on the platform, and occupied the compartment. When the train whistled and was steaming off, the Babu came to take his seat, and to his great dismay found his kit on the platform. He missed the train on account of the white lords, and God knows to what straits he was thereby put. Another gentleman accuses the Indians one and all—Pleader, Barrister, Professor, Tahsildar or Deputy Commissioner—of not only not knowing the decent usage of the bath-room, but of their downright, systematic and regular abuse (thereof), and seriously propounds the question, "Ought the European traveller to bear the burden of making his compartment livable?" and suggests the application of the rule of "might is right," in his dealings with the Indians.

May I beg now humbly to ask the fair-minded reader—English or Indian—to consider well for a moment and say who were the aggrieved party in all the above instances? Are the grievances of the Europeans harder or those of the Indians, when travelling by railway, in face of the fact that so frequently we hear of assaults on unprotected Indians by Tommy Atkins, or of attempts on the chastity of poor Indian women by Imperial guards and ticket-collectors, and incivility to Indian magistrates and civilians by military overlords not to speak of the habitual insolence Indian gentlemen meet with at the hands of over-conceited railway employés even when they are travelling reserved first class (I may only cite the case of the well-known Mr. Lal Mohan Ghose, about this time last year), or of the physical inconvenience to which the third class Indian travellers are put in more than one way, or of the disgrace of Indian women?

Everyday experience makes it abundantly clear that Indians are not forward before Englishmen, and (but are) extremely willing and ready to oblige them in any way even at the risk of personal inconvenience and loss. The only grievance of Englishmen is their objection to travelling with Indians, and a rich and fertile imagination has woven out of the same a large number of grievances, and created much ado about nothing. They are masters of the situation, and may say or do whatever they like.

For this reason I welcome their agitation; for, so far the Indians formed the aggrieved party, and however much they asked for separate accommodation in all classes on all trains for Englishmen and Indians, nobody ever gave a thought to their appeals. Now that the Englishmen have assumed the rôle of the aggrieved party and are agitating for the same reserving of separate accommodation for themselves, there are hopes of getting the thing done.

Some philanthropic or benevolently disposed ladies or gentlemen like Mrs. Annie Steel, mentioned in "An Englishwoman's" letter, may not like the idea and may be sorry for the widening of the breach thus. I for one shall be very glad to see it done, on whose-so-ever asking or agitation it may be—for, as it is, this mixing of the two races affords larger opportunities of embittering their mutual feelings, which will not be if they do not mix in railway travelling, as they do not in other walks and spheres of life and human activity—and this will make the collar bones of the Indian all the safer.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th January, 1905.

A suggestion to the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway authorities to print and distribute among the public gratis vernacular pamphlets containing all the old and new rules in force relating to travellers.

16. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th January, says that though the Traffic Superintendent of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway has been doing all in his power to promote the comforts and convenience of Indian travellers, the various rules and orders lately issued for the purpose are being generally set at nought by the subordinate employés on the railway in question. For instance, the complaint of the railway carriages being overcrowded with passengers, is still heard now and again. The railway subordinates continue to pay little attention to the comforts of Indians, because they know that the majority of them are illiterate, and therefore ignorant of the new rules. To remedy this evil the Traffic Superintendent would do well to take special steps that the concessions lately made to the travelling public are duly given effect to by the railway subordinates, and to print and distribute gratis, among the public, vernacular pamphlets containing all the old and new rules in force relating to travellers, and thereby make the knowledge of all these rules quite general among the people.

Need for increasing the number of postal deliveries at Moradabad.

17. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th January, complains that as the delivery of letters, &c., is made only once during the 24 hours at Moradabad, the public, specially the trading classes, are greatly inconvenienced. All the mail trains arrive at Moradabad at night, and there is no reason why the mails should not be delivered to the public early in the next morning. As regards the mails received by other trains, they may be distributed to the public as a second or even a third delivery. Moradabad is the largest commercial town in the Rohilkhand Division, and the Postmaster-General should see that the number of deliveries of letters, &c., in that town is duly increased, strengthening the local postal staff, if necessary.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd January, 1905.

Attitude of the British Government towards the colonies and India respectively.

1. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd January, says:—India is the most valuable asset of the British Empire. It is worth more to the Empire, both materially and morally than all the colonies put together. The severance of British connection with India will be a more serious loss to Britain than the loss of all the colonies. Again, India contributes more than her fair share of the cost of Imperial defence; while the colonies do not bear any sensible portion of the burden. All the advertisement they get at the hands of Mr. Chamberlain notwithstanding, the colonies have no Imperial sentiment worth mentioning. The treatment of Indians in Australia and South Africa will ever remain a reproach to them. In spite of such patent considerations, it is surprising what amount of deference is paid to colonial opinion, be it never so unreasonable, by the Imperial Government, and equally so how they flout Indian opinion although it may be excellently informed and fair-minded.

ADVOCATE,

Indians in the Transvaal.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd January, says:—To excite racial feeling in India is an act of sedition, but it is an act of patriotism in the British-governed Transvaal. The "whites" of the Transvaal are angering Indians by calling them niggers and demanding that they should be turned out of their quarters, and there is no law in the Transvaal to prevent this outburst. With the cry "down with Indians," a conference or national convention was called by two members of the Transvaal Legislative Council, and a meeting took place at the Opera House of Pretoria on the 5th December last, and resolutions were passed ostracising Asiatics from the Transvaal. The meeting affirmed the principle that Asiatic immigration should be prohibited except under the provisions of the Labour Importation Ordinance. No Indian traders and hawkers, and all indentures to conclude in India and not in South Africa, are what the Transvaal almost unanimously demanded in its national convention. An amendment was proposed "that an exemption should be made in favour of those whose intellectual attainments or social position and habits (of?) life appear to entitle them to it," and it was accordingly proposed "that any Asiatic who shall prove to the satisfaction of the Colonial Secretary that he holds any higher educational certificates from the Educational Department in this or any other British Colony or Dependency, or that he is able and willing to adopt a mode of living not repugnant to European ideas nor in conflict with sanitary laws, may apply to the Colonial Secretary for a letter of exemption which shall enable him to reside elsewhere than in a place specially set apart for Asiatics." But it was rejected. When it was pointed out that if there was no exemption highly distinguished Indians, members of Parliament, would have to go to live in coolie locations, the protest was met by the cries of "yes" and "certainly," and the resolution was passed. The British Indians met later on at Johanesburg and entered an emphatic protest against the utterances at Pretoria. But these protests till such time as they have not the support of the Indian Government can carry no weight, and the Indian Government is not inclined to put its heart into the matter.

CITIZEN,
23rd January, 1905.

Need for publication of the list of presents made by the Amir's son to the Viceroy.

3. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 23rd January, says:—The Calcutta Anglo-Indian papers have published the list of presents which the Viceroy has made to the Amir's son and his chief officers, but no publicity has been given to the presents which Sardar Inayat Ullah Khán made to the Viceroy. They must have been of a valued, precious and varied character, and coming from the heir to the throne of Afghanistan they have an interest which cannot be underrated. Why was the list of those presents withheld from public knowledge? By the way, are these presents to the Viceroy to be taken possession of by His Excellency, or will they be the property of the Government of India? The question is pertinent when we remember the story of the 'present' made by the Maharaja of Benares to Lord Curzon—a story which was given to the public by the wife of a high Anglo-Indian official, who was a member of His Lordship's Council.

ADVOCATE,
26th January, 1905.

Comments on Lord Curzon's refusal to receive the resolutions of the late Congress personally from Sir Henry Cotton.

4. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th January, says :—Beyond the disappointment that Lord Curzon should have lost an opportunity of bettering his relations with our own countrymen by receiving the resolutions of the Congress from the hands of Sir Henry Cotton, we were not much taken aback by his want of courtesy to the Congress, as, to tell the truth, we were not prepared for better things. Remembering what had happened once in Lord Elgin's régime we would not have advised Sir Henry Cotton to take the course which he intended to take in the matter of submission of the resolutions of the Congress to Lord Curzon, had the matter not been one in which the Congress President was free to do what he thought was best. We were prepared for such treatment, rather habituated to it; but they in England take a different view of such acts of discourtesy. From the several London letters to the Indian papers it appears that Lord Curzon's snub, instead of discrediting the movement, has roused the indignation of all the leading liberal papers throughout England against him.

* * * * * *

Surely Lord Curzon would not have injured the stability of the Government of India by receiving the resolutions of the Congress, or lending an ear to what Sir Henry Cotton had to say in their support. If he was not willing to enter into discussion, nobody could have forced one on His Excellency. But we had perhaps no right to accept this indulgence. His Excellency's heart was filled with affection when he saw his own fellow-countrymen working for days together in the deliberations of the Conference of the Chambers of Commerce. His Excellency rightly entertained them at a sumptuous dinner, he allowed high officials of the State to attend the meetings; but for the representative of educated and independent leaders of public opinion of the country, even when he happens to be an eminent ex-official of India, he had no patience. What wonder if Lord Curzon's countrymen in England feel deeply offended at such treatment of their fellow subjects! Let it be said to the credit of the Anglo-Indian Press that better class papers have not said a word in support of Lord Curzon's action.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd January,
1905.

The Rolt case, and the question of the separation of executive and judicial functions, and of the recruitment of the judicial service from among trained lawyers.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd January, says :—The Indian press has been clamouring incessantly for a separation of the executive and the judicial functions, as also for the recruitment of the judicial branch of the service from among trained lawyers. We are glad to find that our Anglo-Indian contemporary of the Times of India, supports this latter view. Commenting on the now famous Rolt case it says :—

> We do not invariably find ourselves in sympathy with Sir Henry Cotton's views, but there is one passage in his address to the Indian National Congress on Monday which has our almost unreserved endorsement. Sir Henry Cotton remarked :—' Patience and discrimination, respect for the forms of law, rigid imperviousness to rumour and to outside report—these are some of the qualifications which are the essential attributes of the judicial office. There is no stage in the career of a civilian which affords him the opportunity for their acquisition. The whole training of an Indian civilian unfits him for judicial work.' There is a growing conviction in India, shared by all classes of society, European and native alike, that these views are approximately justified, though if we were discussing the question in detail we should prefer to add certain qualifications. In the whole of his long experience, Sir Henry Cotton can scarcely have come across such an ample vindication of his contention as the Rolt case affords.

There is nothing surprising that this should be so. It is a common belief among Indians, and not without justification, that the Anglo-Indian public and press raise up a hue and cry when they find any injustice done to one of them. The Rolt case is the latest instance in point. But alas! for the hundreds of Rolts of dark complexion. That this change of front on the part of our contemporary is the immediate result of the sufferings of Mr. Rolt will be clear if it is remembered that when but two years ago in September 1902, Mr. Setalvad advocated the recruitment of the judicial service from among trained lawyers in his address to the Bombay Provincial Conference of that year, the Times of India characterised the suggestion as emanating from interested motives, for forsooth the vakils wanted all the appointments to themselves. We Indians must be thankful to the Rolt case. Not that we rejoice at his sufferings, but because this case will give us the support of the Anglo-Indians in this agitation.

ADVOCATE,
26th January, 1905.

Two typical cases of criminal justice in the Punjab, and the need for the separation of judicial and executive functions.

6. The Advocate (Allahabad), of the 26th January, says :—Our contemporary of the Punjábi publishes two typical cases of criminal justice in the Punjab which show how the combination of judicial and executive functions is making havoc in even the better class and law-abiding people of the country. Mr. Sams, Deputy Commissioner of Amritsar, on his own initiative, without recording any evidence, convicted Mr. Kanhyalal, a well-known pleader of Amritsar, under section 6 of Act II of 1890, for supposed cruelty to his horse, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 50. Mr. Sams in this case was judge, jury, complainant and witness, all rolled into one. The Sessions Judge of Amritsar upheld the conviction, which was, on the revisional side, brought before Mr. Justice Kenningston of the Punjab Chief Court. The prosecution was so weak that the Public Prosecutor did not appear to support it, and the Judge had no hesitation in setting aside the conviction and reprimanding the Deputy Commissioner for not following the procedure prescribed in sections 190 and 191, Criminal Procedure Code, and for omission to hear evidence. The next case is of greater importance and comes from Jagadhari, district Umballa, and shows what autocratic powers the police exercise not only over the innocent people, but over the magistracy as well, and how the superior police officers shield their subordinates in misdeeds. The facts are that in last June one Fakirchand filed a complaint against the Deputy Police Inspector of Jagadhari for assault and wrongful confinement. The Deputy Commissioner, who was at Kasauli, sent the complaint to an European Subordinate Magistrate, who examined the complainant, saw a wound caused by a stick on the complainant's person, and submitted the complaint to the District Magistrate, who again sent it to Lala Paluram, 1st class Magistrate, who on transfer handed the case over to his successor Lala Damodar Das. The District Superintendent of Police at this stage complained to the District Magistrate, that a criminal charge against a subordinate of his was magisterially being enquired into without any reference having been made to him as was required under certain circular of the Chief Court. This protest frightened the District Magistrate, who wrote to Lala Damodar Dass to kindly have an enquiry made under section 202 by the District Superintendent of Police before summoning the accused, unless from enquiry he thought that the case should be dismissed under section 203. Lala Damodar Dass had examined many witnesses, and was not prepared to say that a primâ facie case had not been made out, and urged that it would be awkward to have an enquiry made by the District Superintendent of Police before the one he was making had been completed. The District Magistrate was satisfied with the further suggestion that the case might be referred to the District Superintendent of Police after the completion of the preliminary enquiry. The District Superintendent of Police would not accept his suggestion of extra judicial enquiry : he referred the case to the Divisional Commissioner, Mr. Meredith, who supported him and ordered that the case should be withdrawn from the Magistrate's court, and asked the District Superintendent of Police to make an enquiry and submit the report to the District Magistrate. In the meantime Lala Damodar Dass finished his enquiry, and came to the conclusion that the case was not unfounded, and that he was not satisfied that it should be thrown out summarily. All the same, under the illegal orders of the Commissioner, the District Superintendent of Police made a sort of sham enquiry, and came to the conclusion that the complainant was a badmásh, his subordinate Deputy Inspector a virtuous man. Fakirchand did not give up the struggle, and appealed to the Sessions Judge against all these illegalities of the Commissioner and the District Superintendent of Police. The Judge quashed all the proceedings, and directed Lala Damodar Dass to proceed with the trial according to law. But before the case could proceed further, the complainant was persuaded not to press the charge, and the accused Deputy Inspector of Police got off with a fine of Rs. 10. We admire the patience shown by a common shop-keeper of Jagadhari. But patience has also limits, and the administration of justice in our country is being day after day discredited by over-taxing the patience of even the most humble and law-abiding shop-keepers. Half of such cases would cease to occur if the Magistrate and the Police have little to do with each other.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th January, 1905.

Rumoured proposal regarding the transfer of the seat of the North-Western Provinces High Court from Allahabad to Lucknow.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th January, says:—The silence of the Local Government over the question of locating the High Court at Lucknow is ominous. Our only surprise is that no protest has as yet been made in an organised way. We venture to think that no final decision has as yet been arrived at, and this is the most appropriate time for us to draw the attention of the Government to the pros and cons of this scheme. What will be the good of our petitions and meetings when the question will have been finally settled? To expect the Government then to change its decision will be simply futile, for our past experience fully teaches us that the Government in this country may possess any other defect, but cannot certainly be accused of the weakness of modifying its decision in the light of criticism offered by the children of the soil. The time has come when we should take the necessary steps to oppose this harmful proposal. We hope in this matter, at any rate, there will be no difference of opinion amongst Indians and Europeans in these Provinces. Their united protest, if made in time, may be productive of some good. When will our Province take a leaf out of the book of Bengal in matters of political agitation?

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,

A complaint regarding the throwing of dead bodies into the Jumna at the water edge at the Kakrahághát in Allahabad.

8. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 22nd January, says that the arrangements for throwing dead bodies into the Jumna at the Kakrahághát in Allahabad are very unsatisfactory, that corpses instead of being thrown into deep water, are at the water edge, where they lie and rot.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
22nd January, 1905.

Complaint regarding the conservancy arrangements, and plague measures at Allahabad.

9. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 22nd January, says that conservancy arrangements are very defective at Allahabad. The municipal members do not take any trouble to look after the sanitation of the town, with the result that the sweepers have quite an easy time of it. Very many houses in the town are locked up and vacated, the inmates having left them on account of the prevalence of the plague, and the police, instead of increasing their vigilance, have slackened their watch and ward. Last year the public were provided with huts erected at public expense in the Sohbatiya Bágh during the plague season on payment of a small monthly rent; but this concession has been withdrawn by the authorities this year.

MUFID-I-AM,
21st January, 1905.

Monkey nuisance at Agra.

10. The Mufíd-i-Ám (Agra), of the 21st January, says that in spite of its repeated complaints regarding the nuisance caused by monkeys at Agra, the Municipal Board has taken no steps to rid the people and town of them. The brutes have become unusually bold. It is high time that Government took steps to get these mischievous animals deported from the town.

ADVOCATE,

Need for changing the dates of the several examinations of the Allahabad University on account of the prevalence of the plague during winter.

11. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th January, says:—The Syndicate of the Allahabad University has accepted the prayer of the intending candidates for the several examinations by postponing the Entrance Examination to 1st May, the F.A., B.A. and M.A. Examinations till 17th July, and the LL.B. Examination till 4th July. The Syndicate has also appointed a sub-committee to recommend some permanent arrangement for fixing the dates of the examinations while the plague rages. Since the plague has come to stay, and it is always worse in winter months, it will be better to change the dates of the examinations once for all, and have them just before the long vacation begins.

OUDH AKHBAR,
31st January, 1905.

A suggestion to the European Powers either to help Russia in her present troubles, or to take the present opportunity to destroy her altogether.

1. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 31st January, referring to the great military resources of Russia who has hitherto been much dreaded even by the great European Powers, and to the crushing defeats which Russian Generals have repeatedly suffered at the hands of the short-statured Japanese in the Russo-Japanese war, says that it must surely be the hand of Providence that has caused the head of the dragon of Russia to be thus trampled upon and crushed by so tiny and numerically small a nation as the Japanese. What is worse still is that the fall of Port Arthur has been a signal for the outbreak of most serious strikes and other internal disturbances in Russia demanding Parliamentary Government and other reforms and concessions. All these combined troubles have quite unnerved the Czar, a man of weak brain and weak heart that he is. But what is very remarkable at this juncture is that the European Powers, who affect to be the milk of human kindness, look at this most painful state of things in Russia without even moving a finger to interfere. Surely this is not the time for these Powers to keep quiet. They should either,s ympathizing with a fellow-Christian Power, help it in extricating itself from its present external and internal troubles, or, availing themselves of the present opportunity, take steps to destroy it altogether, weakened as it already has been so much by the Russo-Japanese war, and, dividing its empire among themselves just as they were lately scheming to deal with Turkey and China, and be done with it—a thorn in their side—once and for all.

HINDOSTHAN,
27th January, 1905.

Criticism of the Amrit Bázár Patrika's comments on the general attitude of Government officers towards the Congress.

2. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 27th January, says:—The Amrit Bázár Patrika, in its own happy style, makes an invidious comparison when it is at pains to describe the attitude of a few retired civilians who, in their ambition to sit in Parliament, take up the cudgels on behalf of the Indian Congress and its supporters, in contradistinction to the attitude of Government officials whose sentiments lean in an opposite direction.

Properly speaking, we are a conquered race. But, despite Great Britain's conquest of India, the most narrow-minded and prejudiced Radical must admit that if it had been some autocratic Power, instead of Britain, the most dire and unrelenting persecution would have been our portion as retribution for the Mutiny, and the harrowing scenes of savagery and butchery enacted in cold blood during that dreadful period of British Rule in India.

But—and we invite the special attention of the Patrika and the Mirror to these truths—instead of an autocratic and high-handed rule, depriving Indians of their birthright, freedom and liberty, and a period of oppression and intolerable despotism, Great Britain, by her beneficent and even-handed justice and equitable rule, has raised India from her former slough of despond and oppression and has elevated the Indian people to positions of trust and responsibility, dignity and prestige, admitting the people of India to equal rights and privileges of citizenship, and, above all, guaranteeing us protection and security.

Now, let us examine that portion of the Proclamation of which the Congress-wallas make such capital. From what we have said above, it is perfectly clear that the British Government "holds itself bound to the natives of India by the same obligations of duty by which it is bound to all its other subjects and dependencies; and, by the blessing of Almighty God, it does faithfully and conscientiously fulfil its duty towards them." Furthermore, as we have alrealy pointed out, it does, so far as is practicable, "admit its subjects, irrespective of colour, race or creed, to a fair proportion of State appointments, the duties of which they are qualified, by their education, ability and integrity duly to discharge." Every Englishman, nay rather the whole world, admits that in the prosperity of a subject surely lies the strength of a King, and in their contentment undoubtedly rests the security of his rule, and in their gratitude is his greatest reward. The wording of these phrases and sentences carry a twofold meaning, and no one, impartially and wisely considering both sides of the question, can justly accuse the British Government of breach of faith or the non-fulfilment of its promises, et hoc genus omne.

But why, we ask, should the Patrika, at the expense of those martyrs, Sir Henry Cotton and Sir William Wedderburn—on whom the process reflects—for whose sake it abuses the Government and everything official, seize the opportunity to advertise itself and its partisans—the very people who should be grateful to British Rule, to which, en passant let us add, the Patrika may ascribe its good fortune at being allowed such liberty and freedom of speech. Obviously, if the state of affairs in India resembled in the faintest particular the conditions in Russia, which have now culminated in an internal upheaval in that country, and, under those circumstances, the Patrika voiced the popular frenzy of the populace—Hindu, Muhammadan, Christian, and all other creeds and castes—and in its patriarchal rôle of redressing our wrongs and grievances, if any, pursued a policy of vituperation and anathema, then, and then only, would the case be altogether on a different footing, and its angry vehemence and remonstrance would, in such a case, we say, be unassailable.

Then, just by way of emphasising the Patrika's policy, it singles out the Congress party—an insignificant organization amongst so many millions—for its special devoted ministrations, and, seconded by some retired civilians, athirst for public distinction and notoriety, proceeds to attack indiscriminately the Government policy, which is not only most ludicrous and bourgeois, but unfortunately prejudicial to the interests of India, and those ignorant and unenlightened Indians who look to the Patrika for guidance, and in their helplessness take in the poison which that journal distributes with a lavish hand to its readers.

ADVOCATE,
29th January, 1905.

Lord Kitchener's Army Scheme in India.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th January, says :—" If Lord Kitchener can revive the class of Indian soldiers of the sixties, and if he can remove the reproach that the one career which appeals to the leaders of the best and most important races of India has been closed to them, he will enormously increase the fighting efficiency of the Indian Army, and will be remembered, not as the War Lord who added to India's military burdens, but as the statesman who trusted and honoured India's chivalry." Thus writes the gentleman in charge of the Times' columns devoted to Indian affairs. Two things are here assured: increase in military expenditure and a military career to some Indians. While the first condition is sure to happen, the last is still in the domain of possibility. The Congress has more than once given expression to this grievance, while thanking Lord Curzon for the formation of the Imperial Cadet Corps. During and after the Mutiny days Indian officers in the Army used to get opportunities for independent action and initiative. In the re-organisation scheme of 1861 this state of things was not interfered with. But afterwards changes were made, and now Indian officers are mere machines for carrying out orders of British officers. They are mere ornamental figure-heads. Lord Kitchener means to remove this reproach. For this many thanks.

Three features specialise Lord Kitchener's scheme. He means to introduce devolution in the Army. He is for giving great powers to Lieutenants, and asks them to use such powers well. He says: " An officer, who habitually refers for order questions he is himself empowered to deal with, thereby shows himself incapable of assuming responsibility and therefore wanting in one of the most essential qualifications for higher commands." In no branch of the Indian administration is the evil of centralization of authority more glaring and more harmful than in the Military Department. It is a costly system in more senses than one, and the steady growth of office work and the increasing appetite for returns are sapping the virility of regimental officers. The great business of their lives is being forced aside, and their work, which should be of absorbing interest, calling into play the highest faculties of reason and imagination, is dulling and deadening all these faculties. Recent experiences have set men thinking on the requisite qualities which make a good commander of forces. If this part of the scheme can be translated into action, even the Military Department of the Government of India may become quite unnecessary. The second great factor is that the Army in peace should be organised and trained in units of command similar to those in which it will take the field.

Scattered regiments, distanced by hundreds of miles, cannot be efficiently trained, and hence the redistribution into well-organised commands.

The keynote of the scheme is to establish the normal and to avoid the special. On this the writer of the Times' articles observes: "He objects to the old system when the rumour of war meant disorganization throughout India. If mobilization becomes necessary, the divisions will be more normal and complete. The minimum obligatory garrison will remain. There will be no picking and choosing of the best regiments and the best-known officers, no vague rumours in the Indian bazaars that Government is at its last gasp, and that the cantonments are to be left empty. If ever there were a place in which this policy was wise and statesmanlike it is India. Coolness and system are the antidote to the Indian epidemic of panic and confusion." An Indian Sandhurst is now sure to come. Lord Kitchener intends to make India depend upon no external aid in order to make the Army efficient in every way.

There are, however, considerations that lean against carrying out Lord Kitchener's scheme in toto. The first that strikes the writer is the danger of emptying existing stations and concentrating the troops in some important places. Though railways and telegraphs have wrought great changes, the restless and turbulent tribes are to be found all over India. These are more convinced by the spectacle of a red-coated company than they ever will be by inferences of a strategical nature. It is even urged by those who differ from the Commander-in-Chief that for purposes of internal defence reliance cannot be placed on the Indian police, not even if it is reinforced by Eurasians as armed police.

The writer opposes the scheme on the ground that the Indian sepoy would not like it. Of the entire Indian Army over 150,000 are sepoys as against 74,000 British troops. We are told that the sepoy is a curious man, sober, patient, and brave; but he has the slowness of the peasant—the passiveness of the Indian peasant. He does not like to be hustled. He will welcome any generous attempt to offer a real career to the fighting races in the cavalry, but he has no love for education and for the college-bred boys who have been given direct commissions in the Indian Army. Some of these have turned out well, but the majority are well educated nonentities with no hold over their men, and they should not be allowed to ruin the prospects of deserving non-commissioned officers, to whom a commission is the prize of a whole career. He will welcome, too, the timely announcement that the big camps of exercise are indefinitely postponed. They are costly celebrations to the sepoy; but when he learns that the special camp-of-exercise is to give place to the normal and continuous training of the divisional centres, he may perhaps doubt whether the change is, from his point of view, a change for the better.

The scheme is opposed on the ground of expenditure also. Surely Lord Kitchener is the man to secure for the Indian tax-payer efficiency worth the money paid by him. And it is no doubt a great consolation to find that India will no longer be a dumping ground for the leavings of Great Britain. The sepoys already use the same rifle as their British comrades; and the frontier of the British Empire is no longer to be dependent on Great Britain, and the command of the sea, for her rifles, guns and ammunition. The expenditure on ordnance factories in India is entirely satisfactory; and, though the Indian grudges all expenditure for military purposes, it will be some consolation to him to know that by next year three batteries of horse and 18 of field artillery will possess a modern gun manufactured in England, and that by 1907 the Indian factories of Cossipore and Jubbulpore will have supplied the whole of the artillery of India with guns and carriages. While the scheme means desertion of some stations, it entails erection of barracks in other places. Since finality in military distribution is well nigh impossible, no money is so ill-spent as that on bricks and mortar.

The existing state of affairs requires, the writer holds, much improvement before the great scheme can be launched. No effort should be spared to make the life of the British soldier healthy, cheerful, and attractive, and every reasonable facility should be offered for sport and healthy exercise. The long period of service in India without real opportunities for returning home is a serious drawback; and it should not be impossible to utilize the Indian transport ships for cheap passages for some 1,000 soldiers every summer. They would be encouraged to save their money for a holiday at home instead of wasting it in India, and the best cure for the ennui of an Indian cantonment is a few months' residence in England. But more remains to be done for the sepoy, who thinks little, fights well and for his pay is remarkably effective. His contentment is the most important factor in the matter. While wages rise in India the sepoy gets comparatively little, lives in ill-ventilated and insanitary houses, gets 3½ months' leave every third year. He may be better housed if not paid more; he may get leave for 3 months every year; his superior Indian officer may be given more powers. The strategic line, that proves to be the commercial railway of the future, requires more extension for ensuring better efficiency. These facts should not be lost sight of while translating Lord Kitchener's scheme into practice.

ADVOCATE,
2nd February, 1905.

Alleged causes of famine in India, and remedies suggested for it.

4. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd February, referring to the economic comparison which Mr. S. W. Swinny lately made between India, Russia and Ireland, in the Indian Review, says:—Anglo-Indians were till lately divided into two schools on the causes of Indian famines, the one putting them down to failure of the rains, and the other to growth of population. The Census has killed the last theory; the first requires refutation. Indians do not hold either of these views. Famines are in their view but the outward signs of the poverty of the people. This poverty is due to three causes: the taxation is in excess of the people's capacity; want of variety of employment causes dependence on agriculture, and thus keeps the people in a precarious situation; and there is a great drain of wealth without any corresponding return. Mr. Swinny is disposed to agree with these views. By the method of comparison he has come to the conclusion that the three causes that bring about famines in India are equally operative in Ireland and Russia, and hence the prevalence of the greatest economic trouble, famine, in the three countries named. The climate of Ireland is temperate, of Russia very cold, and of India tropical. There is thus nothing in common as far as climate is concerned, though famine occurs in every one of them. In many countries of Europe famines were once common. Almost everywhere they are now a rarity, though the climate of each place has undergone very little change.

The above facts prove that in social changes we must seek for the true reason for the disappearance of famines. These changes are brought about more by the instrumentality of man than by changes in climatic conditions. Better means of communication, improved methods of cultivation and hoarding of wealth break the poison teeth of famine as the Indian proverb says. These measures cannot be ensured unless taxation is limited to the capacity of the people, many openings are found for the people, and the drain of wealth is stopped. Thus, the real causes of famines are more political than social, produced more by the economic measures of the Government than by the industrial apathy of the people. Proof for this is forthcoming from both Russia and Ireland.

* * * * * * * *

While the Russian Government is trying to build up important industrial concerns around Moscow and some other centres in order to rid Russia of its purely agricultural character, exploitation of Russia goes on unchecked and causes poverty. Industries are worked by foreigners and public debts are also held by them. Mr. Ragozin complains that the mineral wealth of Russia is in the hands of German and American Syndicates. "They go to work to make colossal fortunes, which they carry out of the country—and sneer at the Russians for a set of improvident, narrow-minded, short-sighted, sluggards, too ignorant and lazy to pick up the wealth which is simply wasted on them." And these Syndicates seem to have ways of gaining the favour of the Government. As to the interest on the debt, M. Rybakoff in an article in The Independent Review for September, 1904, gives the following figures:—The Russian National Debt stands at £750,000,000. Of this only £100,000,000 was offered in Russia and most of this was subscribed by foreign banks, so that nearly the whole debt is in foreign hands. Ireland stands in the same position. The taxes paid by the Irish are out of proportion to their capacity. While there are very few manufactures in Ireland, of these some have been killed by the predominant partner. If Ireland has not to pay for public debts, or for excess of imports so much, the peasants have to remit rents to absentee landlords.

Thus, investigation by the method of comparison brings Mr. Swinny to the conclusion that India, Ireland and Russia are similarly situated with reference to their economic condition, though they differ widely as to the climate of each. The best course is to make an effort to remove the conditions favourable to the existence of famine. To create new industries, or to restore the old, means time and money; both come slowly. The beginning should be made in another way. Mr. Swinny is for reducing taxation by reducing expenditure, staying drain of wealth by borrowing in India, and employing Indians largely in place of Europeans. But Lord Curzon's measures tend not only to perpetuate, but really to aggravate the economic evils that keep us poor and liable to famine.

SHRI GOPAL PATRIKA,
6th December, 1904.

A suggestion for Government to impose a prohibitive export duty on food-grains in India.

5. The Shri Gopál Patrika (Lucknow), for December, says that as Indians do not generally hold any modern profitable arts, industries or commerce in their hand and have now to depend mainly on the produce of the soil for their maintenance, poverty has become almost universal in the country. But what is worse still, the extensive exportation of food-grains from India, and the occurrence of famine in one part of the country or another every year, inevitably result in the constant existence of the scarcity of food-stuffs, so that a very large proportion of the people are not able even to get one proper meal during the 24 hours. This state of things is, to a considerable extent, at the bottom of robberies, dakaitis and other serious crimes that are so rife in India. But it is a great pity that Government, not recognizing the evil, does not think it expedient to impose a duty on the export of food-grains, which will keep them in the country, and thereby make scarcity a thing of the past.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th January, 1905.

Complaint regarding the unsatisfactory condition of certain lanes and drains, and the delay the Municipal Board makes in granting applications for building houses at Moradabad.

6. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th January, says that, as the roads of muhallas Afrasiyábganj, Thatera and some others at Moradabad are not flagged, mud and filthy water accumulating in them, specially after a fall of rain, emit a very bad odour, and otherwise cause inconvenience to passengers. The drains where they pass between two roads soon get out of repair, owing to the action of wheeled traffic, so that filthy water, flowing through them, collects in the ruts and holes formed in them. The Municipal Board would therefore do well to use iron rails on either side of such drains, as has been done at Bareilly. The applications which people make to the Municipal Board for permission to repair or build their houses are not disposed of for months together, and the result is that the applicants, especially those who have collected the building materials beforehand and are anxious to finish the work before the rainy season sets in, or have come home on short leave, are put to great inconvenience and loss.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
27th January, 1905.

Increase of the plague, and the alleged neglect of sanitary measures at Agra.

7. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 27th January, referring to the increase of plague at Agra, says that the virulence of the disease is popularly believed to be due to the neglect of proper conservancy and sanitary measures by the Municipal Board. It is said that sweepers, instead of taking away the filthy water of the cess-pools of houses in the carts supplied to them for the purpose, generally throw it into the street drains early in the morning, which must vitiate the atmosphere far and wide. The conservancy officials do not visit the streets every day, and even when they do so they generally do it after 9 A.M., when all the filthy water has long been washed away, the drains having been flushed with pipe water. Again, while formerly the Municipal Board freely used sulphur, phenyle and other disinfectants in every muhalla whenever cholera or any other epidemic broke out in the town, it has not been doing anything of the sort during the present visitation of the terrible plague. As regards the question of the cost of providing disinfectants for the whole town, a Municipal Board that can readily construct pretty baths and masonry smoking rooms for the use of its employés at a considerable public expense, should not certainly grudge providing for the protection of the tax-payers against the dire calamity.

Certain complaints against the Municipal Board at Allahabad.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR, 29th January, 1905.

8. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 29th January, again complains that people wash their dirty clothes in the troughs that have been constructed at Allahabad for providing water for cattle to drink, but that the Municipal Board takes no steps to prevent it. Again, the editor has been urging, for some weeks past, the great need for repairing the road leading from the Chauk to Dáráganj, but to no purpose, notwithstanding the road in question is much used by pilgrims during the Mágh mela which has already come.

New rules regarding the submission of petitions to the Government of India.

ADVOCTAE, 29th January, 1905.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th January, says:—The Government of India in the Home Department has revised and amended its rules regarding the submission of petitions to it as well as to His Majesty the King-Emperor and the Secretary of State. The rules about the petitions to the Government of India are divided into three sections. The first deals with memorials by private persons or public bodies, the second with petitions by officers in civil employ, and the last with the transmission or the withholding of petitions by the Local Government. This section is the most important. The first two contain instructions which memorialists generally follow. The petitioners are requested to send petitions through the Local Government which must conclude with a specific prayer and must be accompanied with the order of the Local Government when it is appealed against. Officers wishing to petition the Government should do so separately through the usual official channel: they should not deal with any matter connected with their official position or status or with matters in which they have some interest; civil officers are also informed that no notice will be taken of a petition relating to official prospects or position of an office unless it is submitted by the officer himself. The last two rules prevent officers from making joint representations. At times the orders of the Local Government affect the prospects and position of officers of a whole class; the grievance becomes general. Then officers have sympathy with the troubles of one another. We do not see any reason why every individual officer should be forced to submit a separate petition and the whole class prevented from making a joint representation. The rules as to the transmission or withholding of petitions by the Local Government have not been much altered. The petitions to the Government of India stand the chance of being withheld in the Secretariat. In such a case the petitioner shall be informed of the fact and given reasons for it, and a list of such applications shall be forwarded quarterly to the Government of India. Little solace can this assurance give to an applicant, because busy Secretaries of the Government of India will find little time to pick out cases which were withheld. But the provision in itself is good. The Local Government has the power to withhold a petition when it is illegible or unintelligible or is couched in disloyal, disrespectful or improper language, or when it has been already disposed of by the Secretary of State and discloses no circumstances or grounds for a re-consideration of the case, or when it asks for pecuniary assistance without possessing a claim for it, or when it is a request for employment by a person not in the service of Government, or when it requests exemption from the provisions of law or rules prescribing disqualification, or when a petition is an appeal from a judicial decision with which the Executive has no legal power of interference. Applications for mercy or pardon are exempted. Appeals against an order of the Local Government about an employé of a local authority whose salary is not more than Rs. 100 a month shall be withheld, so also appeals against a decision given according to any law or rules having the force of law, and applications for prospective claim for pension will not be submitted. A memorial will also be withheld when it deals with the non-exercise by the Local Government of a discretion vested in it by law, when it is an appeal in a case for which the law provides a different or specific remedy, when it is an appeal made after more than six months of the communication of the order, when it is a subject in which the Local Government is competent to pass orders and no previous application for redress has been made, when it is regarding a legislation which the Local Government is not prepared to support. The fetters thus forged are hard indeed. It is proper that the Government of India should not encourage people to trouble it with useless petitions. But we think that people should not be denied opportunities for mere fault of language in which the petitions are written for approaching the Government of India, and the Local Government against whose order appeal has to be made should not be given powers to keep petitions back. The Government of India does not receive a single application or petition direct from the applicant under any circumstances; every application thus addressed to it, is usually sent back for submission in the usual course. Whether the petition is examined by a Secretary in the Local Government Secretariat or in the Government of India Secretariat, it makes not much difference as far as the Government is concerned: but it does make a great deal with the applicant who deserves some indulgence in this respect. All the same, these rules must be widely published so that people may know what chance they have of having their grievances redressed, and how far it is likely that they will receive the stereotyped reply that the Governor-General in Council sees no reason to interfere with the orders of the Local Government.

SULAH KUL,
2nd February, 1905.

Need for legislating against the present oppressive system of supplying provision to the camps of officers on tour.

10. A correspondent of the Sulah Kul (Gorakhpur), of the 2nd February, bitterly complains against the present system of supplying provisions to the camps of Government officers who go out on tour during winter. The provisions are supplied through the agency of tahsildars, who depute tahsil peons for the purpose. All earthen pots required for the camps are taken from poor potters gratis, which is certainly downright cruelty to the latter. Ghi or clarified butter, fowls, eggs and other things are taken from baniyas and others in much larger quantities by the servants of touring officers than are actually required by the latter, while the tahsil peons on duty pay nothing whatever for all the things they themselves consume. Again, tahsil peons first seize a much larger number of carts than are required for an officer, and then release such of them from the owners of which they receive an illegal gratification. The hire of carts from one camping ground to another is fixed at annas 10 each, but the full hire is seldom paid. All this is surely a tale of great oppression and high-handedness on the part of Government underlings, and it is a pity that a paternal and just Government should not be able to put a stop to it. The high-handedness practised in supplying provisions to the camps of officers may, on a small scale, be well compared to the state of things prevailing during the Mutiny, and Government ought to enact a strict law to put down this system.

HINDOSTHAN,
3rd February, 1905.

A suggestion to Government for procuring supplies of food-grains for its Commissariat Department direct from the cultivators to ameliorate the latter's condition.

11. The English Hindosthán (Kálákankar), of the 3rd February, says:—

The Government mode of realizing the revenues in kind being no longer in vogue, the scope of the grazing ground is necessarily reduced compared with the period of Nawábi rule. During that régime the country did not enjoy a period of peace, dakaiti and bloodshed being rife. The country was consequently not so thickly populated, while tracts of jungle were numerous, affording ample fodder and grazing grounds for the cattle and beasts of burden. With the annexation of Oudh, however, and also as a result of the short settlement of 30 years, the landed-proprietors have been reclaiming jungles and waste lands, and now hardly any grazing ground is left. It was therefore necessary for the Government to leave grazing grounds for the cattle, free of rent, in every village, or for a group of villages, for the purpose of grazing cattle and providing the villagers and cultivators with fuel. But this point being neglected by the first lord of the soil, the Government, and likewise by the second lord of the soil, the landed-proprietors, the latter being inclined to reclaim rather than preserve jungles, the present state of the country is that almost all the meadows are tilled and trees cut down, reducing the plough-oxen and beasts of burden to skin and bone, and rendering them unequal to the heavy modern ploughs; while, in the absence of fuel, their excreta are converted into fuel, and the fields are in consequence not manured, cow-dung being the best and cheapest manure of the country.

Payment of Government revenue now being exacted in coin, the grazing ground is reclaimed, the prospect of manuring is reduced, and the money-lenders, taking advantage of the poverty of the cultivators, advance them money beforehand and receive payment in kind when the crop is ready, charging an usurious interest of from 50 to 75 per cent. per annum. Under these circumstances, the village banks alone would not be sufficient to save the cultivators from ruin. Along with the establishment of village banks, it is also necessary that some sort of agency should be established through which the tenantry may sell their crops and other produce at a profitable rate; but the method of buying cereals at the threshing grounds is obviously very injurious to the peasantry.

If, however, the Government were to procure the supplies for the Commissariat Department direct from the cultivators, instead of employing contractors, it would, to a great extent, make a radical change for the better in the position of the ryots. And, in like manner, if rájas, mahárájas and various Government departments bought their provisions direct from the tillers of the soil, as far as this was practicable, who would deny that the poverty of husbandmen would be reduced to an insignificant factor in the great problem of human existence amongst India's teeming millions.

V.—Legislation.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th January, 1905.

Need for legislation to protect minor girls found in the custody of women of ill fame.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th January, says:—The Statesman writes that no official information is yet available upon the subject of legislation for the protection of minor girls found in the custody of women of ill fame. 'At present it seems to have been allowed to drop.' Should this be so, it will be a matter for great regret. From the correspondence on the subject that has been published, it is apparent that it is of great importance, and we hope it will be taken up early for the necessary legislation.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th January, 1905

A suggestion for the substitution of the word "Indian" for "native" in railway carriages and stations on all railways in India.

13. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th January, says:—We hasten to express our sense of gratitude to the management of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway for having ordered the substitution of the word 'Indian' for 'native' in all their carriages and stations. The credit for agitating the matter belongs to the Advocate. We hope the welcome change will be made also on other railway systems of India. There is no object in wounding the feelings of the people by the use of the offensive word. The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway authorities have done another useful thing. They have recently established an Inquiry Office at the Lucknow station for assisting passengers in their railway difficulties, the official in charge answering all questions relating to the timings, fares and other matters of interest to travellers in a most competent manner. The office contains a splendid railway map of India, fully 12ft. by 9ft., and also a table with writing materials for the convenience of visitors, and time sheets of all the Indian railways, so arranged as to correspond with the maps, etc.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,

Want of letter-boxes in certain parts of the town of Moradabad.

14. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th January, says that while the local postal authorities at Moradabad have put up letter-boxes in several unimportant quarters of that town, most of the larger muhallas and the main streets are left quite unprovided so that the people residing in the latter places have to go a long distance before they can post their letters. There are, for instance, no letter-boxes in muhallas Bhatti and Thatera, and in the whole of the Bará bazár from the Amroha gate to the City Post Office. The postal authorities should certainly see that these parts of the town are duly provided with letter boxes soon.

OUDH AKHBAR,
6th February, 1905.

Japanese, and their achievements in the Russo-Japanese war.

1. THE Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 6th February, extolling the bravery, skill, genius and other virtues of the Japanese, and congratulating them most heartily on the grand successes they have so far achieved in the Russo-Japanese war, says that they have so fully exposed the hollowness of the much-talked of Russian military greatness that it seems now almost impossible for Russia to regain the ground she has lost in this war. However, Japan should not yet think of resting on her oars, she having still to drive Russia out of Mukden, Harbin and Vladivostok. But now that Port Arthur has fallen and the besieging troops are free to join their main army, Japan need not find it difficult to make Russia completely clear out of Manchuria, especially as she is confronted with very serious internal disturbances at this juncture. And when Japan has succeeded in doing this, she should take special care that the European Powers and America do not again interfere, and deprive her of her conquests, as they did once before (in connection with the Chino-Japanese war). The Japanese should then also be on their guard against the machinations and designs of Russia, dreading the latter as "a snake in the grass," for Russia will never quietly put up with the defeats she has suffered at the hands of Japan, and let the latter long enjoy her conquests in peace. The writer, however, hopes that by the time Russia finds herself again able to measure swords with Japan, the latter combined with China will become too formidable for any Power in the world.

The Blue-book on the Tibetan problem, and the cost of the Tibetan Expedition.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 5th February, says :—The Blue-book on Tibet has once more revealed the inconsistency of the attitude taken up by the Secretary of State at the discussion of the question in Parliament. While the Tibet problem is to be solved from an Imperial, and not Indian, point of view, the cost of the Expedition is to be met from the Indian Treasury! This is one more illustration of the fact that India under British rule has always to pay the piper, but never allowed to choose the tune.

A Muhammadan meeting at Gorakhpur to elect delegates for a general meeting to be held hereafter for establishing a Muhammadan political association.

3. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 1st February, states that a meeting of Muhammadan residents was held at Gorakhpur, on the 29th January last, at the house, and under the presidency, of one Maulvi Muhammad Mohsin, a pleader, to elect delegates for a general meeting to be held hereafter (at some central place) for establishing a Muhammadan Political Association to safeguard the political interests of the Muhammadan community. Speeches were made, urging the necessity of Muhammadans having a political association of their own, but disclaiming all intention to criticise the measures of Government. The meeting closed after electing ten delegates.

JAM-I-JAMSHED,
21st—28th January,
1905.

Certain complaints against the present Chief of the Rampur State.

4. The Jám-i-Jamshed (Moradabad), in its combined issue of the 21st and 28th January, says that while the former Chiefs of Rámpur collected wise and learned men in their Darbár, the present Chief has got a lot of musicians, buffoons and dancing girls about him, and, paying little attention to the administration of the State, has allowed several responsible posts to be filled up by utterly incapable and worthless men. A young prostitute, named Nanhi, having somehow or other effected her escape from Rámpur, has just arrived at her home in Aligarh, and is so frightened that she suspects every stranger who visits her to have been sent to murder her. This shows that there was something very serious which compelled her to flee from Rámpur. Similarly another young dancing-girl, by name Sundar, who was in the employ of the Chief on Rs. 500 a month, has lately come back to Moradabad, and now refuses to return to the State for any consideration whatever.

The attitude of the Government of India in the matter of free supply of its Agricultural Reports to applicants contrasted with that of the United States, America.

ADVOCATE,
5th February, 1905.

5. An "agriculturist" at Calcutta, writing to the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 5th February, says:—I wrote to the Agricultural Department of the United States, America, for some reports, and received them promptly free by return of post. In the same way I wrote several times to the Agricultural Department and Home Secretary of the Indian Government, but received a curt reply of indirect refusal. From the perusal of the American Reports I gather that the Agricultural Department of the United States distribute free more than 5 lakhs of annual Agricultural Reports of about 800 pages very beautifully bound, besides several millions of pamphlets on agricultural subjects, such as dairying, floriculture, sericulture, and sheep-farming, etc. These reports and pamphlets are so interesting and useful that one wonders at the extraordinary progress which the Americans are making in every direction. One cannot but regret extremely the Indian Government grudging the free distribution of a few hundred copies of its reports. Still the Government would accuse the educated Indians of not paying sufficient attention to agricultural improvement and commercial advancement. Government gets about 30 crores annually as land revenue from the zamindars and agriculturists, and even these are not supplied with agricultural reports when asked and applied for. There is no land revenue system in England and America, and yet these countries distribute millions of such reports among the agriculturists.

Hoping the Indian Government will, in future, adopt a more reasonable attitude, and not observe economy with a vengeance, when the question of report distribution is concerned, while hundreds of new appointments, carrying very high salaries for Europeans, are created every year.

Need for permanent settlement of land in India.

HINDOSTHAN,
6th February, 1905.

6. The English Hindosthán (Kálákankar), of the 6th February, referring to the question of permanent settlement of land in India, says:—We know our eminent statesman, Lord Curzon, is not in favour of this, and since the permanent settlement sanctioned by Lord Cornwallis, the tendency of the British Government has been to disapprove of the system of perpetuating such a settlement. But in our opinion the policy is injurious to India, because Indian cultivators have no fixity of tenure, and instead, therefore, of improving the land, they hold themselves always ready to move from place to place, prepared, at a moment's notice, to carry their hearth and home with them on their shoulders.

This practice is very pernicious indeed, and it is obviously desirable that every landed-proprietor should grant a fixity of tenure to every cultivator, and to facilitate this the Government should be disposed to grant every landed-proprietor a permanent settlement.

Then, again, tenants who are rich and worth money, will improve their homestead and the land belonging to it, by sinking wells, making bunds, digging tanks, embanking reservoirs, and arresting the streams of fountains. On the other hand, the greed of landed-proprietors for cutting down jungles and mango-groves, as well as for reclaiming meadows, will be checked, because they will have to reckon against no enhancement of revenue at the expiration of every thirty years, and they will, in consequence, be able to spare some grazing grounds and jungles for the cattle of their cultivators and ryots. Moreover, it will obviate the expense and trouble incurred by Government which have to be faced during periods of famine and when making revised settlements.

Apart from this, the gravity of famine will be reduced, because the tenantry by improving their homesteads and cultivable land, will be better able to stand the stress of famine, while the jungles and meadows which will be maintained by the landlords will enable cattle and beasts of burden of ryots the better to stand the rigours of famine. The Government will consequently be saved much expense and anxiety in times of famine, and its officials will be saved the trouble of making revised settlements which cause so much litigation amongst landlords, under-proprietors, mafidárs, guzáradárs, and even tenants.

ADVOCATE,
9th February, 1905.

Alleged hard lot of translators in the Judges' Courts in the United Provinces.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th February, publishes a letter from a correspondent as follows :—Sir—As an old and retired Judicial officer having experience of several districts I can safely say that the condition of the translator in almost every District Judge's court is very pitiable, and it seems opportune and desirable to impress the authorities with their real condition for the amelioration of their hard lot. Every subordinate in all the Government offices is overworked, and, for fear of losing his post, meekly submits to his fate ; but the translator's condition is the worst of all. In its rules for the Civil Courts the Honourable High Court has defined the duties of the Munsarims and other officials, but the case of the translators has been left untouched. Had their duties been also defined, the state of things would not have been so unsatisfactory. In all districts the work of the translators depends upon the pleasure of the judges who overburden them with work, having no regard whatever as to whether their human frames would be able to cope with a giant's task. It is quite enough if one works uninterruptedly during the office hours ; but if he has to work at home and even during the holidays it must tell severely upon his health. Some of the judges require translations of four papers in each case, some six and others of the whole file A, which if not a big one can be translated by at least four hard-working men in a day. In spite of their hard and incessant labour the translators get only a pay of Rs. 120 per mensem, and have no share either in the executive or the judicial line, whilst more fortunate officials getting a lesser pay and doing little work can be appointed as Munsifs and Deputy Collectors. It is to be hoped that if the Honourable High Court or the Government is pleased to collect statistics from all the judgeships the facts will come to light, and then the condition of the Judges' Court translators will be considerably improved.

Gambling houses at Cawnpore.

8. The Cawnpore Gazette (Cawnpore), of the 1st February, says that the gambling-houses at Cawnpore are carrying on their business as briskly as ever. Can no steps be taken to suppress these houses? ADVOCATE,
5th February, 1905.

Complaint regarding road-making in the municipal towns in the United Provinces.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 5th February, says :—The Municipal Administration is always subject to some adverse criticism ; people begin to compare the administration in the road-making department with that in the conservancy, and always find some particular municipality guilty of some acts of omission. These complaints when expressed in the form of general denunciations are seldom heeded, and are attributed to the capricious mind of the critics. To some extent one may sympathise with municipalities which are subjected to irresponsible criticism. But when the complaints about mismanagement in one department are repeated and reiterated with one voice, not by one class but by all classes of people, it is surely time that the municipality should look into them and devise means to remove them. One such complaint which is heard everywhere in Lucknow, Cawnpore, Allahabad, Benares, in fact in every first-class municipality, refers to road-making. More or less the complaint is universal. Everywhere it is said that the roads are so badly metalled that after the very first shower of rain they are spoiled ; everywhere the complaint is made that the kankar used in metalling roads is of a very inferior quality ; everywhere the kankar instead of being consolidated is spread over the road and the work of consolidation is left to the wheels of carriages and the feet of foot-passengers. The result is that hardly six months pass before there appear at places ugly holes on the main road, and after one shower of rain they become so many pools. Speaking of Lucknow, we can say that ten years ago our roads were in such excellent condition that they roused the admiration of visitors. They were so well repaired once in a year that no attention during the course of the year was required. One wonders what has happened of late that our roads should present such a discreditable appearance that every passer-by should cry shame on the municipal management.

Surely there is laxity somewhere, and it is the duty of the members of the Public Works Sub-Committee to see that this state of things ceases to exist. Year after year the budget allotment under the head "repairs of roads" is increasing, but the funds are less proportionately distributed on roads in different parts of the city; more money being spent on roads in the civil lines. Yet such of them as have a heavy traffic show a disgraceful appearance. The supervising staff is sufficient; the Public Works Sub-Committee is sufficiently strong, and the members are not wanting in public spirit. Instead of sitting once a month, they have begun to meet once a week They have a well paid Resident Engineer and a number of Sub-Overseers. Why should then the roads be in a deplorable condition? The question is one which deserves the serious attention of the municipality.

If there is any circumstance which can be used in favour of the municipality it is that the complaint is not confined to Lucknow alone. It is general throughout the United Provinces. Our Allahabad correspondent has to say some hard things about his municipality; the Cawnpore correspondent of the Daily Telegraph speaks in the same tone of the roads of Cawnpore. But instead of being satisfied with the consolation that the complaint is general, our municipal members should sit together to devise means for improving the roads. Two excuses are made by the contractors, or on their behalf by the municipalities. The one is that the quarries containing superior kind of kankar have been exhausted, so that now nothing better than kankar of an inferior quality can be obtained, which is not lasting. The second excuse put forward is that the rates paid for consolidation are so low that with increase in wages it is impossible to have the consolidation properly done at the fixed price. There is a great deal of truth in both these complaints. But the municipalities should not be satisfied with these explanations and excuses. If good kankar cannot be had in the vicinity of big cities, and if all the quarries have been exhausted, it is the duty of the municipalities to get good durable kankar from some distance. They should make it worth while of the contractors to bring good kankar from a distance. The railway administrations might be moved to charge cheap rates for importing kankar. As to the consolidation, steam-rollers should be largely used. It is a bad policy to have the consolidation done by the same contractors who supply the kankar. No municipality can prevent a dishonest contractor or his men from using earth with kankar. Even if one were to believe that the supervising staff of every municipality is thoroughly honest and is not influenced by the proverbial five per cent., the amount usually paid by the contractor, how can two or three men prevent the mixing of earth with kankar at the time of consolidation? The latter work should be in the hands of a separate agency, and there can be none better than the municipality itself with the help of steam-rollers Every effort should be made to prevent deception and use of worthless kankar, and the only way to do it is not only to carefully examine the article but the employment of contractors for consolidation work who are in no way interested in the prices given for the kankar. The roads in the big cities of these provinces generally, and those of Lucknow in particular, are in such a disgracefully bad condition that we think we are justified in drawing attention of the officers of the Municipal Boards to their deplorable condition, and to request them to give their best attention to them, and remove this source of constant annoyance and worry to the rate-payer.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
5th February, 1905.

A suggestion to appoint a European as supervisor over the Conservancy Inspectors at Allahabad.

10. The Prayág Samáchar (Allahabad), of the 5th February, complains that the present Municipal arrangements for the conservancy of the by-lanes at Allahabad are not satisfactory at all, and says that until a well-paid European is appointed as supervisor over the Conservancy Inspectors, improvement in the sanitation of the town is hardly to be expected.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th February, 1905.

Need for inserting a conscience clause in the Grant-in-aid Codes of India to prevent compulsory religious instruction being given in missionary schools and colleges.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th February, says:—On the plea of religious neutrality no kind of religious instruction is imparted in the State colleges and schools of India. This is as it should be. Religious non-interference perhaps alone makes possible the continuance of British rule in India without interruption of peace and with the willing allegiance of the people, while secular education as we have more than once remarked is one of the greatest blessings we enjoy. Those of us who have followed the acute controversies in England and France consequent on Mr. Balfour's Education Acts and M. Combes' campaign against Catholic schools and religious bodies will have no difficulty in endorsing this view. But while this is so there does exist as a matter of fact compulsory religious education in a section of Indian educational institutions, and religious education too of a kind which we believe is earnestly disliked by the parents or guardians of the students. We of course refer to the institutions maintained and manned by missionaries of the Christian faith. These colleges and schools receive valuable aid from the State, and yet are under no obligation not to compel boys of non-Christian faith to join their religious classes. There is no conscience clause in the Grant-in-aid Codes of India so far as the non-Christian students of those schools and colleges are concerned. 'A conscience clause, speaking generally, is a clause in an act or law relieving persons who object on religious grounds to do something enjoined in the act or law from any penalty to which they would otherwise be liable. In Education Codes, the conscience clause allows a pupil of a State-managed or State-aided institution to be withdrawn by his guardian from any religious instruction to which he has conscientious objections without forfeiting the other benefits of the institution.' In England grants are definitely refused on the cost of school-buildings if the trust deeds do not include a conscience clause, and it is further provided that religious instruction should be given either at the beginning or the end of school-time, so that children can be conveniently withdrawn, and that inspectors shall not examine the religious teaching of any school. 'The conscience clause in education has become, as it were, a part of the Englishman's birth-right.' In India, too, there is the clause in schools for Europeans.

* * * * * * * * *

With the single exception of the above clause, schools are aided by the Government of India solely in view of the secular instruction which they afford, the system being based, as the Despatch of 1854 directed, 'on an entire abstinence from interference with the religious instruction conveyed in the schools assisted.' How does the thing work out in practice ? This question is inquired into at some length in a very able article contributed to the Indian Review by Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, who is one of the most competent Indian educationists and public-spirited citizens of Madras. He refers to the facts that a large number of institutions throughout the country are conducted by foreign Christian missions which see in the education of Indian youth a necessary preliminary to, and an indirect means of, the extension of the Kingdom of Christ, and that in most of these institutions systematic instruction in Christianity is given. There being no conscience clause for the benefit of Indians, the mission authorities are enabled to compel the attendance of Hindus and Muhammadans at the religious classes. As Mr. Srinivasa Sastri says, it cannot be pretended that these communities are willing to have their children indoctrinated in Christianity for its own sake ; 'they only put up with this state of things as a necessary evil and undergo its risks either because the absence of other institutions leaves them no alternative, or because the mission institutions offer substantial advantages of a non-religious kind which are not available elsewhere.' The establishment of indigenous institutions whether to supplant or supplement the foreign missionary ones is doubtless a desirable consummation; but, as Mr. Srinivasa Sastri says, this 'is at all times a difficult and costly enterprise and involves some disturbance in the machinery of education, while with powerful rivals already in possession of the field and Departmental regulation inimical to the growth of new schools, indigenous effort will find itself heavily handicapped in the struggle, as the history of the Negapatam movement, not yet concluded, shows in a palpable manner.' What happened at Negapatam was this. There is a missionary institution there, and the Hindu residents of the locality wished to start a high school of their own where religious instruction was to be imparted according to Hindu tenets. No less than Rs. 60,000 was subscribed by them and everything was done to secure the efficiency of the school. But the Director of Public Instruction refused to affiliate the school on the plea that the educational needs of the locality were sufficiently served by the institution already in existence, which is no other than the missionary college to which the Hindu community were unwilling to send their children. And yet in that institution attendance in the Bible classes is compulsory for students of every religious persuasion. Where then is respect for religious scruple or conscience in such an arrangement?

Another objection to compulsory religious instruction in mission schools is that it is inconsistent with the formation of an absolutely straightforward character. 'The participation in prayer with the body, but not with the heart, which is enforced on non-Christain pupils has often been characterised as direct fostering of hypocrisy.' Dr. Duncan, formerly Principal of the Presidency College and afterwards Director of Public Instruction in Madras, was strong on the point. He wrote in 1888:

> The special temptation (in mission schools) is insincerity. Is it, I ask, reasonable to expect habits of reverence and sincerity to grow up in a school in which the pupils are compelled to begin the work of the day by an outward participation in the worship of a faith alien to the majority of them and utterly distasteful to many of them? * * * * The religious instruction which the orthodox Hindu youth receives in a mission school contradicts in numerous ways the thoughts and feelings of his family and his society. In school he is compelled, as a condition of his receiving secular instruction, to participate in, and show reverence for, a worship which in his heart he does not believe, which outside school he is accustomed to hear spoken of, it may be, with despite, and conversion to which would be regarded by his parents as the greatest calamity that could befall them and him. Is this the way to foster reverence for things sacred? Is it thus that habits of sincerity and truthfulness are acquired? Are the Hindus so little ready to sacrifice their convictions to their interests that we must catch them young and begin betimes to train them to tread this path of doubtful morality? Would not the introduction of a conscience clause into mission schools be to the advantage of religion as well as of morality? Were attendance at religious exercises optional, there would probably grow up more reverence for those exercises, while the young would be less exposed to temptation from their besetting sin of insincerity.

Could anything be more conclusive? And yet as Mr. Srinivasa Sastri well puts it, 'the missionary hopes that one day, in one case it may be out of a thousand, the outward observance may lead to the inward faith, and this hope is enough justification to him for the coercion that he employs.' He may be right from his own narrow unenlightened point of view; but ought the Hindus to submit to the coercion? Ought not their self-respect to rebel against such a disability imposed on them? If they are silent and put up with it, we who have internal knowledge of the community know it is less on account of their conscientious or enthusiastic acquiescence in it than of their general apathy to all affairs that do not concern them individually. But their silence, we gather from Mr. Srinivasa Sastri's article, has been misinterpreted. It seems that an ingenious attempt has been made to ascribe the Hindu's readiness to submit to such coercion to his tolerant and cosmopolitan nature. We agree with Mr. Sastri that the explanation gives more credit to the Hindu than is his due. It is true he is not indifferent to his religion, but his love of religion, strong as it is, 'is overborne by his hereditary bias towards education and the advantages that it brings.

* * * * * * *

It is above all on the ground of justice that the right is asked for the Indian student of profiting by the secular instruction imparted in State-aided mission schools without being compelled against his will to learn the Bible or join the Christian prayer. Would Government suffer a Hindu or Muhammadan institution receiving aid to compel Christian students to learn the Vedas or the Koran? Would it not move to protect the minority? If so, can it be right for the majority to suffer what the minority will resent? And can it be contended that the conscience of the Hindu or the Muhammadan need not be respected?

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th February, 1905.

Complaint against certain orders of the new Inspector of Schools in the Benares circle.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th February, says:—We understand that Mr. F. G. Housden, M.A., Inspector of Schools, Benares Circle, has been creating much justifiable discontent and a good deal of unnecessary inconvenience by degrading, in the schools under him, boys who were promoted to the classes above by the Head-Masters of those schools several months ago. By the rules Inspectors are authorized to do what Mr. Housden has been doing, but to keep quiet for several months and allow the boys to think their position is secure, and, while they are busy preparing for their next examination, suddenly to drop down as if from the clouds and make wholesale degradation of them, is unjust and oppressive to them and unworthy of the Inspectors. It shows they do not feel a proper sense of their responsibility. They are not there to throw obstacles in the way of education but to help it. We wonder if Mr. Housden will justify his action on the now all-embracing plea of efficiency, but to order the degradation of boys who have been reading in their respective classes since the very beginning of the current session in July last seems to the mind of the Indian Mirror 'incompatible with all considerations of reason and justice, and even smacks of gross heartlessnes sand cruelty.' On the same matter the Amrita Bazar Patrika writes :—

> As Sir J. LaTouche has boycotted "native papers" from the Government House he has no opportunities to see what appears in them. It therefore behoves some members of the local Legislative Council to bring the matter to the serious notice of the Government. It is needless to say that the extraordinary action of the European Inspector of Schools has caused consternation among the parents and guardians of students.

ADVOCATE,
5th February, 1905.

Question of the removal of the Canning College at Lucknow from the Kaisar Bagh to the Badshah Bágh.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow,) of the 5th February, says :—The Local Government having taken possession of the Badshah Bágh from the Kapurthala State, is going to hand it over to the Canning College Committee. The members of the College Committee recently met together and have resolved to build two separate boarding-houses for the Hindu and Muhammadan students, also houses for the professors. The kothi now vacant will at once be occupied by one Professor, and in course of time other buildings will rise. With the savings in the hands of the Committee and with further savings in the next few years, it is hoped one lakh will be spent on the buildings. That the boarding-houses and the residential quarters of the Professors, when completed, will bring the students and the Professors together and establish closer relations between them which will do immense good to the boys, goes without saying. The question will soon arise whether it will not be quite in the fitness of things to locate the college itself on the grounds of the Badshah Bágh or in close proximity outside the garden walls. The question has two sides : one side has been ably stated by a taluqdar in the columns of the Pioneer. Much of the objection to the proposal will fall to the ground if the taluqdars are not asked to find funds for the buildings, and the Government uses the present (college) building for one of its offices now occupying rented houses and undertakes to construct a new college building at the Badshah Bágh. There is not much in the sentiment that the college should not be removed from a building which it has occupied so long. If the College could be removed from the rented houses at Aminabad and Banks Road to the Kaisar Bágh in its own building, it can be removed to a better building in the Badshah Bágh where it will be so near the Colvin Taluqdars' Institute, the students of which after matriculating could join the college classes without any difficulty, and yet be in the surroundings within which they are to be trained. The question is of funds alone, and we do think with the writer in the Pioneer that it will not be reasonable to expect the taluqdars to find funds for the new building, specially when they have not yet been able to place sufficient funds at the disposal of the Colvin Taluqdars' Institute.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,

Objection taken to the import of marble from Italy for the construction of the Victoria Memorial at Allahabad.

14. The Prayág Samáchar (Allahabad), of the 5th February, has heard that marble valued at over a lakh of rupees has been imported from Italy for the Victoria Memorial that is under construction in the Alfred Park at Allahabad. The editor has no hesitation in saying that much better marble could be had in India itself; but if the Indian stone were used in the building, the money would remain in the country, and Europe could not be benefited.

CITIZEN,
6th February, 1905.

Comments on the exclusion of Indians from the Calcutta Chambers of Commerce Conference and the Pusa Agricultural Conference.

15. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 6th February, says :—There is little to be surprised at the exclusion of Indians from the Agricultural Conference recently held at Pusa, and also from the Conference of associated Chambers held in Calcutta. The policy of exclusiveness is the policy of Lord Curzon. The practice of belittling the worth of mere "natives" is what His Lordship seems to glory in. What hopes had we then that in Conferences like those named above

Indians should be asked to take a part? We have known to our cost that Imperialism is the keynote of Lord Curzon's viceregal policy. Imperialism cannot tolerate that Conferences whose object and sure effect are to dominate the administration of certain departments of the Government should in any way be influenced by the voice of the representatives of the subject race. That would be repulsive to such a keen imperial instinct as that with which Lord Curzon is endowed. Matters of agricultural interest were discussed at both the Conferences, but no representatives of the Indian races took part in the discussions. It cannot be said that there were none among Indians who were as well qualified as the Europeans who composed the two Conferences. There are native Chambers of Commerce, and these could well have chosen competent representatives to take part in the Associated Chambers' Conference, and we doubt not they would have contributed materially to the value and worth of the deliberations and influenced the conclusions to the benefit of the country. Then as regards the Agricultural Conference at Pusa, it was, we believe, an incomplete affair without the presence in it of such Indian agriculturists as Messrs. N. G. Mukherjea, D. N. Mukherjea, and B. C. Basu, who are all scholars of the Royal Agricultural College at Cirencester, and, having now served in the Agricultural Departments in Bengal and Assam for a long period, are perfectly conversant with the agricultural condition and needs and requirements of the country. The exclusion of these authorities from the Pusa Agricultural Conference can only be explained by the Viceroy's antipathy to the association of "natives" with any deliberative body, that is appointed to determine or shape the policy of the Government in any of its departments. Indeed, Lord Curzon's Imperialism is, like Cæsar's wife, not only chaste, but above suspicion.

V.—LEGISLATION.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th February, 1905.

The Universities Validation Bill.

16. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th February, says:—The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale has added to the obligations under which his countrymen are to him by making his manly speech on the 'Bill to validate action taken under the Indian Universities Act,' which was introduced into the Supreme Legislative Council on Friday last. As if the powers taken, by the Act, into their own hands were not enough, the Chancellors of the several Universities, who are the rulers of the provinces in the case of Bombay, Madras, Allahabad and the Punjab, and the Viceroy himself in the case of Calcutta, have usurped more power than the Act conferred upon them, and got provisional syndicates elected in a manner not contemplated even by that ambitious legislation. Now that exception has been taken to such conduct, and a suit is actually pending in the Bombay High Court, instead of honourably admitting the illegalities committed and—as the Anglo-Indian Madras Mail has suggested—revising their decisions, what Government have chosen to do is to go to their subservient Legislative Council, with its docile official majority, for passing an Act to validate the illegalities committed.

Against this undignified and unfair proceeding the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale entered a vigorous protest as would be seen from a perusal of his speech printed in this issue. The position he took up, that Legislative Councils should not be asked to whitewash executive wrong-doing, is unassailable. Should the Government pursue the absolutely unjustifiable policy of the present instance on other occasions as well, what is the situation to which we shall find ourselves reduced? Why, every legislative enactment may be set at naught with impunity, for the moment anybody takes it into his head to get the wrong righted, a Bill may be introduced and passed into an Act legalising all the illegalities perpetrated. From the Government's point of view it will be better still if with all the laws on the statute-book, another very simple Act be passed that all infringements of their laws made by their officers shall be deemed legal and valid. This is a mockery of constitutional and responsible Government, and that the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale's non-official Indian colleagues should not have supported him in his protest does not reflect credit on their sense of their duty as representatives of the people. Their action, or rather omission, shows how weak public life in India still is, and how much greater care than at present should be taken in sending members to the Supreme Council in the land? May it not also be said that this innocent procedure of the Government throws further lurid light on the motives that must have been at the bottom of the Universities legislation?

ADVOCATE,
9th February, 1905.

The Universities Validation Bill.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 9th February, says :—Whereas doubts have been raised as to the construction of the Indian Universities Act and as to the validity of certain directions, declarations and orders issued by the Chancellors, and of the constitution and appointment of some bodies corporate and Provisional Syndicates, it has been thought expedient to declare that all directions, declarations and orders issued and appointments made shall be deemed to have been duly issued and made under the Indian Universities Act. For this purpose, a Bill was on Friday last introduced into the Supreme Legislative Council by the Hon'ble Mr. Richards, the Legal Member. There has been an undue haste in proceeding to legislate. The idea seems to be to forestall decisions that may be given in law courts. In spite of all protests from the Hon'ble Mr. Richards, the Bill itself is a practical admission that the notifications issued by certain Chancellors are illegal and ultra vires. Not only this. The Government has before its mental vision the anxiety and trouble of a prolonged litigation with the sure prospect of never coming out with flying colours. So it is in a hurry to legalise illegal actions and to use the Legislature to validate what under the existing law is invalid. The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale opposed the measure tooth and nail.

The plain course ought to have been, as he said, to withdraw the notifications issued and replace them by new ones more in accordance with law. But that would not be done. Government means to give to the erring Chancellors every help to persist in spite of protests and warnings. In sticking fast to this course the Government consciously or unconsciously forgot to preserve even the dignity of the Legislature. As Professor Gokhale very ably pointed out, there is a well-understood and well-defined distinction between the Legislature and the Executive Government; and the Legislature is regarded as higher than the Executive. The constitution of the Government of India is such that the Executive Government can get any law passed by it. In other words, the Legislative Council is ready to move at the beck and call of the Executive Government. This is hardly a dignified position for both the Legislature and the Government. And to many people the raison d'être of this present course would appear to be to support the Chancellors only because they happen to be officials, and very high officials in India. The evils of officialisation of the Universities have thus begun to come into prominent notice. One really does not know where the course adopted may land us.

Legislation may be and is necessary as the Universities Act stands at present. It is necessary not to validate actions illegal and ultra vires, but to amend the Act so as to make certain sections more clear by additions and alterations. The Hon'ble Mr. Richards seems to be of opinion that as clause (p) for the appointment of the Provisional Syndicate does not specify the number of members of the Syndicate and does not say whether they are to represent Faculties or not, the Chancellors were not wrong in issuing directions affecting the number of members, representation of Faculties, and appointment of ex-officio syndics. The official members of the Council do not appear to differ from Mr. Richards. If that be so, why should not the existing Act be amended instead of an executive action taken being declared duly taken by means of a validation Act.

The action of the Supreme Government in this matter is not without precedent. A parallel case occurred during the time of the weak-kneed Lord Elgin who could hardly rise above the spell exercised over him by his then masterly Finance Minister, Sir James Westland. The building to locate the office of the Military Secretary to the Viceroy went beyond the rules and regulations about buildings within the jurisdiction of the Calcutta Municipality. The construction was begun without securing permission and the height exceeded the limit prescribed by the bye-laws. The executive of the municipality acted as required by the law. A great hue and cry was raised. The Corporation had at a meeting held subsequently waived the right of applying the rules to this structure. But the Government of India thought that by acting according to law and rule framed according to law, the Calcutta Municipality had lowered the prestige of the Government. The result was that a Bill was introduced into the Council to put all buildings belonging to Government outside municipal jurisdiction, and Lord Elgin by suspending the rules of business got it introduced, considered and passed at one sitting of the Council. Lord Curzon has shown this much favour that the rules of business were not kept in abeyance last Friday to finish the job—a very ugly job, we should say—in one day.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st February, 1905.

Misbehaviour of certain railway volunteers at the Rampur railway station.

18. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st February, says that on the arrival of No. 8 down train at the Rampur station on the night of the 24th January last, several young Europeans in military uniform alighted from the train, and, gathering round a tea vendor, who was going along the platform, took to freely eating and drinking everything he had, and then most heartlessly dashing the poor fellow's China cups, &c., on the platform, speedily re-entered their carriage, and the train steamed off. On making enquiry, the editor, who was an eye-witness of the scene, learnt that the offending Europeans were none other than the Railway Volunteers who were proceeding from Moradabad to Lucknow for training. Surely such conduct on the part of the Railway employés themselves was very reprehensible indeed, and casts a serious reflection on the morale of the whole Railway establishment. The railway authorities concerned would do well to make a sifting enquiry into the matter, and bring the culprits promptly to book.

NASIM-I-AGRA,

Certain complaints regarding the Rajputana-Malwa Railway.

19. A correspondent of the Nasím-i-Agra, of the 7th February, complaining that little attention is paid to the comfort of Indian travellers on the Rajputana-Malwa Railway, says that passengers, instead of being booked some time before the arrival of a train at a station, are booked just when the train is only a few yards from the station, which causes much confusion. Water is not provided to passengers at any station at night. The intermediate class fare is excessive, and intermediate class carriages are not to be found in every train. There is no waiting room or shed provided for third-class passengers at the Ulwar station. The railway authorities should certainly take s teps to remove these grievances.

Suggestion for granting in the Postal Department holidays for important Hindu and Muhammadan festivals also as they are granted for Christian ones.

20. Al Azíz (Agra), of the 7th February, complains that while the principal religious days and festivals of Hindus and Muhammadans are observed as holidays in all other departments of Government, no such holidays are granted in the Postal Department, though its employés, especially the low-paid clerks and postmen are very hard-worked public servants. What is specially remarkable is that provision is, however, made for observing Christian festivals as holidays. The Postal authorities ought surely to remove this distinction, and treat all classes of its employés equally in the matter of holidays.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd February,
1905.

The Indian People on Sir Hugh Barnes' appointment to the India Council.

1. THE Indian People (Allahabad) of the 2nd February, says :—So long as a seat on the India Council is not filled up by the appointment of a competent Indian gentleman, and so long as pro-Indian retired Anglo-Indians like Sir Henry Cotton and Sir William Wedderburn are not admitted into that forbidden region, it is perfectly immaterial to us who is appointed and who is superseded. Sir Hugh Barnes, who has just been appointed as a member, will probably be neither better nor worse than any other, and we need not hope for great things from him.

ADVOCATE,
12th February,
1905.

Proposed political deputation of some educated Indians to England on the eve of the coming General Election.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th February, says :—Sir William Wedderburn's presence at the last session of the National Congress held at Bombay, besides doing a great deal of good in many respects, has borne one very happy and fruitful result. His very wise and timely suggestion that a deputation of Indian politicians should go to England on the eve of the coming general election this year, and at that time of political stir and activity should advocate before the bar of the English nation the cause of India's political reforms, has been adopted by the leaders of the Congress movement, and a deputation consisting of such able and representative Indians as Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji and Mr. Gokhale is in process of forming. It is needless to say that, besides the ability, energy, political knowledge and political sagacity of its members, the success of the deputation will depend in no small measure upon the extent to which it will be representative of the aims and aspirations of every considerable body or class of the Indian people. Bombay and Bengal have already taken the lead; Madras is by no means idle : and it is most necessary and urgent that the Punjab and the United Provinces should lose no time in selecting their own representatives for the deputation. The English people have been made more or less acquainted with the political views and sentiments of the Bengalis, the Parsis, and the Madrasis; but they know as yet little about the people of Upper India and their political needs and requirements. It is therefore of the utmost importance that the voice of Upper India should be heard on English platforms, and Englishmen should be convinced that it is not only, as the Anglo-Indian press and the London Times are always telling them, the Bengali or the Parsi who through 'over-education' in English have become discontented with the existing military system of British Government in India, but that even the backward people of this province and the martial races of the Punjab, who are comparatively very much 'under-educated,' alike feel the harshness and injustice of their political lot and are alike determined to seek its redress at the hands of the British nation. We must disabuse the mind of the British nation of the fiction which has been foisted upon it that our political agitation is the work of a handful of educated classes drawn chiefly from Bombay and Bengal, and that the political ideals which they have set up and are trying to realise are not the political ideals of the people of Upper India. We of course know the worth of this fiction, we can understand the motives of those who have invented it, and always in season and out of season try to foster it. But the British people do not know this; they accept as fact whatever they find in respectable Anglo-Indian prints or hear from the lips of retired Anglo-Indians. They are not to blame for this, for it is only one side of the case which is ably, forcibly and persistently presented to them; and they do not know the other side. It is therefore of prime importance to impress upon the mind of the English public that our movement is a national movement, that our grievances are national grievances, that in the sphere of politics, Hindus, Mahomedans, Parsis and Christians stand on a common platform, have common aims and aspirations, hold common ideals, and equally suffer from the unsympathetic character of the existing Government.

The idea of sending a deputation to England is not a new one, but has its warrant in past experience and is a natural and inevitable product of the political situation which has been created for us by the nature and constitution of the British Government. Mill remarked long ago in a book which may still be read with advantage by every Indian and English politician : "The government of a people by itself has a meaning and a reality ; but such a thing as government of one people by another does not and cannot exist. One people may keep another as a manor or preserve for its own use, a place to make money in, a human cattle farm to be worked for the profit of its own inhabitants." How true have these sage observations proved when we consider where we stand in the public service, where in the army ; what facilities and encouragement we have received from Government in our industrial and commercial progress ; what is the burden of taxation which we have to bear, how much of this taxation is applied to our purposes, how much is absorbed by the Home Charges, how much is sacrificed to the military Moloch ; when we consider our growing poverty and Lord Curzon's love of creating new departments to provide berths for his countrymen ; and last but not least, when we think of the studied and unconcealed contempt with which are treated our most moderate but earnest representations for some partial redress of the heavy load of injustices under which the whole country is groaning. What are we to do under the circumstances ? Are we to seal our lips and sit still and let our country go to rack and ruin ? Or should we like men gird up our loins, and without fear and faltering, endeavour to lighten if not altogether remove the heavy burden of our political miseries and misfortunes ? The enlightened conscience and intellect of the country answered this question twenty years ago—and the National Congress was the result. This institution has, considering its resources, achieved much—considering the load of our political evils, very little ; and the experience of 20 years has burnt into the mind of every thoughtful Indian the sad and sorrowful lesson that by making our appeals to the Government of India we cannot and ought not to expect much ; but it has also taught us a hopeful lesson that for substantial justice we must look to the great English nation. The day it awakens to the wrongs of India will see the end of them.

Who does not remember the dark days of Lord Lytton's administration ? We had the Afghanistan muddle, the Press Gagging Act, a great famine, and a great pageant at Delhi. At that time our leading men started an agitation in England in which Mr. Lal Mohan Ghosh played the most conspicuous part. Distinguished statesmen like Fawcett, Bright and Gladstone were persuaded by our representations to examine closely and sympathetically our grievances against Lord Lytton's Government, the British electors were appealed to at large public meetings and the more liberal section of them met our appeals with a generous response, and the result was that the great Liberal administration of 1880 reversed the reactionary policy, both Home and foreign. It is to be noted that not a finger was moved by our Anglo-Indian bureaucracy to check that hateful and unfortunate policy, and that the redress came to us not from the Anglo-Indians who eat our salt but from the generous and just exertions of the English people. Lord Curzon is a more inflated Lord Lytton, and he has inflicted upon us far greater evils than any other bad Viceroy that has ever ruled this country. In his régime too we have to reckon with frontier adventures and the Tibet Mission, recurring famines and enhanced assessments, the Official Secrets Act, the curtailment of the Indian agency in the public service and the Coronation Durbar. Fortunately if our misfortunes are severer and our difficulties greater, our resources too are larger and our public opinion is more enlightened and more organized to-day than it was a quarter of a century ago. We have our British Committee in London, we have a Parliamentary party on our side, and we are in a position to send a large number of enlightened and experienced Indian politicians to England to lay before the English public what we think and feel about the principle and policy that characterise the existing Government in this country, to awaken them to their sense of duty and responsibility towards their great dependency, and by exposing before them the misdeeds of Lord Curzon's Government, to move them to just and sympathetic action on our behalf.

The Government of India is a close bureaucracy of an alien race and as such it is naturally selfish and unsympathetic towards the subject people. It is subordinate to the Secretary of State whose advisers, if he cares to seek anybody's advice, are fifteen retired Anglo-Indians whose views upon Indian matters are mere fossils embedded in political strata over which time has spread fresh layers of change and activity. These India Councillors naturally take the official view and the Secretary of State in so far as he allows himself to be guided by them may as well leave the Government of India to do as it likes. In Parliament his fate is bound up with that of the ministry to which he belongs, and the policy of his ministry is moulded, determined and controlled by its supporters in the House of Commons and in the country. So long as the Secretary of State acts in accord with that policy, it matters not whether he manages Indian affairs well or ill.

The House of Commons is indifferent to Indian matters, both because it lacks knowledge of them, and because in the interest of its own existence it must attend to the wants and requirements of its own constituents, and it is therefore unable to watch and control the acts of the Secretary of State in regard to Indian matters. And thus although Sir Henry Fowler may boast that every member of Parliament is a member for India, yet considering the existing constitution of our Government and the political atmosphere of the India Office in which the Secretary of State lives and moves and has his being, to talk of any close scrutiny of the acts of the Indian Government by the Home Government or of any effective supervision of them by the British Parliament is a mockery, a delusion and a snare.

We are thus thrown in the last resort upon the British people who elect the House of Commons. But they are indifferent because they are ignorant, and because their minds have been lulled to sleep under the mesmeric influence of rose-colour accounts of Indian matters given by the official clique and by its supporters in the leading organs of the English press. But past experience has built for us a strong faith that if, by accurate facts and figures stated in earnest, persuasive and moderate language, we convince the British people of the magnitude and reality of the wrongs from which we suffer and make them realize, to use Lord Curzon's words, the vast responsibility which Providence has placed upon the shoulders of the Anglo-Saxon race, they will, as a just and freedom-loving people, most certainly see that our wrongs are righted and that the fair fame and name of England are not trodden and trampled under feet by their servants in this country. It will therefore be the chief function of the Indian delegates to create in the minds of the British people an active and sympathetic interest in Indian matters, and to persuade them to elect such members to the House of Commons as by their antecedents or otherwise are known to be generous, sympathetic and friendly towards India. There are signs and forebodings of a great Liberal triumph, and in the ascendency of liberal sentiments among the members of both the parties in Great Britain lies India's hope and opportunity. Let us take time by the forelock, and do what lies in our power to make the deputation a success.

Urgent need for inserting a consicence clause in the Grant-in-Aid Codes of India for preventing compulsory religious education being given in State aided schools and colleges.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th February, 1905.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th February, says :—Is or is not the Government of India pledged to respect the religious scruples of His Majesty's non-Christian subjects? What is the meaning of religious neutrality? Does the observance of religious neutrality on the part of the Government imply that, while an injustice is perpetrated on certain classes of people by those of a different religious persuasion, who are, moreover, enabled to do so partly at least on account of the pecuniary aid contributed by the Government itself out of taxes paid by those very classes whose religious susceptibilities are so offended, it should simply be a looker-on of that gravest form of injustice and not move its little finger to remove the cause of offence? In any case does its vow of religious neutrality preclude the Government from insisting that religious instruction shall not be forced on pupils whose guardians object to it?

The Education Commission of 1882 was of opinion that the Indian parent ought to have the option of withdrawing his boy from religious instruction. It proposed a conscience clause in the following qualified form :—'When the only institution of any particular grade existing in any town or village is an institution in which religious instruction forms a part of the ordinary course, it shall be open to parents to withdraw their children from attendance at such instruction without forfeiting any of the benefits of the institution.' The Government of India approved of the proposal, but the Secretary of State rejected it—probably acting under missionary influences. But between 1882 and 1905 public opinion has considerably developed in India, and it now sees in the compulsory religious teaching of mission schools 'a degradation of their faith and a slur on their conscience.' Mr. Madhava Rao has introduced the conscience clause in Travancore. 'The desire that native managers are showing to impart instruction in Hinduism to Hindu pupils may also give rise to different schools of thought which will require to be protected from each other by the conscience clause.' And Mr. Srinivasa Sastri has reason to believe that the Department of Education will be as a whole favourable to the introduction of the conscience clause. But unless the public opinion will express itself strongly and uncompromisingly that it will no longer tolerate the present invidious distinction between Christians and non-Christians, unless it will by strenuous agitation morally compel right action on the part of the State, the injustice will remain unredressed. It is for non-Christian Indians to decide whether they will remain as men of no national self-respect, or will get their wrong righted. Meanwhile Mr. Srinivasa Sastri has done conspicuous public service by thus ably discussing this important subject.

5. The Hindi Hindostán (Kálákánkar), of the 16th February, referring to the serious damage that the recent frost has caused to the rabi crops throughout the United Provinces, and to the distressed condition of the cultivators in general, expresses a hope that the just and paternal Government will take into consideration the heavy loss which cultivators, and landholders have suffered, and deal with them generously in the matter of payment of land dues.

Delay in the proposed appointment of a committee to enquire into the etiology of the plague.

ADVOCATE, 12th February, 1905.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th February, says :—Some time ago the Government of India, moved by Sir Charles Rivaz, agreed to appoint a committee to enquire into the etiology of the plague. The disease is now almost at its height in working havoc among our people, but the expected committee is yet to be appointed. It is said that two scientists will be sent out by the Secretary of State and that two officers of the Indian Medical Service will be associated with them. We do not understand why even in such a matter as investigation about a disease that has grown into a serious evil affecting society and Government, trade and manufactures, there should be any exclusiveness. Two or more independent medical practitioners, if not of every system of treatment, at least of the Allopathic school, should be asked to help in the investigation. The inquiry is one concerning life and death to India and no idea about official control, European reputation or Indian fatalism should be allowed to affect a thorough search after the cause, symptoms and treatment of the plague.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th February,
1905.

The Indian People on the Universities Validation Bill.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th February, says :—The introduction into the Supreme Legislative Council of Mr. Erle Richards' Bill to legalise the illegalities committed by the Chancellors in the formation of provisional syndicates and faculties is a striking commentary on the happy-go-lucky manner in which things are managed in this country. The matter at issue is now before the highest tribunal of justice in this country, and one should have thought that for the sake of appearances, if from no higher motives, Government would have deferred taking action in this connection until the Bombay High Court had pronounced its decision on the subject. Government, however, had only too good reasons to know that the decision would go against them, and result in their total discomfiture. They knew that the opponents of the Universities Act whom they had so cavalierly treated had after all proved to be in the right and vindicated the wisdom of their opposition. And they did not at all relish the prospect of having to sing small and being made to look foolish before the whole world. That was not to be thought of, whatever happened. And to avoid such a contingency they have not hesitated to forestall the High Court and take the wind out of its sails. They have the Legislature at their beck and call, and so a Bill has been introduced into the Supreme Legislative Council to legalise the illegalities that have occurred, and save the face of the Chancellors who are the authors of these illegalities, and of whom Lord Curzon is one. His Excellency gave the cue on which the other Chancellors acted, and their illegalities complained of lie principally at his door. And he was also the originator of the Universities Act, the requirements of which have not been strictly observed in connection with the appointment of the provisional syndicates and faculties. Thus it was Lord Curzon who originally made the law that has been broken. It is he again, the maker of the law, who is also the breaker of the law. And having broken the law, he has resorted to fresh legislation in order to legalise the breaches of law which have been committed. If a vulgarism be permitted for the nonce, this is one of the rummest goes one has ever come across. The story is not edifying in the telling. The spectacle is one to make men stare and the angels weep. It brings home to us the fact that in this country the representative of the king, like the king himself under the British constitution, can do no wrong. He is a law unto himself, and at his sovereign pleasure the engine of legislation is set in motion, and laws are made and unmade. He need not care three straws for public opinion. The public in India do not count. Theirs is a voice in the wilderness. And the reminder which the Indian Daily News ventures to offer the Government in this connection—namely, that in a matter like education the co-operation of the educated classes is essential—is bound to go unheeded. Much they care for the co-operation of the educated classes! If they had thought it at all worth their while to act in co-operation with the educated classes, matters would not have come to so sorry a pass.

In his speech asking for leave to introduce the new Bill, the Hon'ble Mr. Richards admitted in effect that clause (p) of Section 12 of the Universities Act, which enacts that each provisional syndicate is to be appointed by the senate 'in such manner as the Chancellor directs,' but does not specify the number of members of the syndicate nor does it say anything as to whether or not they are to be representatives of the faculties as they have been in the past, is not a model of clear drafting. And yet Government had the benefit of expert advice both legal and educational on the subject before they took the matter in hand. Far too much has been made of the same precious advice, and it has been cast in our teeth again and again, whenever we have ventured to question the wisdom of the authors of the Universities Act. Well, it is something to know that for once the experts on whom the Government pinned their faith have played them false and landed them in a quandary. They would do well after this to beware of experts, for in them there is no salvation. Experts are only too prone to trim their sails to every passing wind. They knew that Lord Curzon had set his heart on the Bill, and it did not take them long to perceive the importance of the measure and vote solid for it. If Voltaire's Candide had been living in India at the present moment, he would have found no difficulty in setting up for an expert. For was not his rule of life—je repondrai comme vous voudrez? And he could not have hit upon a happier plan to warm himself into the good graces of Lord Curzon of Keddleston. In spite of the experts the legality of the action of the Chancellors has been questioned, and the Legislature has had to be called into requisition to save the Government a bad smack in the face, and enable them to escape the lawful consequences of their own imprudence and precipitancy. Mr. Richards said that it was not for the Council to decide the legality or illegality of the action of the Chancellors. That was a question to be determined in courts of law. This is good! The Council lends the weight of law to the illegalities committed by the Chancellors, and thereby cuts the ground from underneath the feet of those who took the matter to the law courts. And having legalised the illegalities it is magnanimous enough to leave it to the courts to decide whether or not they are illegal! This is only mocking the courts. If the Government had at all cared for the dignity of the law courts in the interests of decency, they would not have tried to steal a march on the Bombay High Court, and legislated in regard to a matter which is still sub judice in that court. Mr. Richards pointed out that the question of legality or illegality that has arisen in connection with the election of the provisional syndicates might also arise in regard to the election of fellows to represent the faculties under clauses (e) and (f). There, too, the language is open to misconstruction, and if the argument against the wider construction of the Chancellors' powers be good in the case of the provisional syndicates, it must be good in their case also. It would then follow that the bodies corporate of the universities have never been properly constituted, and the whole work would have to be done over again, and the labour and time already bestowed on them would have been altogether thrown away. It is to save the Government this bother that the Bill was introduced. Well, if some of the sections of the Act admit of so much misinterpretation, who knows that even after the Bill legalizing the irregularities committed under these sections has been passed, we should not be confronted by similar difficulties again, as we grow more and more familiar with the Act, and should not have to legislate again to meet these difficulties? Where will it then stop? All legislation on the score will continue to lack the element of finality for ever and a day. And we shall never know where we are. The prospect is not a pleasant one, but when instead of remedying and removing illegalities you resort to legislation for their perpetuation, and back them up with all the resources of the legislature, you make confusion worse confounded, and place yourself within the bewildering mazes of a labyrinth. The Universities Act is bound to occasion impasses of this kind as we get to know it better. Indeed it cannot be said of it that it improves on acquaintance: the more we know it the less we like it.

Mr. Gokhale did well to protest against the introduction of the measure. Government had not troubled itself to give the honourable gentlemen timely notice of the Bill. It was not even laid on the table when its introduction was moved for. These were hard lines on the members of the Council, and they were not prepared to discuss the measure. Mr. Gokhale entered a protest against this procedure. It does not seem as if the Government had done quite the straight thing by the non-official members in this connection. They took them practically unawares. Mr. Richards said that they should have enough time to consider the Bill during its subsequent stages. But what will that avail? The introduction of a Bill in an Indian Legislative Council is generally synonymous with the passage of the measure. The one follows the other as surely as night follows day. Why, in this case, Sir Andrew Fraser considered the introduction of the measure sufficient to justify him in writing a letter to Mr. Pedler, advising him to proceed with the business of the University just as if the measure had been passed. Hence, whatever protest has to be made against a measure of this kind had best be made before its introduction. To proceed, however, with the thread of our observations, though Mr. Gokhale spoke on the spur of the moment he made a capital speech all the same, fully demolishing the arguments with which Mr. Richards sought to buttress his position. Mr. Gokhale expressed surprise at the fact that with the resources at the disposal of the various Governments in the matter of expert legal advice, illegal notifications of the kind complained of, which necessitated special legislation to validate them, could be issued. The public have a right even in this country to more careful work. Mr. Gokhale pointed out that the notifications having been issued, the only course left open to the Supreme Government was to call upon the various Chancellors to withdraw these objectionable notifications and substitute others more in accordance with the law, instead of coming to the legislature with proposals to remedy not any defect in the law, but a serious illegality committed in taking action under the law. In other countries the legislature was considered higher than the executive—in India it was at the beck and call of the executive and had to legalise executive illegalities. If there had been flaws in the law, Government would have been welcome to come to the legislature to get them amended. But errors in executive action should be set right as far as possible by executive action alone. Mr. Gokhale pointed out that the university authorities in Bombay had been duly warned of the illegality of the Chancellor's notification on the strength of the opinion of eminent counsel, and asked to postpone the election until the matter had been finally decided one way or the other. But they took no heed of the warning and held the election all the same. And now it was proposed to condone the illegalities committed by them with their eyes open by means of fresh legislation. The unfairness of the whole thing becomes all the more manifest when we remember that those who were convinced of the illegality of the notification took no part in the election held under it, beyond entering their protest. And yet they had the right to vote and even stand as candidates. They held aloof from the whole thing as they would not be a party to what they knew to be an illegal procedure. And if the illegally elected syndicate is to be allowed to remain in office after the passage of the Bill to validate the Chancellor's notification, it would mean the punishment of honest men and even their practical disenfranchisement. Mr. Gokhale pressed his points home with considerable energy and ability, and the fact that he spoke without preparation of any sort whatsoever, tends all the more to his credit. But Government have already made up their minds on the subject, and wild horses cannot turn them from their purpose.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th February,
1905.

The Indian People on the passing of the Universities Validation Bill,

8. The Indian People (Lucknow), of the 16th February, says :—The Viceregal apology for the curious piece of legislation that was added to the statute-book at the last Friday's meeting of the Legislative Council, could not have carried conviction to any fair-minded person. It was no doubt a clever piece of argumentation, but this is all that could be said for that ill-tempered performance. It did not meet Mr. Gokhale's unanswerable points and only exposed what a singularly weak case His Excellency had to bolster up. It was not a petty matter which the Council was engaged in discussing as the Viceroy, and that legal luminary, Mr. Richards, affected to believe. The provisional syndicates whose constitution was declared to be invalid and illegal by eminent counsel will do the by no means unimportant work of considering, or framing, as the case may be, the new bye-laws and regulations whose importance and far-reaching character cannot be exaggerated. But the argument is altogether beside the point. The question involved was a constitutional one of considerable importance. What business had the Chancellors to go beyond the law ? Was it right of them to have ignored the restrictions the Act imposed on them and usurped the powers lawfully vested in the senates ? Was it proper on the part of the Chancellor of the Bombay University to have quietly ignored the letter of Sir Pherozeshah Mehta and other Fellows pointing out the illegality of the procedure adopted by him ? The faculties were constituted either by the Chancellor himself as in Calcutta and Bombay, or by the Vice-Chancellor under directions of the Chancellor as in Allahabad. But the faculties had the important right of electing a number of Fellows. Is it not conceivable that the Fellows so elected might have been other than those actually returned, if the faculties were differently constituted by the Senates ? Is it a petty and unimportant matter that a number of Fellows were disenfranchised as in Bombay ? Is it a matter of no consequence to University education that the Syndicate finds itself deprived of the invaluable services of Sir Pherozeshah Mehta ? Is it a negligible matter that the Universities Act should from the very outset be administered in a narrow-minded, intolerant, suspicious spirit ? Where is the fair-minded man who will answer any of these questions in the negative ? Lord Curzon made or seemed to make much of the fact that the transitory provisions of the Universities Act were not of the Government's making, but emanations from the legal brain of Dr. Asutosh Mukerji. If Lord Curzon did not understand or like these provisions himself, why, pray, did he agree to them? Who he thought could be taken in by his ingenious attempt to fasten all the responsibility for them on Dr. Mukerjee, when he had a majority always at his beck and call to sanction or reject any provision of the legislation just as he bade them do? In any case they are there in the Act, and the executive had no right to transgress them. While not admitting that his own action as Chancellor of the Calcutta University was in any wise illegal, Lord Curzon seemed to doubt whether in Bombay it was equally beyond dispute. Well then, the point was pending before the Bombay High Court. Was it not the duty of a constitutional Government to wait for the decision of that tribunal before proceeding to declare what was doubtful as legal by a validating bill? Was it not an offence against the constitution, substantially, if not technically, to deal with a matter which was sub judice? It is farcical to pretend, as His Excellency the Viceroy, His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and the Hon'ble Mr. Richards did, that the cause of education will be gravely endangered by allowing the law to take its course, when the Government could have at once saved the Universities from this fate, as well as it would have shown its respect for the constitution, by simply withdrawing the illegal notifications and issuing them again in conformity with the law. Why action under the new notifications would have taken weeks or months we cannot understand.

The discussion between Mr. Gokhale and Lord Curzon was an intellectual combat which was extremely enjoyable. But the honours of the debate rested entirely with the member for Bombay. And this not only for the substance of what he said, but for the unimpeachable form in which he said it. Mr. Gokhale's speeches were not disfigured by words of disrespect of those from whom he differed such as Lord Curzon thought it consistent with his position to employ. But perhaps His Excellency felt that it was open to him as Viceroy and as the superior man to 'rebuke' (we quote his own word) his inconvenient critic. As Indians, and as admirers of Mr. Gokhale, we feel not a little proud to think that it was reserved to him to set a wholesome example in Parliamentary methods of debate to the hero of a hundred Parliamentary fights. Our grievance against Lord Curzon is that instead of plainly answering the plain questions of the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale, he rather chose to attribute motives to a section of educated Indians—a vice which he touchingly exhorted the graduates of the Calcutta University to scrupulously avoid in his Convocation Address the next day. We desire to tell Lord Curzon that while the objects of his derision and contempt are not much hurt by this if it pleased him, it is none the less unworthy and undignified of the ruler of the country, the representative of the sovereign, to care more for a temporary advantage in debate and less for the feelings of the people, or for accuracy of facts. When His Excellency generously insinuated that the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale was 'a professed enemy' of Government, that he spoke not for the Council he was addressing 'but for the benefit of his friends outside,' that in his eyes 'the Government are always guilty of dark deeds;' when he openly suggested that 'a disinterested love of education' was not at the bottom of the action of Sir Pherozeshah Mehta and others; when His Excellency said in terms that 'there is a certain class of opponents of the Government who have never pretended it for a moment,' that 'they desire in the first place to discredit the Universities which the Government created last year, and to bring their work to a standstill,' and that 'the enemies of the Act' simply wanted to break it down,—was His Excellency quite sure that he stated truths and not fictions of his own imagination fabricated for the purpose of making a good show in debate? Every one of these imputations is unfounded and uncharitable, and if His Excellency had not the last word he may rest assured the statements would have been there and then challenged, controverted, and repudiated. They are accusations which it is impossible for His Excellency not to have known to be void of foundation. One simple test there is to settle this point in our favour. What interest could the natives of India have in retarding the progress of education of their own children? Is it not plain as a pike-staff that they have nothing to lose and everything to gain by spread of education? What aim could they possibly hope to achieve by unnecessarily setting themselves in antagonism to Government? What could be their motive in discrediting the Universities?

Is it for one moment to be supposed that Lord Curzon and his Anglo-Indian friends and advisers are more solicitous for the advancement of India than her own enlightened sons? Is Lord Curzon aware of the colossal sacrifices made by not a few of these much maligned individuals—and most notably among them all by the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale—in their zeal and anxiety to serve and promote the cause of their country? The pretensions of these birds-of-passage Viceroys and other similarly high-placed foreigners are amusing; when they are coupled with the malicious running down of such educated children of the soil as are labouring hard and at considerable self-sacrifice for the good of the country, they become intolerable. If it is hereafter to be the one endeavour of Lord Curzon, if it is to be his crowning achievement, to alienate even the most moderate section of them from Government and to make the gulf between the rulers and the ruled so wide as to be almost impassable, let him frankly say so. But let him not resort to doubtful tactics for the sake of having his revenge.

One more point remains. Lord Curzon with splendid courage said that the fears expressed by the critics of the Universities Act about the Europeanization and officialization of University governing bodies had not come true. In support of his view he said that in Calcutta, Bombay and Lahore the Indian element was actually in a majority, while in Madras and Allahabad, though the Europeans were in a majority, it was only a majority of four and five respectively. In Bombay, it is true, the Indians are in a majority, though it is nothing like what His Excellency stated it to be, as he omitted to take into account the ex-officio Fellows who are all Europeans. We note, His Excellency says, that for the Senate of the Calcutta University he is responsible. We thought as much, but was it not rather indiscreet of him to have made this confession as he was in England as a private person and not in India as Viceroy at the time the Senate of the Calcutta University was formed? Then, as originally constituted, Europeans, not Indians, were in a majority on it. It was only the few supplementary nominations made by His Excellency subsequently that gave the Indian element a very slight majority. But this majority is converted into a minority when we reckon the ex-officio Fellows whom Lord Curzon inadvertently (or deliberately?) omitted. The same is the case of the Punjab University, while on His Excellency's own admission the Indian element is in a minority on the Madras and Allahabad senates. But His Excellency forgot one or two points in making his statements. Does the Indian element bear anything like the same proportion to the European on the reconstituted senates that it did on the old ones? And how many are the non-official Indians and Europeans as compared with the officials? And what about the quality of gentlemen selected? And where there is a slight majority of Indians, is it owing to the elections or to the nominations? If these essential particulars are gone into, we dare say even His Excellency in his calmer and more candid moments will be obliged to admit that the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale was not after all so very wrong when he wrote in his note of dissent that 'the net result—not the object, as His Excellency erroneously reported him—of the Bill is to place the Indian element in so hopeless a minority as to dissociate it for all practical purposes from the government of the Universities. This much is certain; the rest is doubtful.' And if anybody thinks that Mr. Gokhale exaggerated when he said in one of his speeches that these governing bodies would be dominantly European with only a slight sprinkling of Indians just to keep up appearances, let him look to the composition of the syndicates, and he will be satisfied of the correctness of the forecast.

ADVOCATE,
16th February,
1905.

The Advocate on the passing of the Universities Validation Bill.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th February, says:—Not a little surprise was caused throughout the country when for the first time it came to be known that the Government of India intended to secure the help of the legislature in validating certain irregularities committed by the Chancellors of certain Universities—committed in open day with the connivance of the Government of India. The surprise was due to the fact that the Chancellors instead of withdrawing the notifications should invoke the help of the legislature to conceal their blunders. The matter was not trivial as it was considered to be, but of vital importance when looked at from the point of view of the people. It shall have a great demoralising effect. All honour to the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale that he should have manfully stood up and exposed the weak points of the Government. Mr. Gokhale fought for a principle; he had an unpleasant duty to perform. But those who heard him speaking in the Council Chamber on Friday last with his usual earnestness, were convinced of the influence and effect which even one independent member of Mr. Gokhale's abilities can produce in Council. In this particular matter Mr. Gokhale had the support of four non-official members. The Hon'ble Nawab Syed Mohamad and Hon'ble Rai Sri Ram Bahadur added words of wisdom and sound commonsense in support of the position taken up by Mr. Gokhale. The spectacle presented by Mr. Gokhale urging with due respect all what he felt over the question was highly encouraging, though the part played by the official members in the Council Chamber was not edifying; at least it is not likely to raise the high officers of the Government in charge of the administration of the country in the estimation of the people. There was Mr. Gokhale defending the traditions which the Government of India had built up. What becomes of such traditions when the officers of the State themselves reduce the legislature to a subordinate position, make it subservient to the convenience of the executive officers and interfere with the independence of the High Courts? The spectacle was surely not edifying when the high officials of the Government one after another argued in a circle, and instead of replying to the points raised by the representative of non-official India, took up side issues and made offensive remarks. It is painful indeed to see that a high officer of the position of the Governor-General should, in a state of excitement of the hour, forget his dignity and say things which he ought not to have said and attribute unworthy motives to people who did not approve his measures. To question the disinterestedness of men who have raised the question of legality, to insinuate that the men who were opposed to Lord Curzon's University Act were enemies of education or enemies of Government, is, to say the least, most undignified and shocking to one's feeling of self-respect. If the gentlemen in Bombay who have questioned the legality of the procedure of their Chancellor are really enemies of education, simply because they are desirous that Lord Curzon's new Universities Act should not work, one may ask why they were nominated to be members of the Senate. They did not go to beg for their nomination. They are known as friends of education, and as such were asked to help the University. It appears Lord Curzon was in a rage at seeing the very first action taken under the new Act questioned in such a manner, and in his annoyance he lost control of himself. Had Mr. Gokhale the right of reply, he could have surely told Lord Curzon that though in some Universities Indians had a slight majority on the Senate, non-official Indians were everywhere in a minority. But what is worse, in the Syndicates which have to carry on the administration of the Universities, Indians are nowhere. In Lord Curzon's own University, Mr. Pedler has managed things in a manner that they have not a single non-official Indian on the Syndicate, the two Indian Judges of the High Court returned by the Faculty of Law cannot be expected to protect the interests of private colleges. Instead of the fears of the opponents proving groundless, they have proved to a great extent true, and the new Universities have not begun their work without giving rise to great misgivings. Lord Curzon throughout his speech showed himself as an injured individual, a man who is surrounded by persons who have made up their minds to defeat the Universities Act. There is no such party in India; the gentlemen who have been pointing out the irregularities of the action taken by the Chancellors are as eager friends of high education as His Excellency's best adviser can claim to be; they are earnest to promote the cause of education. If they or their friends resent the tactics by which Indians have been excluded from the Syndicates, it is because they are conscious that without their presence the cause of education would suffer.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th February,
1905.

The passing of the Universities Validation Bill and comments on Lord Curzon's speech on the occasion.

10. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th February, says:—The Universities (Validation) Bill was passed into law, and all the illegalities which the Chancellors perpetrated have thus been rendered legal. Henceforth let no officer of Government think that he can act only in conformity with the statutes of the Legislature: the moment he exceeds his authority and his conduct is called in question, an obliging Government will issue a mandate to its subservient Legislative Council to pass a validating Act. And no longer may the people feel that they live under a reign of law: a reign of discretion—or, as Mr. Gokhale would put it, of executive irresponsibility and validating legislation—has been substituted for it, and every security which we have been fancying we enjoy has been taken away. The obstinacy and wrong-headedness with which the most reasonable and pathetic appeals of the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale were disregarded by the Viceroy is a measure of the departure made by Lord Curzon from his one-time principle of not ignoring or despising the opinion of the educated classes. Mr. Gokhale, and his three non-official colleagues who stood by him, failed in their attempt at educating the Government party into a more acceptable frame of mind, but their protest has served the good purpose of showing to the world who are the real friends of the constitution and of British forms of Government—the educated Indians or the Anglo-Indian bureaucrats. Verily it must have been what the late Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mukerji would have called a geographical mistake that the present Viceroy was born in free England.

It would now seem to have become constitutionally impossible for Lord Curzon to open his lips without saying something offensive of educated Indians. Has His Excellency made it a rule of the remainder of his viceregal life to go out of his way to give pain to a body of men who are as loyal as he himself to the British connection, and whose solitary sin in public life is that they love their native land? Is it possible to avoid sad and saddening reflections on a contrast between the sweet tone of his speech to the delegates of the Commercial Conference and the splenetic utterances of which he delivered himself on Friday at the Council and on Saturday at the Convocation of the Calcutta University? The cleavage between him and our educated countrymen may now be said to be complete and hopeless, and everybody interested in India's welfare cannot but feel profoundly distressed to contemplate the fact.

A complaint regarding the waiting-shed for third class female passengers at the railway station, Bareilly.

11. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th February, complains that, as the new waiting-shed for third class passengers at the Bareilly railway-station has been constructed at a distance from the platform, respectable Indian females travelling third class are much inconvenienced by having to wend their way with their children and luggage through the crowd of male passengers. The railway authorities would do well to assign female passengers some place or room on the platform as a waiting-room.

ADVOCATE,
23rd February,
1905.

Expected large surplus in the next Budget, and a suggestion for the abolition of the grazing-fees levied in the forests.

1. THE Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd February, says:—There is an impression that the Budget to be submitted next month is likely to show another big surplus. A correspondent to the Indian Spectator writes: "As another big surplus is anticipated, may I appeal to you to raise your voice in favour of the further reduction, if not abolition, of the salt tax, in favour of the abolition of grazing fees, which press so hardly on the poorest, and in favour of measures being taken to do away with, or at least to reduce, all indirect taxes on the cultivators? Consider merely the price of fuel. Every railway entails an indirect tax on the agricultural population. It is in the power of Government, which owns the forests and the resources of the soil, to do something to brighten the lot of the vast majority of the subjects, who live from hand to mouth." The amount of surplus is estimated at more than six crores of rupees. The suggestions refer to salt tax and grazing fees. The last Financial Statement shows that during the last four years the net salt revenue exceeded six crores every year. Thus the abolition of the salt tax may easily be effected. In any case the grazing fees, which for all India amount to about thirteen lakhs only, should first be done away with, considering the cruelty on men and cattle committed by the forest rules.

ARYA MITRA,

Objection taken to the Histories of India written by Mr. Dutt, Dr. Hunter and other Europeans as being unsuitable for use in schools on account of their alleged unsatisfactory treatment of the Hindu Period.

2. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th February, says that it is not only Mr. Dutt's History of India which is open to objection from the Hindus' point of view, but that all other Indian Histories written by Dr. Hunter and other Europeans are equally unfair in their treatment of the ancient history of Hindus. Hindus would therefore do well to agitate for the objectionable portions being expunged from the books in question, and request the impartial British Government to stop the use of such books in schools.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th February,
1905.

The Indian People on Lord Curzon's speech at the recent Convocation of the Calcutta University.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th February, says:—We have long ceased to expect generosity or chivalry from Lord Curzon. But is it too much to expect that a Viceroy will not forget himself or will not insult those who cannot retaliate in an effective manner? Yet we find in many passages of Lord Curzon's Convocation address an utter absence of dignity and self-restraint, not to speak of consideration for the feelings of the people whose destinies he wields. Not that the address is devoid of merit. What he spoke of the ideal of truth in the abstract, or of the need of forming an independent judgment, for instance, cannot but find an echo in the hearts of all right-thinking men. But it was when he indulged in an entirely unnecessary and unjustifiable comparison between the Western and Eastern conceptions of truth to the disparagement of the latter, that his sense of racial superiority became apparent—he showed that his Imperialistic pride had warped his judgment and blinded him to the facts of history.

We suppose he wished the graduates and other young men assembled in the Senate House to profit by his sermon. If so, he adopted a singularly strange method of speaking. If you irritate and insult your audience, how can you expect your words to influence their mind and elevate their character? Surely Lord Curzon could have enforced the lesson of truthfulness without vilifying us and our ancestors. Besides, as Professor Max Müller says, 'every one of these international condemnations is to be deprecated, not only for the sake of the self-conceited and uncharitable state of mind from which they spring, and which they serve to strengthen and confirm, but for purely logical reasons also, namely, for the reckless and slovenly character of the induction on which such conclusions rest.'

Speaking of the ideal of truth Lord Curzon said :—

> I hope I am making no false or arrogant claim when I say that the highest ideal of truth is to a large extent a Western conception. I do not thereby mean to claim that Europeans are universally or even generally truthful, still less do I mean that Asiatics deliberately or habitually deviate from the truth. The one proposition would be absurd and the other insulting, but undoubtedly truth took a high place in the moral code of the West before it had been similarly honoured in the East, where craftiness and diplomatic wile have always been held in much repute. We may prove it by the common innuendo that lurks in the words "Oriental diplomacy," by which is meant something rather tortuous and hyper-subtle. The same may be seen in Oriental literature. In your epics truth will often be extolled as a virtue, but quite as often it is attended with some qualification, and very often praise is given to successful deception practised with honest aim.

Lord Curzon is a cultured man, but we are sorry to discover in this portion of his speech the kind of confidence which generally characterises an ignoramus. He does not appear to possess much knowledge of the history and ethical codes of Asiatic races. He also forgets that there is practically no European morality independent of Christian morality, and that Christianity is not European in origin but Asiatic. He forgets, too, that when Europeans were barbarians, many Asiatic races were civilized and possessed elevated moral conceptions. When he asserts that 'undoubtedly truth took a high place in the moral code of the West before it had been similarly honoured in the East,' he forgets that though a Viceroy can validate executive illegalities, even he cannot convert fiction into fact. We presume Lord Curzon knows that Zoroaster is one of the most ancient, if not the most ancient, of prophets. He taught, hundreds of years before Christ :—

> I understand truth-telling exalted; all the days of the holy man are with thoughts of truth, words of truth, and deeds of truth. Those that tell untruths and do wicked actions shall not receive the reward of life from Hormuzd. To speak true words is true excellence; in the treasures of religion, exalt truth above all. What is the high religion? That which promotes my holiness and truth, with good thought, word and deed. In this house may prevail words of truth over words of lie.

Nor was this high ideal of truth of the ancient Persians confined merely to their ethical code. Even hostile Greek testimony can be quoted to show that this ideal was realised in practice. For instance, Herodotus speaking of the ancient Persians says, 'their sons are carefully instructed . . . . . to speek the truth.' He also says, 'the most disgraceful thing in the world they think is to tell a lie, the next worse to owe a debt, because, among other reasons, the debtor is obliged to tell lies.'

Similarly extracts can be quoted from the Rig Veda, the most ancient literary record of the Indo-Aryans, and other Sanskrit works, to show what a lofty conception of truth they had. For instance, we read in the Rig Veda :— 'The Earth is supported by truth, the celestial sphere is supported by the Sun. By truth the Devas themselves are supported; and by truth the Moon floats in Heaven.' Many passages can be quoted from the laws of Manu and other books, inculcating the duty of truthfulness and teaching the sinfulness of lying. Speaking of the Hindus, Professor Max Müller says :—

> The whole of their literature from one end to the other is pervaded by expressions of love and reverence for truth. I doubt whether in any other of the ancient literatures of the world you will find traces of that extreme sensitiveness of conscience which despairs of our ever speaking the truth, and which declares silence gold, and speech silver, though in a much higher sense than our proverb.

Foreigners visiting India, Greeks, Chinese, Musalmans and Europeans, have borne testimony to the truthfulness of the inhabitants of India in the ancient, mediæval and modern ages. Space prevents us from quoting even a part of such testimony.

We have referred to the ideal of truth to be found in Persia and India in ancient times. We might have added references to the Chinese ideal of truth. But it is superfluous to do so. We have to ask Lord Curzon to be good enough to point out, if he can, what conception of truth Europe had in the days of the Rig Veda and the Avesta.

Let us now see what Englishmen themselves have said regarding the truthful character of their own countrymen. Dr. Smiles, the well-known author of Self-Help and other books, says in his Duty :—

> Lying prevails in what is called "Society." "Not at home" is the fashionable mode of reply to a visitor. Lying is supposed to be so necessary to carry on human affairs that it is tacitly agreed to. "Lying abroad for the benefit of one's country" is the maxim of the diplomatist. Full measures, just weights, true samples, full service, strict fulfilment of engagements are all indispensable to men of character. Have we not heard in courts of the depreciation of our manufactures—of cotton loaded with China clay, starch, magnesium and zinc? We are now giving our artizans technical education. What will technical education do against wholesale cheating and lying? A young woman buys a reel of cotton marked 250 yards. When she works it out with her skin and bone, she finds it to contain only 175 yards. What can she think of the truthfulness of her countrymen? * * * The deterioration of the standard of public men, of public morality and of political principles is undeniable.

The late Mr. Hamerton thus characterises the English style of lying :—

> The English surpass them (the French) infinitely in craft and guile. The typical French lie is a simple shameless invention ; the typical English lie is not merely half a truth ; it is entangled with half a dozen truths, or semblances of truths, so that it becomes most difficult to separate them, unless by the exercise of great patience and judicial powers of analysis. Besides this, if the patient analyst came and put the falsehood on one side and the semblances of truth on the other, the process of separation would be too long, too minute and too wearisome for a needless world to follow him.

The Rev. Anderson in his book on The English in Western India writes :—

> Terry admitted that the natives themselves were 'very square, and exact to make good all their engagements ;' but if a dealer was offered much less for his articles than the price which he had named, he would be apt to say :—' What! Dost thou think me a Christian, that I would go about to deceive thee?'

Let Lord Curzon explain the reason why the people of Bombay had formed such a mean estimate of Europeans.

The historian Lecky writes :—

> A disinterested love of truth can hardly co-exist with a strong political spirit. In all countries where the habits of thought have been mainly formed by political life, we may discover a disposition to make expediency a test of truth. * * * It is probable that the capacity for pursuing abstract truth for its own sake, which has given German thinkers so great an ascendency in Europe, is in no slight degree to be attributed to the political languor of their nation.

Now it is well-known that India has always been more devoid of political life than Germany, and the whole of Europe besides, and that the Hindus have been blamed for their excessive addiction to metaphysical speculation. Does not this fact make the presumption fair that in India truthfulness, in public life at least, would be found to a greater extent than in the West?

That English rule has demoralised the Indians can be clearly proved. Mr. Cust, a high revenue officer of the Bengal Civil Service, writes :—

> You have only to compare our new provinces with our old. From the recently acquired Panjáb, where the people have had little of our law and Government education, and are comparatively truthful and honest, the population becomes worse and worse, as you descend lower and lower to our old possessions of Calcutta and Madras.

Lord Curzon says that 'craftiness and diplomatic wile have always been held in much repute in the East.' He also speaks of the common innuendo that lurks in the words 'oriental diplomacy.' We will remind him that the expression 'oriental diplomacy' is of Western origin, and that if one gives a dog a bad name that does not justify the hanging of it. As for oriental craftiness and diplomatic wile, we venture to assert that we, eastern people, have never been a match for the duplicity of the European diplomatist. Pray, how has India been won? How have Russia, France, Germany and England treated China? Only recently, has not the retention of Wei-hei-wei by England been justified on the ground of Russia's theoretical 'occupation' of Port Arthur? Is not that a diplomatic lie? Let Lord Curzon bring forward one crooked act, one breach of a treaty on the part of orientals, and we undertake to bring forward half a dozen on the part of the European nations. Is Lord Curzon quite sure that when Shakespeare wrote the following lines, he was thinking not of Europe but of Asia:—

> Earth is sick
> And Heaven is weary of the hollow words
> Which States and Kingdoms utter when they talk
> Of truth and justice?

Sir John Kaye, writing on the Amirs of Sindh in the Calcutta Review, says:—

> The Sindh Amirs, it is said, violated treaties. It would seem as though the British Government claimed to itself the exclusive right of breaking through engagements. If the violation of existing covenants ever involved ipso facto a loss of territory, the British Government in the East would not possess a rood of land between the Brahmaputra and the Indus.

What does Lord Curzon say to this? This perhaps proves to demonstration the indubitable truthfulness and the straightforward diplomacy of Englishmen!

Nor have Englishmen alone been notorious for their mendacity and craftiness in their dealings with Indians. Take the case of the Portuguese, for instance. Mr. Sewell in A Forgotten Empire, which is a history of Vijayanagar, writes:—

> Throughout the whole of their dealings with the Portuguese, I find not a single instance where the Hindu Kings broke faith with the intruders, but as much cannot, I fear, be said on the other side.

Lord Curzon blames us for our habit of exaggeration. We do not say that we are angels; but we suppose exaggeration flourishes as much in the West as in the East. The imputation of motives is also said to be our monopoly. If so, Lord Curzon in his recent speeches in the Legislative Council has infringed that monopoly. Or is that only a choleric word in the captain which is blasphemy in a private? We are also said to be past masters in slander, vilification and the flinging about of immoderate adjectives. Must we suppose that Lord Curzon does not read newspapers from 'home'? There we find political opponents calling one another liars, cheats, swindlers, criminals and cut-throats. Liberal writers speak of the present Tory Government as Government by fraud. But we do not think any Indian publicist has used similar language. No, our criticism compared with English criticism is as water is to wine.

Lord Curzon has preached but not yet practised the maxim: 'Respect your opponents and do not calumniate them. Believe in the good intentions of others rather than the bad.' His Excellency finds fault with our talkativeness. We thank him for his advice. But we may tell him that more talk is necessary to rouse the entire nation to a sense of their utterly degraded condition. Our object is to make the people of India realise their lot and the necessity of that Divine discontent which is the root of all progress. The Viceroy also forgets that talk is a political safety-valve.

The Viceroy taunts the Bengalis for their 'eloquence.' He forgets that except in manufacturing industries, the most eloquent of the Indian communities are not behind any other Indian race in any national movement, religious, social, political or literary. It is an irony of fate that of all men Lord Curzon should say: 'do not believe that the man who can make a speech is necessarily a statesman, do not let your fluency run away with your powers of thought. Above all, do not think that speech is ever a substitute for action.' What an unconscious self-portraiture!

His Excellency says:—

> We have all of us frequently seen a manufactured public opinion in India which was barren and ineffective because it merely represented the partisan views of a clique, and was little more than noise and foam.... It is always a bad symptom when there is one public opinion that is vocal and noisy, and another that is subdued and silent.

His Excellency has made an astounding and unique discovery. We know that the X-rays enable us to see things that are usually hidden from view. Has His Excellency discovered any apparatus for hearing 'silent' public opinion? Or, perhaps he has mistaken the opinion of the self-seeking flunkeys who dance attendance on men in power, for a sort of 'public opinion.'

Lord Curzon has tried to persuade the under-graduates that Indians are not condemned to be hewers of wood and drawers of water. Nobody ever understood these expressions literally. What we take to be a true statement of the position is that the tendency of the British Government is to keep us in a subordinate position as much as is practicable. A few High Court Judgeships and Magistracies given to Indians no more prove that we are British citizens than a single swallow proves the advent of summer. And then, why did Lord Curzon speak of Ministers of Native States in this connection? That proves our case negatively. For, in strictly British territory no Indian occupies a similar position. In spite of what Lord Curzon says here, we do 'complain that the doors are shut.'

His Lordship is of opinion that the salvation of India 'will not be won by political controversy, and most certainly it will not be won by rhetoric.' We do not believe that by political agitation alone India's salvation will be achieved, but even his Excellency's ipse dixit will not persuade us to believe that political agitation is not one of the means of our national advancement.

But why speak of national advancement? Lord Curzon says that there is not yet any Indian nation. Well, we have no quarrel with words. Do not call us a nation, if you like. But can it be denied that the people of India have one Government, labour under the same political disabilities, have the same political rights in posse though not in esse, and that the thinking portion of the population have the same political aspirations? We are not a nation to the same extent as the English are, but if the baby can be called a human being, we also can claim to be a nation. Lord Curzon says that 'the Indian is most certainly a citizen of the British Empire'. Most certainly; for don't we pay taxes and bleed for the Imperial idea? But when we claim the rights of citizenship, what is the response? We are evidently worthy of doing, but do not deserve to be done unto. That is the implication of the political gospel according to the apostle of Imperialism hailing from Keddleston.

CITIZEN,

1905.

The Citizen on Lord Curzon's speech at the recent Convocation of the Calcutta University.

4. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 20th February, says:—The address of Lord Curzon at the Convocation of the Calcutta University was very far, indeed, from a success. The literary flavour which characterises most of his speeches has in this instance paled and faded into the shadow of a shade. The capacity to examine things dispassionately in the dry light of reason and to view a subject in its broad and comprehensive aspect—is all but gone. A powerful speaker can make a good deal even out of commonplaces, and there can be no question as to his Lordship's being an uncommonly good speaker, but we are sorry to find that his powers betray unmistakable signs of decay. A sub-current of bitterness flows through the whole speech. He tries to steer clear of the fatal rocks of Indian politics, where his reputation has foundered over and over again. But the attempt was hopelessly abortive. He does not directly attack the subject, but finds it convenient to assume the rôle of the evangelist and declaims against the character—rather the want of character of the Indian people. He lays down with some qualifications, reluctantly made, the following propositions:

1. The people of this country are prone to exaggeration and falsehood, the ideal of truth being to a large extent a Western conception.
2. This tendency manifests itself in flattery and vituperations; and the most distressing symptom of the day is the degree in which abuse is entering into public controversy in this country.
3. The people have no independent judgment, but are led blindfolded by newspapers, procurable for an anna or less.
4. As illustrated by the Conferences held in all parts of India, here fluency and speech constitute a substitute for action.
5. There is no public opinion in India. The masses are uneducated and have no opinion on political matters at all. What opinion there is, is that of the educated minority, having no weight because it is dissociated from the interests of the community.

Although the criticisms of Lord Curzon may not be wholly without foundation, we would submit that mere allegations do not amount to proof. Even if His Lordship has here and there given free scope to his fancy and indulged in hypercriticisms, we do not disapprove the idea of his preaching a homily on the morals of the Indian people. Even if there were no occasion for it, the sermon would do no harm. But has it struck His Lordship that he was unconsciously preaching against himself? Because an Indian happens to differ from him, is he necessarily a liar? Is it not imputing motives to a person merely because his standard does not coincide with mine? If a man posing as the leader of the public opposes His Lordship anent some matter of public interest, is it fair to try to belittle that man as a representative of the partisan views of a clique, and to brand his arguments as the result of mere noise and foam? It has of recent years been a part of the policy of the Indian Government to speak of the Indian leaders in disparaging terms, to impute motives to them and to the educated people who follow them, and to make scurrilous criticisms affecting the intelligence and morals of the Indian people generally. Narrow and short-sighted as that policy is—it pains us to see that a Viceroy of Lord Curzon's intelligence should endorse the same.

The Mohini on Lord Curzon's speech at the Convocation of the Calcutta University.

MOHINI,
21st February,
1905.

5. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 21st February, commenting on Lord Curzon's speech at the recent Convocation of the Calcutta University, refers to the criticisms passed thereon by the Englishman and the Amrit Bázár Patrika, and to the comparisons which certain former Englishmen made between Indians and Europeans in favour of the former, as to their respective veracity, &c.; and says that His Lordship's speech did not at all become his exalted position and has wounded the feelings of educated Indians. He was not justified in calling Indians liars, dishonest, &c. His language was quite undignified, offensive and insulting throughout; but a man in power may say and do what he pleases?

The Rahbar on Lord Curzon's alleged educational policy.

RAHBAR,
21st February,
1905.

6. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st February, says that the popular belief in India at present is that Lord Curzon has placed the administration of the Universities into the hands of the Government officials with a view to adopting better measures for infusing loyalty into the minds of the Indians. Russia takes special care to keep the Poles ignorant of their past history, so that they may not know that they ever enjoyed autonomy. But has this precaution made the Poles loyal to Russia? Similarly, the (late) Maharaja Dalip Singh was removed from India during his early childhood and brought up in England as an Englishman: he even became a convert to Christianity. But did the British Government after all succeed in winning his heart (and making him forget his origin)? It would be useless to repeat here what attitude he ulimately adopted towards the British Government. In the case of the Indians of the present day, however, there can hardly be two opinions as to their steadfast loyalty to the British Government. Of the 30 crores of Indians, one can hardly point to a single soul who does not like to continue to live under British rule. And such being the case, it is difficult to understand why Indians are distrusted. Even granting for the sake of argument that Indians are hostile to British rule, would they be put into the right state of mind by the (education) policy which the Government of India means to pursue in respect to them? Certainly not. Good results can only be achieved by good government and not by coercion. Emperor Akbar pursued a conciliatory policy towards Hindus, and he succeeded in attaching them to his throne, so that several Hindu chiefs gladly fought his battles against their own co-religionists. This clearly shows that a Government can hardly expect success in the matter of making a subject people loyal by coercion and high-handedness, but by conciliation.

Protest against the drain of the Fort being allowed to dischage its contents into the junction of the rivers at Allahabad.

7. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 19th February, says that as the filthy and refuse water of the Fort is allowed to run into the junction of the rivers at Allahabad, it causes much annoyance and disgust to bathers. Can nothing be done to save the junction from pollution?

Increasing output of gold from the Mysore mines, by foreign capitalists, and protest against the exploitation of India by such agency.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
23rd February,
1905.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd February, says:—The total value of gold bullion produced in the Mysore State mines in the year 1903 amounted to £2,284,062 as against £1,964,508 in the previous year. The royalty paid to the Mysore Government was £113,138, as against £97,865 in the previous year. The grand total of royalty up to date was £926,273; and the grand total value of gold bullion up to date £18,687,881. The royalty and the wages of labour are the only fraction of the wealth that remains in India. The rest is the profits of the capitalists, who are foreigners, and it is sent out of the country. Some years more, and the ore will be exhausted. So only sand and stones will remain by the time the children of the soil will by education and the accumulation of capital make themselves fit to work the natural resources of their own country. This is why we are opposed to the incessant and increasing foreign exploitation. If the Government of India had a true conception of their mission, if they correctly understood their duty to the people in trust for whom they administer the affairs of this country, they would not encourage this foreign exploitation as at present. But their idea of their duty is different, and hence the coaxing of foreign capital which we are witnessing with so much regret.

ADVOCATE,
23rd February,
1905.

Need for Government spending money freely on anti-plague measures.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd February, says:—We look upon the appointment of two experts as Commissioners to enquire into the etiology of the plague as a move in the right direction, a step taken by the Government in the interests of the people. The experts will soon be coming to India, and we hope they will be given the help of experts in India to collect such information as they can from eminent medical men who have worked hard in combating the plague. They will receive the co-operation of the leaders of public opinion, and we do trust that by the time they finish their labours they will be able to place some new information before us. But Commissions always take time to collect evidence, whether scientific or otherwise, and it takes the Government long to come to any definite conclusions, specially in such cases as are likely to cause an amount of expenditure. In the meantime we think the Government of India should place funds at the disposal of the Local Governments to combat the next recrudescence The Local Governments could practically do little on an organised scale, and there is no wonder that the plague is amidst us with redoubled vigour. The death figures in these provinces are still mounting up, and we are afraid they will go on increasing till April next. The summer which usually commences late will this year be still later. It is during the period of transition that the plague becomes worst. After the plague season is over, we quite agree with the Pioneer that a regular crusade against rats should be undertaken. The belief that the rats are responsible for the plague is being strengthened. The people have got the sad experience that whenever dead rats are found in any house, plague or fever of a serious nature follows. The troubles of the last few years and the sad experience of several outbreaks keep people on the alert. Those who can afford to do so vacate their houses as soon as they find a mouse dead. The belief that the Hindus have any aversion to rat-killing, or that they will grow suspicious of the authorities if they encourage the killing of rats, is erroneous. If medical opinion is unanimous as to the fact that rat-killing can save the people from the poison of plague, and if Government organises rat-catching on an extensive scale as it was done in Shanghai, the Government has no reason to fear opposition from the people. But activity for plague prevention should not be confined to rat-catching alone. Something more has to be done. We were pained to read in the many communications—that appeared in the Pioneer on Rai Baijnath's proposals for a universal prayer day, in the feasibility of which we ourselves have little faith as we think these matters can be better arranged by the people themselves than by the Government—that the people were indifferent to sanitary measures or not ready to co-operate with the State. Few sanitary measures have been taken by the State in which the people have not co-operated. It is easy to suggest that plague-infected portions of the town should be burnt down and the owners paid compensation by the people. The persons who make such suggestions do not know that it is impossible to do this work without the help of the State. Have the slums been improved? Have in any town people been persuaded to leave narrow lanes and live in open places? Have roads been widened? Have steps been taken to improve the marts? Grain markets throughout these provinces have been the source of infection to the neighbouring mohallas, but have any steps been taken in big towns to remove marts from thickly crowded mohallas to open places, and to take measures that rats from grain markets should not infect the populated quarters? The plague always makes its first appearance in grain markets. This is the sad experience of Allahabad Cawnpore and Lucknow. It is in this direction that something should be done. Instead of running down the people, they should be persuaded to co-operate with the municipalities in taking such sanitary measures as might be thought advisable. The Municipal laws give wide powers to the local authorities; if these are exercised with sympathy and courage there will be no opposition from the people. Whatever might have been the state of feeling five years ago, the trend of public opinion has changed. Those of our Anglo-Indian friends who are writing long articles in the daily press and are condemning in unmeasured terms and in unbridled language the dumb people, would be helping the cause of humanity if they were to induce Lord Curzon and his ministers to put a stop to increase in the military expenditure, to request Lord Kitchener to put aside his re-organisation scheme, at any rate till such time as Russia takes to set her house in order, or at least for another year, so that every pie of the surplus in March next may be devoted to the direct advantage of the people, and the greater portion of it may go to meet expenditure on plague operations.

V.—Legislation.

The Citizen on the Universities Validation Act.

CITIZEN,
20th February,
1905.

10. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 20th February, says:—With a view to legalise the executive action of the Chancellors of the several Universities, the Universities Validation Bill was introduced into the Imperial Legislative Council on the 3rd of February, and was passed into Act on Friday the 10th idem. This was done in defiance of the wishes of the people, in opposition to the principles of constitutional morality, and in contravention of all precedents. An action was pending before the Bombay High Court in which the legality of the constitution of the University was at issue. It is evident that Lord Curzon was not prepared to submit to the judicial decision of the highest tribunal in the land. His pet hobbies must be protected at any cost. His prestige must be maintained at the sacrifice of whatever principles and by adoption of whatever means, no matter fair or foul. As the name of the Bill connotes, it was intended thereby to legalise a state of things, which undisguisedly was unlawful. It amounted to an unqualified admission that the action pending before the Bombay Court was well founded. It may be asked what was the necessity for this undignified haste? Was it not reasonable that matters should have been deferred till the judgment of the Bombay High Court was delivered. What was there to prevent the issue of fresh notifications for the formation of new syndicates in accordance with the provisions of the Universities Act? The Universities Act was made to be observed and not to be violated. To-day you make law; to-morrow you set it at nought. To cure the illegality, you make a fresh enactment declaring that what is illegal is lawful and just. If such a measure were to be contemplated in a European country, would Lord Curzon have dared in this manner to play fast and loose with legislation? The truth is that Lord Curzon is practically an irresponsible ruler, and he is conscious of the fact. This is proved to a demonstration by his tone and attitude during the last five years. Before his domineering will every consideration melts like wax. Having an obedient majority absolutely under his control, he knows he is capable of doing and undoing anything at his sweet will and pleasure, and he is perfectly conscious of his safety, so long as the British public continues in the present state of comatose apathy in Indian affairs. The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale laid bare the untenableness of the position of the Government by arguments as bold as clear. It may be well conceived how weak indeed the position of Lord Curzon was, since he could not answer his charges otherwise than by descending into personalities concerning Mr. Gokhale and his friends. The political high-handedness which has been going on in recent years and which does not find its parallel in the history of modern times imperatively demands the necessity of carrying on a vigorous agitation in England with a view to make the British public alive to the fact that Lord Curzon has by his abuse of delegated authority been causing widespread discontent among the Indian people, and that the rights and privileges of the people are on all sides being invaded. It is to the British public that an appeal should be made; for we have nothing to hope for at the hands of the Indian Government.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th February, 1905.

Certain complaints against the Post Office at Moradabad.

11. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th February, states that on the 7th idem the Post Office, Moradabad, refused to accept any paid parcels, packets or registered letters, on account of not having stamps in stock to affix to them. What was worse still, the licensed stamp vendors too had run short of stamps on the day in question; and the result was that business men were greatly inconvenienced. Surely the Post Office should always keep a fixed minimum amount of stamps for public use, and licensed stamp vendors should also be required to do the same. Again, on the 13th February, a postman in delivering two money-orders to a merchant insisted on paying them in currency notes which the payee refused to take on account of the discount at which currency notes are at present exchangeable at Moradabad. It is very strange that while the Post Office itself has lately been refusing to accept notes from the public for remittance of money-orders, it forces the people to receive the same in payment. This might be taken to imply an ulterior motive on the part of the postal officials concerned.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
24th February,
1905.

Christian missionaries alleged to be the messengers of bloodshed, war and final subjugation to non-Christian countries.

1. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th February, says that whenever a Christian missionary from Europe happens to be murdered in an uncivilized or semi-civilized country, the civilized Government of the country to which the deceased belonged sends out at once a fleet to the offending country, and ends by conquering and annexing it to its own dominions. If it be asked why do civilized European countries allow their missionaries to go to uncivilized countries at all, when the latter do not want them, they may reply that they do so for conferring the blessings of their civilization on the latter countries. But all this is "bosh." Christian missionaries are sent out simply as bait to non-Christian countries. Thus under the pretence of spreading civilization and Christianity, the so-called civilized Powers seek to gratify their insatiable lust for fresh conquests. Religious hatred has been and is still the principal incentive for wars and dissensions that have taken place in the world in the past, or are going on at the present time. What led Russia lately to fall out with Japan and court disaster? Nothing else but the former's religious hatred for the latter; otherwise what business or right had Russia to thrust her nose in the Far East? Turkey is similarly an eyesore to the European Powers, who would have made short work of her long ago but for her great military prowess. Surely it is high time that all the great Powers of the world agreed among themselves to put a stop to international wars and bloodshed in future so long as these are brought about through missionaries. Let the Powers therefore henceforth not allow the missionaries of one religion to go preaching in a country where another religion prevails; and be contented with the dominions which they respectively hold, trying to promote their prosperity by paying increased attention to industries and commerce. The present policy of the European Powers to be constantly on the lookout for extending their dominions is extremely vicious and criminal, leading, as it does, to much bloodshed and loss in other ways. Russia has, for instance, lost much more in her present war with Japan than she could have hitherto gained by her continued advance in the Far East.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th February,
1905.

The Indian People on the Russian Orenburg-Tashkend railway being regarded in some quarters as a menace to India.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th February, says:—The writer of the elaborate article on the (Russo-Japanese?) war in the January Quarterly has fallen into the error of thinking that the completion of the Orenburg-Tashkend line of railway by Russia is a menace to India. This line 'virtually completes the railway system which has been established for the express purpose of bringing pressure to bear upon England in Afghanistan. The sword is visibly suspended over our heads, and we shall be constantly asked to observe it.' What if the new line of railway brings Russia nearer to Afghanistan? A deal of exaggerated nonsense has been written of its inner significance, but all along it has been overlooked that between the terminus of the Russian railway and the Indian frontier, there is at least the entire length of Afghanistan, one of the most difficult countries in the world to conquer (as Colonel Hanna has told us), and the most difficult in the world to retain. What then of the frontier regions with the tribes' passionate love of independence? Will they allow Russia standing ground? And what of the exhaustion of Russia consequent on the desolating war in the Far East? What again of her internal troubles? We venture to think they are alarmists who see cause for fear in the completion of the Russian railway system in Central Asia.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd March, 1905.

Mr. Brodrick, and the cost of the Tibetan Expedition.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd March, says:—If only Mr. Brodrick could be clever! Perhaps he thinks cleverness unnecessary in an Indian Secretary of State, or rather, probably Mr. Balfour thinks so. Or, would a responsible minister of the Crown be suffered so hopelessly to flounder in speaking on the question of the cost of the Tibetan Expedition—the fond child of a statesman abnormally sensitive on the subject of truthfulness! Why should India alone pay a crore and 25 lakhs of rupees for this questionable enterprise? When have the famished Indian ryots prayed the Government that they should be starved so that Tibetans may be slaughtered and partially deprived of their independence? First we were told that the very pacific mission of Maxims and rifles was an Imperial move intended to check Russian aggression. Then the object was simply the promotion of Indian trade. Again, the Indian Government were sharply rebuked for regarding the settlement of the dispute (if there was one) from an Indian standpoint only. Simla was solemnly adjured not to infringe the monopoly of Whitehall to make quarrels, patch up treaties—and break them. Again, it was contended that the business was simply an Indian one. When the question of cost came up, the Tibet Expedition was exclusively a concern of India. When the right of settling the question was under dispute, it was magnified into an affair of the whole empire. And all to save the well-to-do English tax-payer the crore and 25 lakhs at the expense of the voteless Indians! Is this a case of Oriental diplomacy or Occidental mendacity?

ZINDA DIL, January, 1905.

Attitude of Indians towards their constituted Government for the time being.

4. The Zinda Dil (Cawnpore), for January, republishes a portion of an article called the "Pareshâni-i-Hind" (lit. the distress of India) published by one Munshi Vishnu Dayál of Cawnpore, in pamphlet form some time ago, in which he says that the assertion frequently made that Indians are disaffected towards the British Government, or cherish ill-will against it, is utterly unfounded. Both the Hindus and the Muhammadans are enjoined by their respective religions to revere their rulers next to their God; and this is the reason why they never revolted against their constituted Government for the time being, or attempted to throw off its yoke as the inhabitants of America, France and almost all other European countries have done in the past, and do even in modern times. The Indians regard their rulers as protectors of their lives, property and rights; and whenever they are confronted with any trouble, distress, or calamity, which is beyond their power to contend against, or when their feelings are injured, or they feel aggrieved in any other way, they always respectfully request their Government to help them in the best way it thinks proper, just as a child would seek the help of its mother under similar circumstances. But the Indians being so peaceful, loyal and obedient, the Government should, on its part, be always equally ready to redress their grievances when brought to its notice.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd March, 1905.

Late abdication of the ex-Maharajah of Indore alleged to have been forced upon him by Lord Curzon.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd March, says:—If the facts of the correspondent of the Anglo-Indian Advocate of India, whose letter on Indore affairs is published in another column, be true, what a typical instance of British truthfulness we have there. The writer in terms charges the Government of India with breaking its pledge given to the ex-Maharajah in a manner prejudicial to the interests of the State and the prestige of its ruler. The State troops have been compulsorily reduced in number, and the remonstrances of the Dewan against this step have been of no avail. The breach of promise involved in this act comes into striking relief when the circumstances under which the ex-Maharajah 'abdicated' are told. We have never been free from doubt that this so-called 'abdication' was anything but voluntary, that in fact it was more of the nature of forced retirement. The facts mentioned by the writer go to confirm this suspicion. The manner of bringing about the coup' casts a side-light on Lord Curzon's adverse dealings with the Feudatory Princes of this country. The ex-Prince had no option but to resign. He was perpetually asked in letters from the Government when he proposed resigning.'

When Lord Curzon went to Mhow, his Highness asked permission to visit him there. The permission was given, but when his Highness was actually on the spot, he was informed—by Colonel Younghusband of Tibet (and insubordination) fame—that 'his visit would not be acceptable unless he promised to abdicate. This,' says our writer, 'was a demand of an exceptional nature, made in a very exceptional manner. However, Holkar agreed, provided all promises were kept and all rights acknowledged.' And this promise was publicly given by the Political Agent, the Hon'ble Mr. C. S. Bayley, on the occasion of the installation of the minor Maharajah, in the following terms :—'The rights and privileges of the State will be carefully maintained.' Yet a reverse policy would seem to have been adopted by the Government. How will Lord Curzon, who constantly depicts himself as the special friend and patron of the Indin Princes, reconcile the deed with the word? And what of the stories assiduously circulated that his Highness voluntarily abdicated? Is this Oriental or Occidental diplomacy, we wonder?

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL, 1st March, 1905.

Complaint regarding the reduced number of holidays continuing to be observed for the Muharram in the North-Western Provinces High Court.

6. The Allahabad Law Journal of the 1st March, says :—The advent of the Muharram every year reminds all who have anything to do with the North-Western-Provinces High Court of certain unfortunate differences between Chief Justice EDGE and Mr. Justice Mahmood. All the Civil Courts subordinate to the High Court close for ten days on this occasion. But the High Court closes only for four. Surely there are other ways of commemorating the memory of the great Muhammadan Judge and of doing honour to the learned Chief Justice, and there seems to be no valid reason why on the occasion of the most important Muhammadan celebration in the year the practitioners in this Hon'ble Court should be deprived of their holidays. We believe the Government of India, too, suggested sometime ago that there should be uniformity in the matter of holidays in all courts and on all occasions.

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL, 1st March, 1905.

Protest against the paucity of passes at the last Legal Practitioners' examinations in the United Provinces.

7. The Allahabad Law Journal of the 1st March, says :—The "slaughter of the innocents" at the last Legal Practitioners' examinations, we understand, has been almost wholesale, hardly 5 per cent. of the examinees having succeeded in qualifying themselves for the vakil's certificate. If examinations are to be of any value as tests, measures should be taken to secure uniformity in marking, and to put down all caprice on the part of examiners. The Examination Board, in our opinion, should at least arrange for a careful "moderation" of the question-papers set for the Legal Practitioners' examinations.

CITIZEN, 27th February, 1905.

The Citizen on Lord Curzon's speech at the Convocation of the Calcutta University.

8. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 27th February, says :—It must be patent by this time that Lord Curzon has no intention to put himself in better relations with the Indian public. The first term of his rule in India has been most disappointing, and there is little hope that His Excellency has any desire to rectify his past mistakes by his actions in the future. The educated classes are the leaders of Indian public opinion, and if Lord Curzon had any wish to stand well in their opinion, he must not have offended them in the way he did by his now notorious speech delivered at the last Convocation of the Calcutta University.

The one most important thing that is brought home to the mind of the reader after an examination of His Lordship's latest public performance is that he has come to entertain inimical feelings towards the educated class of Indians. Their nature and character, and their aims and aspirations are positively distasteful to His Excellency, and the whole of his Convocation speech is but an advice to them to revolutionize their ideals. We could have no quarrel with the Viceroy if, in imparting this advice, he had not in an offensive manner hurt the feelings of the educated public of India. He could have easily avoided it. But he evidently choose other ways.

Great is the indignation felt by the Calcutta public at the vilification of Indian character and Indian classics in which Lord Curzon so freely indulged in the course of his speech. We feel it incumbent upon us to analyse the unfortunate oration to show in what errors and absurdities His Lordship fell in giving vent to his wrath against the educated community.

Lord Curzon said that "the highest ideal of truth is, to a large extent, a Western conception" and that "truth took a high place in the moral codes of the West, before it had been similarly honoured in the East." We had the impression that Lord Curzon was deeply read in the books written in English about ancient India and about the Hindu Shâstras. But if that were true, he could not make the above absolutely erroneous observations. In Indian books composed long before any Western nation had learnt the rudiments of morality, truth and truthfulness had been extolled. Satya or truth is the highest religion according to the Hindus from the very earliest days, and not only that, but what is more noteworthy is that truth was practised more scrupulously in ancient India than anywhere else. Greek travellers who had visited India long before Christ was born, have borne testimony to this fact. They have put it in writing that in India in those days there were no thieves and the doors of houses did not require to be closed at night to prevent loss of property. Then Lord Curzon never erred more grievously than when he said that in our epics, it is a sort of qualified truth, the observance of which has been enjoined upon, and not pure truth. How could His Excellency forget that the hero of the Ramayána sacrificed his birth-right, his very Kingship, so that his father might not prove untruthful? There is not another national epic in the world which teaches the observance of truth so forcibly and impressively as does the Hindu epic of the Rámáyana. Then again in the Mahábhárat there are numerous passages which inculcate the observance of truth as the highest virtue. It is a pity that Lord Curzon has proved himself an ignoramus in regard to the knowledge of our classics.

Lord Curzon has referred to the innuendo that lurks in the expression "Oriental diplomacy," but His Lordship evidently forgets who the author of the expression is, and from whom the innuendo has proceeded. He may be reminded of the Lion's answer in Æsop's Fables, when he found himself delegated to a debased situation by the man. And then Lord Curzon has conveniently ignored the author of the party to which is due the subtle distinction between a "white" lie and a "black" one. In Indian theology no such distinction exists, and in Indian vocabulary such mischievous expressions do not find a place.

His Lordship then accuses the Indian of exaggeration, invention and imputation, and says that there is no other country where mare's nests are more prolific than here. We dare say that in his calm moments in this very assertion of his, Lord Curzon will find the fault of exaggeration he condemned exhibited in an unmistakable way. Lord Curzon has never mixed with all classes of the Indian community. How could he then count the mare's nests in this country and compare their number with that in others? Has His Excellency got statistics of what he calls mare's nests compiled for each country, and are they in sole possession of His Excellency? To us it seems that Lord Curzon has deliberately ignored the testimony which various European professors and savants, the very latchet of whose shoes His Excellency is not worthy to unfasten, have borne to the high moral sense and exalted moral code of the Indian. And curiously enough, when Lord Curzon has in this country been gratuitously preaching to the Indian youth the necessity of having in view the English ideal of truthfulness, the English press in England has been warmly discussing the question not unreasonably raised by Mr. Walter Crane as to whether Englishmen are a nation of liars. The fact is that when His Lordship was indulging in those allegations, he was giving vent to a personal grievance of his. Lord Curzon has been a lover of secret methods in the Government of this country, and has never shown a tendency to take the public into his confidence. Naturally, therefore, the press and the public had at times to impute motives to him for his contemplated administrative measures. The people in any country under the same circumstances would do the same thing. To magnify this tendency in the people taking interest in the administration of the country into a national failing is an act of exaggeration, invention and imputation, of which Lord Curzon has clearly made himself guilty. He will, in his heart of hearts, find justification for any imputations regarding himself, when he places himself in the position of an Indian who honestly believes the Viceroy to be a reactionist, intent upon setting back the hand in the dial of progress.

The growth of the spirit of hero-worship in the Indians of the present day is a hopeful feature. Lord Curzon, who evidently belongs to the school, whose motto is nil admirari, does not wish that it should be so. A worthy disciple of Benjamin Jowett, His Lordship, in season and out of season, recites the lines:

My name it's Chancellor Curzon,
I ex-scholar of Balliol College,
I do know whatever can be known,
And what I don't know isn't knowledge.

And that is why, we believe, Lord Curzon complains that Indians extol merely "worthy people" as "heroes", "a commonplace man" as "a great man" a "fluent speaker" as an "orator," and "a petty agitator" as "a leader of men." We are convinced that Lord Curzon has by this remark vented his spite against the political agitators and speakers of the day, particularly those who figure on the Congress platform. He may rest assured that the sinister object of this observation of his, however disguised it may be, will be seen through.

Lord Curzon says that the most distressing symptom of the day is the degree to which abuse is entering into public controversy in this country. But we should not take His Lordship too seriously when he makes this assertion. The remark really means that the press and the Congress speakers have indulged in a criticism of His Lordship's measures and proceedings which in his opinion is nothing but abuse. This analysis of the remark makes it rather intelligible. But even so interpreted, the remark is not justifiable. Indian journalists and political speakers sometimes criticise His Excellency's actions freely, but they as a rule speak of His Excellency personally with due respect, and if they cannot help ridiculing his policy and his numerous reactionary measures, Lord Curzon must thank himself for it. It is, indeed, uncharitable or rather too imperious on His Lordship's part to consider such criticism to be tantamount to abuse. His own countrymen in England are grossly abusive under similar circumstances, but Indians are naturally too respectful and courteous to be guilty of that offence. In the recent debate in the Supreme Legislative Council, Mr. Gokhale's criticism on the Validation Bill was altogether courteous and dignified, while it was His Lordship's reply thereto that was an ebullition of temper, unpardonably vulgar and scornful. We must say we have been pained to read the following in Lord Curzon's speech:—"The curse of our day is the dependence on others for thought and decision of every description, and the multiplication of machines for relieving a man of the necessity of independent opinion. The highest form of these machines is the article in the daily newspaper or the magazine which relieves you from thinking about the politics or events of the day by supplying you with the thoughts of another. For an anna or less a man can purchase his opinions just as he purchases his food or his clothing. The newspapers are sometimes an indirect incentive to intellectual torpor. In reading our favourite journals we cherish the belief that we are thinking, while we are really growsing on the thoughts of others." Here His Lordship has depicted the dark side of the press in sombre colours. None can do so unless he has a deep spite against it. The Indian press could not praise Lord Curzon as it could not approve his policy; therefore, thinks His Lordship, it is the "curse of our day," and it fosters "intellectual torpor," and those who are guided by the press are asses for they "growse" on the thoughts of others. Thus, in the very speech in which he condemns the habit of abusing a political opponent, he himself commits the fault. Then he condemns specially the one anna paper and is primâ facie guilty of making personal attacks, for the anna papers in Calcutta are the Bengalee, the Amrita Bâzar Patrika and the Statesman, all of which have scarcely found anything to praise in His Excellency. We must say that this abuse of the Indian press by Lord Curzon was a most unworthy and impolitic act. It did not at all become the head of the Government in India, who must always preserve a cool head over all controversial matters, specially when such matters are of a personal character.

After this condemnation of the Indian press, it was hardly surprising that Lord Curzon would descend upon the heads of our political speakers and leaders of constitutional agitation in this country. His Lordship's remarks fully manifest the spirit in which the present Government regards political agitation in India, for it is speakers and orators of eloquence who guide and conduct such agitation. Without eloquent speakers, political agitation is impossible. So when you condemn eloquence you condemn political agitation. It may suit His Lordship's present purpose to cry down the merit of eloquence, but is it not known to His Lordship that eloquence is the chief weapon under a constitutional form of Government to fight for the cause of the people against the powers that be? The position and prosperity which Lord Curzon enjoys is due to his eloquence. And as it is useful to individuals, so it is equally useful to communities. Lord Curzon has evidently been alarmed by the growth in the quality of eloquence in educated Indians, for it has hitherto been the worst foe of Indian bureaucracy, and will continue to be so of Curzonian Imperialism introduced during the present régime. We very well understand His Excellency's anxiety to see young Indians, out from the College, not emulating the gift of eloquence in the great Indian public speakers of the day. But the Indian young man is too sharp to be caught by such Viceregal chaff.

The Viceroy's Convocation speech can produce but one effect. It will surely irritate and offend, and widen the gulf between the rulers and the ruled. If Lord Curzon had not been the representative of our beloved sovereign, King Edward, we should not have hesitated to declare that his remarks were the effusions of a fevered brain, vituperative and taunting, in fact, double-distilled nonsense, coated in deliberate falsehoods. Having, however, a regard for his present exalted situation, we shall simply invite to them the attention of His Majesty, in the hope that proper action may be taken to have them retracted.

Alleged organization of public demonstrations to be held in the Presidency towns to protest against Lord Curzon's speech at the recent Convocation of the Calcutta University.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd March, 1905.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd March, says:—We are not surprised that public demonstrations are being organised at Calcutta, Bombay and Madras to record an indignant protest against the gratuitous insults the head of the Government of India, the august representative of our gracious Sovereign, thought fit in a moment of irritation and self-forgetfulness to hurl at our devoted heads. The people of India have lost much that is worth possessing, many virtues of head and heart of which they were pardonably proud, on account of continued foreign rule and priestly tyranny. But in their degradation they still retain certain valuable moral virtues which the powerful European nations may not boast. Indians, of course, are not angels; nor are the countrymen of Lord Curzon. They have their full share of the weaknesses of human nature, and none are readier to confess to them than themselves. But Lord Curzon committed the mistake of supposing that they of 'perfidious Albion' have a more exalted conception of truth than we poor Orientals. Of course His Lordship was guilty of grotesque exaggeration in painting us in almost unrelieved black. In doing so he stirred national feeling to its very depths. This he will sadly realise when the Calcutta, Bombay and Madras meetings are held.

Barring the charge of untruthfulness, the other vices which, according to Lord Curzon, we possess, and of which we have been angrily accused, we could only have imbibed from His Lordship's own country and countrymen. In essence we are found fault with for indulging in a bit of political agitation. But is not this altogether an exotic in India? Is it not from England that we have learnt the folly; and is it not because of the conditions of British rule that we are obliged for our very existence to continue to agitate? Quite true, agitation has been somewhat stronger, and we concede more acrimonious, during His Lordship's régime than at any time before during the past half a century. But who is responsible for this? Agitation can only derive its strength from the blunders of rulers. Given a good and sincere ruler, an honest Government, agitation will have nothing to feed upon, and it spontaneously becomes extinct. Was there any unpleasant agitation on the part of the people against Lord Ripon's Government? And when His righteous Lordship attempted to do a small, an elementary, act of justice to us, who set on foot a violent, aye disloyal agitation? It was Lord Curzon's own countrymen out here, busy exploiting the country, whom His Excellency has been so befriending and coaxing of late.

HINDI PRADIP,
January-February,
1905.

The Hindi Pradip on Lord Curzon's speech at the Convocation of the Calcutta University.

10. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), in its joint number for January and February, referring to Lord Curzon's speech at the recent Convocation of the Calcutta University, says that His Lordship, smarting, God knows, under what infliction, freely poured out the vials of the poison of his wrath on the devoted heads of the Indians calling them "liars," "immoral," &c. Perhaps His Lordship was greatly irritated at the slashing remarks the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale had made in the Viceregal Council a few days before (in connection with the Universities Validation Bill); and hence the outburst of His Lordship's inordinate fury. Whole sections and chapters are devoted to inculcating the precept—"there is no higher religion than truth"—in the Rámâyan, Máhábhárat and other Indian sacred books. It was simply to keep his word that Mahárájah Dasratha consented to let his beloved son Rám go in exile, and then unable to bear the separation died soon after. Why, from where did Europe receive the germs of truthfulness and purity of character but from India? Yet in the face of these solid facts, Lord Curzon takes upon himself to teach those virtues to Indians! But the Indians are now a fallen race, have lost their position in the world, and have become mere slaves, to all intents and purposes, so that they are free to be mocked at by "the merest potsherds of the very street;" and there is, therefore, no wonder that His Lordship chose to mock at them. "Verily everything becomes the Great!"

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th February,
1905.

Alleged starvation of education in the United Provinces for want of funds.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 26th February, observing that want of funds is the burden of Mr. Lewis' song in his last report on public instruction in the United Provinces, says:—Will it any longer be wondered at that these Provinces are educationally so backward; more so than any other province of the empire? What does it avail to talk of the prosperity of the finances of Government, who will be dazzled by the magnificence of the surpluses exhibited for public admiration. Who can help feeling a sense of dissatisfaction at the criminal waste of public money on trans-frontier conflagrations, when the most reproductive branch of the administration, the most certain means of national advancement, education, is so starved? The people complain of the inadequacy of the provincial assignment of revenues: they are met by the reply that the Lieutenant-Governor has expressed his gratitude to the Government of India for their generosity in making such a large assignment. They then turn to the Provincial budget and accounts to see whether really the Provincial Government have such a superabundance of money placed at their disposal: they are amazed, startled, to read what the departmental heads have to say. Is sufficient money being spent on plague preventive and remedial measures? No fault ought to be found with an all-beneficent Government if they cannot do everything out of their own purse, and the people and their semi-bankrupt municipalities and district boards are asked to shift for themselves. Not, however, really that the Government are doing their own part of the duty. They are not spending more than a couple of lakhs or thereabouts in the whole province in a whole year, and the plague grant is a continually dwindling one. Sanitation is similarly neglected— again for want of funds. Education is literally starved, and for all the sermons on educational self-help, all the high falutin talked in support of the ousting of educated Indians from their place on the governing bodies of the Universities, for all the arbitrary illegalities thoughtlessly perpetrated and impenitently confirmed by despotic validating legislation, and for all the homilies read by viceregal preachers to educated Indians on their alleged enmity to educational progress, the broad and irrefutable fact remains that this much pretending Government cannot find the necessary funds for educating the children of the country. But the impecunious Government is suddenly metamorphosed into the richest of rich Governments under the sun when increased emoluments have to be given to its European employés under all sort of pretexts, or when defenceless border states and kingdoms have to be invaded out of very un-Christian motives indeed! And yet, it is the basest of sins to attribute any but the noblest, most altruistic motives to the Government. What cant this to be sure!

ZAMANAH, January, 1905.

Lord Curzon's administration of India, and the people.

12. The Zamánah (Cawnpore), for January, publishes an open letter addressed to Lord Curzon by one Shiva Shambhú, Brahman, in which he says that though His Lordship arrogantly fancies that there is no other Englishman who understands India as well as he does, yet this is all brag and boast on his part, he not having yet realized the true condition of India or gauged the real feelings of her children. He has all along been trying to make an impression on the people by empty pageantry and grand talk, which can hardly have any value in their eyes. He and Lord Kitchener are now seeking to erect, as it were, "a wall of steel" on the north-west frontier of India, to protect her against a foreign invasion; but the best protection and security of India has been provided for in the Proclamation of Her late Majesty promulgated during the administration of Lord Canning. Lord Curzon has never bestowed the least thought on ameliorating the condition of the Indian masses, and the latter hardly even know what and who he is, or when he was appointed their Viceroy, &c. His Lordship is no doubt a powerful speaker, but does he ever care to see that his deeds tally with his words?

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
1st March, 1905.

Rumours of mediation of the Western Powers to bring about peace between Russia and Japan.

1. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 1st March, referring to the rumours of peace to be effected between Russia and Japan through the mediation of the Western Powers, says now that Japan has expelled Russia from Port Arthur and certain other parts of Manchuria, repeatedly inflicting severe defeats on the latter, those Powers cannot contemplate with equanimity the prospects of further successes of Japan against Russia. They are naturally afraid that in the event of Japan succeeding in driving Russia out of Mukden and the rest of Manchuria, as she bids fair soon to do, the former might next try to make a clean sweep of their own recently acquired possessions in that country. This is a very gloomy prospect indeed, and they therefore must intervene sooner or later to put a stop to the sanguinary war, in their own interests, if not in those of Russia. Besides, when peace is concluded, one of its terms must provide for the payment of a considerable indemnity to Japan, which Russia would have to borrow from the Western nations. Hence the Western Powers have nothing to lose but everything to gain, in inducing the belligerents to make peace.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th March, 1905.

Divergence in their ideals of government between Lord Curzon with his Anglo-Indian bureaucrats, and the people.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th March, says :—There is no longer any doubt that a strong anti-Indian wave is sweeping over the world of Anglo-India whose spokesman is no less than the first citizen of the empire, the Viceroy and Governor General himself. His Excellency has wronged the people of India by thus constituting himself the head of a party. He has done not a little to rob the most exalted office of the principal representative of the Sovereign in India, of the splendid dignity attaching to the august position, by so lending himself to partizan purposes. But the fact is there, however we may deplore it, and it is our immediate duty to get over the painful and perilous situation created by Lord Curzon as best we may. Why is His Lordship so angry with us, and why are we so dissatisfied with him ? The recent reactionary legislation as well as the outburst of uncontrollable wrath at the Convocation is merely symptomatic of a dangerous malady which has its roots deep down, and the causes of this malady have to be removed, instead of merely losing patience over the ugliness of the symptoms. Now, what is this malady ? It is the divergence in their ideals of government of the rulers and the people. The former wish to govern the country on Russian principles ; we want it to be carried on in conformity with British ideals of freedom and justice, in accordance with the emancipating Parliamentary statute of 1833 and the immortal Proclamation of 1858 confirming the noble and altruistic principles enunciated in that celebrated Act. We ask those responsible for the good government of our country to be loyal to the plighted word of their and our (late) Sovereign-lady, the Empress-mother ; they are urgent that they should be loyal to their own selfish purposes. The bitterness born of disappointment that is expressed and felt by us is therefore only the logical outcome of the short-sighted selfishness of the irresponsible bureaucracy in whose hands our destinies are placed. True to their unregenerate instincts they resent our criticism, and hence unseemly ebullitions of temper such as were recently exhibited in the Council and at the Convocation.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th March, 1905.

A suggestion for Lord Curzon to resign his present appointment at an early date on account of his rupture with educated Indians.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th March, says :—Lord Curzon has been assiduously seeking to reverse the noble policy of the past, and to introduce principles of government which ought to be abhorrent to every worthy son of an English mother. But really, is even Lord Curzon equal to the task ? To pass some harmful legislation is one thing, to systematically do violence to the very genius of Englishmen—the genius of freedom—is a more difficult job.

* * * * * * * *

In a word, 'it is impossible to argue a man into slavery in the English language.' The task, then, that Lord Curzon has set himself is an impossible one. His ambition having accordingly to remain only a pious dream, it seems to be the part of prudence and wisdom that he should win his laurels elsewhere in a less difficult office. Is India so well off that she can afford to have a disappointed and ill-tempered politician for her Viceroy? And can it be pleasant to Lord Curzon personally that he should every now and then be obliged, in the honest pursuit of his own ideals which he firmly believes to be for the good of the empire but which the very basal principles of British Indian rule preclude him from successfully carrying out, to set himself in antagonism to the educated classes of the country who are the chosen of the nation? Therefore, as admirers of Lord Curzon's magnificent abilities which should be utilised to better purpose than to wound the national feeling of India and do her considerable material and moral injury that will last beyond his time, no less than as well-wishers of our own motherland and of British rule in India, we are compelled respectfully to beg of his Excellency to seek the earliest opportunity of relinquishing his present appointment.

The coming visit of the Prince of Wales to India, and need for prohibiting the Indian Chiefs from indulging in extravagant expenditure on the occasion.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th March 1905.

4. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 8th March is glad to learn that His Majesty the King-Emperor has, in consultation with the Government of India, decided that during the coming visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India there should be no exchange of ceremonial presents between their Royal Highnesses and the Indian Chiefs. It would be well if the practice of exchange of such presents were henceforth discontinued in the case of the Viceroy and other high officers also. The money which an Indian Chief generally spends in giving a present to a member of the royal family or to a high Government official is, however, not wasted, but simply passes from the possession of one to that of the other, while the large sums which he spends on fireworks, illuminations in honour of the visit of such a personage to his State are sheer waste, and Lord Curzon would do well to advise his friends, the Indian Chiefs, not to indulge in such extravagance on the occasion of the Prince of Wales' visit.

Increase in the military expenditure in India.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th March, 1905.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th March, says:—In the House of Commons Mr. Brodrick said he anticipated that the Indian Army expenditure would exceed the Budget estimate by more than a hundred lakhs, chiefly owing to the greater cost of the Tibet Mission and the outlay it had been decided to incur in connection with the reorganisation of the Indian Army.

Excess of military expenditure, which is already killing, of over a crore of rupees! Just think of it. There is no mistake that India is paying as dearly for its irresponsible Government as she could do. We should very much like to know whether such colossal financial wrong could ever be attempted in the case of any colony possessing a white population. Already the Indian peasantry are simply crushed by the enormously excessive military expenditure, and in the teeth of continued public protests it is still coolly added to. If there be anything like justice or humanity in the Government of one nation by another, all this 100 lakhs and more should be borne by England; for, at present India pays much more than her fair share of the burden of the empire—the empire of which she is only the outhouse—and she is in addition far too poor to pay more. But damn justice, damn humanity, the nation of shop-keepers do not care to be high-minded, do not mind being mean, if it is a question of pounds and shillings. Oh, when will the conscience of England awake and assert itself?

Complaint regarding defective sanitation, &c., at Aligarh.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th March, says :—A correspondent from Aligarh sends us a long letter about the defective sanitation of that place which has made Aligarh, which was once considered a sanitarium, an unhealthy station. Defective lighting and bad roads add to the miseries of the people. The writer further complains that the water spouts of private houses are also a source of great inconvenience.

ZINDA DIL,
February, 1905.

Complaint regarding the shikasta Urdu handwriting and a certain Urdu book included in the curriculum of lower school classes in the United Provinces.

7. The Zinda Dil (Cawnpore), for February, referring to the Urdu courses of studies prescribed for lower school classes in the United Provinces, says that the inclusion of the shikasta (broken or running) handwriting in the curriculum is certainly absurd. It is not only calculated to waste a good deal of time, but to spoil the boys' handwriting for ever, which will be good neither for them nor for the courts where that sort of handwriting is much in vogue at present. Similarly, the language of the book called the Bahâristán, which is prescribed for one of the lower classes, is old Urdu and too difficult for boys of 10 or 11 years of age, and had better be eschewed from the curriculum.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th March, 1905.

A suggestion to the Senate of the Allahabad University for throwing open its meetings to the public.

8. The Indian People (Allahabâd), of the 5th March, says :—The public will be interested to learn that in reply to our letter requesting him to send us the Agenda of the next meeting of the Senate and a card of admission thereto for the purpose of reporting the proceedings in these columns, the Registrar of the Allahabad University has stated 'that meetings of this University are not open to the public.' We believe that this reply was given in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate passed as soon as the University was founded seventeen years ago, not to admit reporters to its meetings. As we stated in our last issue, as also in our letter to the Registrar, the meetings of the Calcutta, Bombay and Madras Senates have always been thrown open to the public, and the proceedings are regularly reported in the local press. Why a different procedure should be followed by our University authorities is inexplicable to us. The Senate does not discuss and decide delicate political problems which the public interest may require should be done in secret. The educational questions that it deliberates upon could have, at any rate ought to have, no official secrets that should not be revealed to the public. There could be nothing to conceal therein, and to hold the meetings behind the purdah seems to us to be as unnecessary as it is undesirable from any point of view. The policy of concealment leads to suspicion and misunderstanding where there may be no ground for such. In any case the old resolution of the Senate is anachronistic, and ought to be repealed at once.

If it is always desirable that the public should be kept fully informed of the doings of the Senate, it is particularly necessary now, when the education question has been pushed into the forefront of all public questions by the recent educational policy of Government. Under the new Act the governing bodies of the Universities have been too much officialised and the new rules of affiliation and disaffiliation of colleges, and even schools, will presumably be of such a stringent character that too much care and vigilance cannot be exercised to see that they will be worked cautiously and sympathetically. These considerations will, we trust, weigh with the Vice-Chancellor and other University authorities in deciding the question, and if necessary the Senate itself must pass a resolution that its meetings shall henceforth be open to the public. If no inconvenience has been felt in Calcutta, Bombay and Madras by following this policy, what objection could there be to Allahabad doing likewise ? It is not necessary to say more at present than to express the hope that the representation we mean to submit to the Vice-Chancellor will be favourably considered by the honourable and learned gentleman.

ZINDA DIL,
February,
1905.

Poverty of the Indians alleged to be the main cause of their present miseries.

9. The Zinda Dil (Cawnpore), for February, in continuation of the extracts, reproduced in a previous issue from the pamphlet called the Pareshâni-i-Hind (vide article No. 4, page 79 of the "Selections" for 1905), publishes some more extracts from the same. In these extracts the writer, making copious quotations from the histories of the earlier period of the Muhammadan invasions and rule in India, to show that this country was immensely rich in those days, says that the Indians have for some years past been growing poorer and poorer, and that many of their present miseries, physical weakness, want of employment, decadence of industries and arts, excessive litigation and crime among them, &c., are mainly due to their abject poverty.

AL BASHIR,
7th March,
1905.

Alleged issue of a circular by the Local Government prohibiting the employment of Bengalis in the public offices of the United Provinces.

10. Al Bashir (Etáwah), of the 7th March, says that the native papers of Bengal are crying out against a circular the Local Government is alleged to have issued prohibiting the employment of Bengalis in the public offices of the United Provinces. If the allegation be well founded, the inhabitants of the United Provinces should be thankful to the Local Government than otherwise; for when the people of these Provinces do not receive Government appointments in other provinces, it is unfair to the former that the men of other provinces should be given employment in the public offices in these Provinces.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Comments on an advertisement of the Government Telegraph Department inviting only European and Eurasian candidates for employment as signallers.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th March, says:—The following advertisement has appeared in some of the Anglo-Indian newspapers:—

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

European and Eurasian candidates for appointments in the General Service Signalling Establishment of the Government Telegraph Department are required. They should be over 16 and under 20 years of age and be able to produce certificates of age and character. Whilst under training they will receive an allowance of Rs. 20 per mensem as probationers. Pay, initial Rs. 40 per mensem, rising to Rs. 195 per mensem by grade and annual increment. For further particulars, apply to Chief Superintendent, Traffic Branch, Government Telegraph Department, Calcutta. Also Qualified Non-Departmental Signallers are required for temporary service in the Telegraph Department. Pay will be at the rate of from one to two rupees per diem according to proficiency in Signalling. For further particulars, apply to Chief Superintendent, Traffic Branch, Government Telegraph Department, Calcutta.

This is another of the many instances of 'unexampled liberality' to Indians, and of faithful observance of the Queen's Proclamation that Lord Curzon's Government have been giving the world!

HINDOSTHAN,
1st March, 1905.

The Hindosthán on the debate on the Universities Validation Bill.

12. The English Hindosthán (Kálákankar), of the 1st March, referring to the debate in the Viceroy's Legislative Council on the occasion of the passing of the Universities Validation Bill, says:—Lord Curzon told his audience that the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale was very eloquent in his tirade against the Government on that day. But would he turn his attention to the attitude of his friends, and was he sure that a disinterested love of education was at the bottom of their action in this matter? There are, His Excellency continued, a certain class of opponents of the Government who do not pretend their disinterestedness, but their object is, at first, to discredit the Universities which were created last year by the Government and to bring their work to a standstill. In the second place, they wish to have a new provincial syndicate election, and thus secure the election of such a syndicate as may be more in sympathy with them and more inimical to Government than the present members-elect.

It is impossible to resist the plain fact that the Professor's party attempted, as His Excellency the Viceroy says, to thwart at all hazards the measure adopted by Government, the significance of which does not bear out their love for education. What is worse still, the interested motive actuating them has been the enlisting of more supporters. Curiously enough, as if to exemplify the perversity of human nature, almost the entire educated community is in sympathy with almost every movement which is directed against Government. Mr. Gokhale and his friends would do well to remember that if the object of Government was to let us stagnate and remain ignorant, measures to promote the formation and foster the higher branches of University education would never have emanated from Government and become accomplished facts.

The fallacy, therefore, that Government views with awe the progress of the Indian people in education, and is anxious to check it, is a calumny by which no sane person is likely to be gulled.

The policy underlying innovations, if practical realization be aimed at, is leniency; and as the people begin to appreciate and comprehend better the subject-matter, more stringent rules and regulations are introduced for the better observance of the principles involved. We ought, therefore, to be imbued with the conviction that our Government, by introducing stringent rules and regulations, is doing us a good instead of bad service. To bring any grievance to the notice of our ma-bap is good policy; and a homely simile may be pointed in the fact that a child does not get its milk unless it cries for it. But to attribute, on the other hand, any sinister motive to the Government is the worst form of disloyalty unworthy of any true British Indian subject.

We would, in conclusion, impress upon our Indian Radicals that we lack, most lamentably so indeed, despite our self-assertive cocksureness and the self-assumed rôle of mentor and critic, the qualities and characteristics essential to weld the nation into a concrete and representative whole; and until, be it said, this great and all important desideratum—Unity and Strength—towards independent representation and reform—as understood, we may remark en passant, by Mr. Gokhale and his colleagues—is attained, the Forward and Progressive Party in Bengal may just as well bottle the exuberance of their verbosity and stupendous verbiage for a riper and more opportune occasion, for they are not surely so dense as not to feel the weight of their impotence and feebleness and the hopeless inutility of waging an absurd war with their superiors in an inane and barren effort to spread a malicious propaganda.

A suggestion for introducing an improvement in the special money-order form agriculturists are required to use in remitting land dues.

13. The Hindustâni (Lucknow), of the 8th March, publishes a communication in which the writer says that as the receipt, which a landholder receives at present from the Postal Department for the remittance of an instalment of land revenue he makes to a tahsíl, contains only the name of the tahsíl and the amount remitted, he cannot satisfy a tahsíl peon, by showing him this receipt, that he has already remitted the money, if the latter comes to realize the instalment in question, before he has received a formal receipt for the remittance from the tahsíl. To remedy this defect, the Postal Department may introduce a slight modification in the present form of money-order used in the remittance of land dues, providing therein sufficient space for the arz irsál (invoice) entries to be made in duplicate, so that when this form is presented, the Post Office may forward the invoice to its destination and deliver its counterpart, duly signed and stamped, to the remitter for his use in case of necessity, together with the usual money-order receipt which alone is at present given.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th March,
1905.

The Tibetan affair, the British Ministry, and the Government of India.

1. THE Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th March, says:—It is impossible adequately to thank the Manchester Guardian and the Daily News for the conspicuous service they have done to the cause of good government in India by their skilful and fearless analysis of the contents of the Tibet Blue-book lately published. This official publication reveals such hopeless and wilful divergence of views and aims between the Imperial and Indian Governments, such evident determination on the part of the Government of India to put on one side the instructions of the Imperial Government and pursue their own objective in the hope of extorting consent from their weak-kneed constitutional superiors, that would have been impossible with a Gladstone or Disraeli at the helm of affairs in England. It was an open secret several years ago that the eyes of the military mandarins of Simla were turned to Tibet, and it needed only a pushful Viceroy of aggressive instincts to give effect to their ambitious designs. This they found in Lord Curzon, who is a follower of the Imperialistic Mr. Chamberlain and a worshipper of Rudyard Kipling, and they proceeded about their business in their usual manner. But in spite of their expectations to the contrary, they found a rather too tough customer in Lord George Hamilton, who would not give way to Lord Curzon's importunate clamour without a struggle at any rate. The story of the differences between Simla and Whitehall, and of how the latter was at last overcome, was told in the first Tibet Blue-book issued about this time last year, and we need not recapitulate the doleful and unedifying controversy. Unfortunately we had not Lord Ripon or Mr. John Morley at the India Office, to tell Lord Curzon in the plainest of plain language, in the immortal words of Burke, that what was morally wrong could never be politically right; and Lord George Hamilton at last yielded to the stronger partner in the (mis-) government of India. But he curtailed the scope of the Simla mission of Maxims and rifles very much indeed, and stated definitely that the despatch of the mission should not lead to the permanent occupation of, or the establishment of a protectorate over any portion of Tibet, and also insisted that no political agent should be stationed anywhere in Tibet, at Lhasa or elsewhere. This restriction was never understanded of Lord Curzon, and to do His ambitious Lordship justice he never cared to conceal his chagrin, or to put up with the decision of the Imperial Government. With invincible logic his Excellency would seem to have argued with himself in this wise:—"A mission is an expedition of 'pacific penetration,' it is an entirely peaceful mission equipped with a few well-meaning soldiers and sepoys, and beneficent rifles and guns, and headed by a militant military political and a brigadier-general. Our object is none of righteousness, no element of justice enters into it. It is equally bad from a moral point of view whether an army of invasion enters only a portion or the whole of a foreign country. Then why stop half-way? The Imperial Government agreed to the despatch of the mission on account of pressure from my irrepressible self, they will also meekly agree to seeing the business through. My presence in England will be of assistance in getting the faint-hearts in the Cabinet to agree. True, they made a definite promise to Russia to go thus far and no farther, but what are promises worth when made by my veracious countrymen? Promises of like nature are always supposed to be made with a mental reservation, and accordingly are not binding. Promises have been broken before, and they will be broken in future, and who can tell if this is not meant to be one of them. Is not 'Arthur' credited with the serviceable and only clever definition of promise, that it need not be fulfilled except under compulsion? Moreover, is not Russia paralysed just at present, and what can she do? If once the thing is done and it will be of profit to our shop-keeping nation, we may be sure the decision will not be upset by his Majesty's Government—least of all by the inexperienced mediocrities who now constitute it. As for Parliament, am I not of opinion that Paliamentary interference is not welcome to us at Simla? And what for have I asked for a high sense of Parliamentary responsibility, if not for neglecting the affairs of India, for which not a shell is contributed by the British Exchequer? All things considered, then, I may with impunity throw the instructions of Downing Street into my capacious and ever obliging wastepaper basket, and ask Colonel Younghusband to be my accomplice in the congenial task of insubordination. So, go on, my peaceful missionaries, go the whole hog of it."

His Majesty's Government, however, meant business this time and insisted on their authority being respected. Uninfluenced by the pathetic appeal of the Simla missionary of the empire, Lord Lansdowne quietly repeated the assurance to the Russian Government in June 1904, 'that so long as no other Power endeavours to intervene in the affairs of Tibet, they will not attempt either to annex it, to establish a Protectorate over it, or in any way to control its internal administration.' This was on 2nd June 1904. But the Simla clique were bent as ever on achieving their own purpose regardless of the wishes of the Imperial Government. On the 26th June, after clearly knowing the contents of Lord Lansdowne's assurance to Russia quoted above, the Government of India asked Colonel Younghusband to ascertain what the Tibetans would have to say to the terms of a draft treaty sent by them, in which are embodied the following among other demands:—(1) the placing of a Resident at Lhasa should we desire it, or failing it, of one at Gyantse, 'with right, as occasion may require, of proceeding to Lhasa to discuss matters with the Tibetan officials or Amban. Reservation of our right to post agent at Lhasa, in the event of the Tibetan Government hereafter abandoning attitude of isolation towards European Powers, would be associated with demand for agent at Gyantse.' (2) 'Without British permission no arms to be manufactured or imported, and all fortified positions between the frontier and Lhasa, which might impede communication, to be destroyed.' The Secretary of State again remonstrated against cherishing inconveniently ambitious designs. On the 6th July he telegraphed to the Government of India to say that (1) 'neither at Lhasa nor elsewhere is Resident to be demanded;' and (2) the occupation of Chumbi Valley to continue only 'till the payment of the indemnity shall have been completed, or the marts opened effectively for the space of three years, whichever is the latest.' This was too little a demand to make, in the opinion of Simla, and on the 11th July the Viceroy suggested that these conditions did not meet the whole case. Two days later, he in a further telegraphic message told the Secretary of State, 'Younghusband asks that provision authorising trade agent at Gyantse to proceed when necessary to Lhasa, should be included in convention.' The desirability of the establishment of a permanent mission is again brought into strong relief here. The Government of India remark that it sees no reason to anticipate greater risk in placing a Resident at Lhasa than was incurred in sending a British representative in Khatmandu or Peking. They wind up by the threatening remark that 'the conduct of the Tibetans may render it impossible to carry out in its integrity the policy that has been laid down.' On the 26th July Mr. Brodrick addressing a telegram in reply to the Viceroy, repeated that 'neither at Lhasa nor elsewhere is Resident to be demanded,' and that the amount of the indemnity should not be more than 'will be within the power of the Tibetans to pay, by instalments, if necessary, spread over three years.' It is again repeated that the occupation of the Chumbi Valley 'will continue till the payment of the indemnity shall have been completed, or the marts opened effectively for the space of three years, whichever is the latest.'

The language could not easily have been more clear, and yet Colonel Younghusband, with the connivance of the Simla oligarchy, chose quietly to disobey instructions, and acted how he pleased. This if anything is a piece of deliberate insubordination which deserved a more real punishment than censure coupled with the title of K.C.I.E., while as both Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman and Lord Spencer said in Parliament, the censure must have been carried higher. The Government of India deserved severe censure at least as much as its self-willed servant. But the conduct of His Majesty's Government in the last stages of this woeful muddle was as halting as at any previous stage, and the Opposition Front Bench failed in the discharge of their own duty in not taking up an attitude of uncompromising hostility to the ignoble raid from the very outset. They ought to have followed the lead given by Lord Ripon in the House of Lords; instead, they strove to steer a middle course between Lord Rosebery and Sir Henry Fowler on one side, and Lords Ripon and Reay on the other, and the result was what alone could have been expected of the miserable imbecility which is often glorified by the name compromise. All have blundered from beginning to end, and the starving Indian ryot has been bled for their fault.

ADVOCATE,
12th March,
1905.

The Calcutta Corporation voting Rs. 20,000 for providing an address with a present to the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their coming visit to the Indian capital.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th March, says :—Then in the end, now at the start. Thus was protest provoked : then in favour of humanity, now in favour of legality. When a memorial was to be erected in honour of the visit of the late Duke of Avondale, His Majesty's eldest son, the people were for a leper asylum and the rulers for a statue. At the last meeting of the Calcutta Corporation Mr. Tremearne proposed that Rs. 20,000, four times of what was voted when the King-Emperor visited these shores, should be voted in the next budget for an address and present to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their visit to Calcutta. In spite of protest the motion has been carried. It may give rise to further complication. At the meeting and outside the idea prevailed that the Corporation had no power to grant any such expenditure. That good many members think so is proved by the fact that for presenting a souvenir to Lady Curzon the members subscribed the money among themselves. There was no reason for departing from this procedure. The Corporation had another reason for doing away with the portion of the motion in relation to the gift. The decision about the non-interchange of gifts between the Prince and Indian Ruling Chiefs might easily be applied to the present case.

ADVOCATE,
16th March,
1905.

The Advocate on the Calcutta public meeting held to protest against Lord Curzon's Convocation speech and general policy of administration.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th March, says :—We confess we had our own misgivings as to the propriety of holding a demonstration to enter an emphatic protest against the aspersions cast by Lord Curzon on our national character, and against his general domestic policy. This, not because we were behind any publicist in expressing our condemnation, but because, knowing as we do the state of public feeling, the condition of the public mind, we were afraid people in their excitement might say things which, having regard to the position which Lord Curzon holds in this country, might be undignified ; they might say things which might alienate the sympathy of the official and the non-official European community which we have secured to a great degree on account of Lord Curzon's blunders. But we are happy to say that all these misgivings have proved groundless, and Calcutta has risen equal to the occasion. It has entered its protest, not only on its own behalf but on that of the whole country, not of one community, but of all sections of the Indian community, in a manner quite in keeping with the dignity of the occasion. The leaders of public opinion in the metropolis have on a grave situation acquitted themselves in every way worthily, and we have every reason to feel proud of them. The protest meeting was called in the Town Hall, the historic walls of which had never witnessed a greater crowd than what assembled on Friday last. Every section of the community, Hindu, Muhammadan, Christian, was well represented. The aristocracy of Bengal was not present. It was essentially a meeting of the middle classes. So one need not be hard on the zamíndárs. Their heart was with the people, though they could not afford to run the risk of causing annoyance to Lord Curzon. But there was no need for any apprehension, as what was said on the back of Lord Curzon could very well be said before His Excellency. The absence of this or that class of the community cannot in any way diminish the significance of the demonstration. Six thousand persons, hundreds of whom were busy men who could not easily be gathered together in a busy city like Calcutta, were there. They felt that Lord Curzon had injured their feelings by casting aspersions on them and their forefathers, and they as loyal citizens had no other means open to them to express their feeling of helplessness and indignation than to record their protest in a public meeting against those aspersions and to lay it before the King-Emperor through His Imperial Majesty's Secretary of State for India. This they have done, and done in a beautiful way. The meeting was fortunate in having Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh, C.I E., as its President. Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh is a recognised leader of the Indian section of the Calcutta Bar. His ability, his independence and his towering intellect have won for him the respect and regard of his countrymen. He had been both in the Lieutenant-Governor and the Governor-General's Council, a nominated member of the Government. In both places he served the Government and his country in a distinguished manner. His speech which was the only speech made on the occasion is a statesmanlike utterance; it contains a manly protest against the reactionary policy of Lord Curzon. It was a written document, every word of which was weighed before it was uttered, and gave, in as moderate a manner as it was possible, an expression to the Indian feeling about Lord Curzon. We are not among those who believe that such demonstrations bring no good. The present one might not bring direct good. Lord Curzon will not perhaps recant. That according to bureaucrats will be an expression of weakness. But it will have its educational value. Lord Curzon has many ways to make amends. He can still improve his relations with those whom he has been called upon to rule. He says he loves India; India has got a place in his affection. It is unfortunate that his love should have been given expression to in a manner that alienated the sympathy and regard of those for whom he professes love. It is unfortunate that his "beloved fellow-subjects should begin to take him as an anti-Indian Viceroy who has no sympathy with their aspirations and wants to put them down with a strong hand. There is yet time to remove this feeling. He knows that the people have no ill-will towards him, better testimony of which he could not get than what he had in the last week. He can turnover a new leaf after the experience of the last few weeks. Two courses are open to him: He may yet defy Indian public opinion and thus further strain his relations with the people; he may yet adopt the conciliatory policy and thus prove true to the trust imposed upon him by the Sovereign. Let us pray that Lord Curzon will adopt the latter course, and the discontent created by his acts and words may give way to goodwill of Indians which is the first condition of successful administration.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th March,
1905.

The Indian People on the public meeting held at Calcutta protesting against Lord Curzon's Convocation speech, and general policy of administration.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th March, says:—Lord Curzon has our sincere pity. The anti-climax of his Indian career is really of the nature of a tragedy. If to Lord Curzon had been reserved the singular distinction of receiving a cordial welcome from the Indian National Congress when first he landed on India's shores to assume the Viceroyalty, and if the silken tie of sympathy and mutual goodwill that bound him to India's children further led a subsequent sitting of the National Congress to do him the still greater honour of thanking him for his services in a special resolution moved by India's greatest living orator, the misfortune, the unprecedented misfortune has also been his of being censured by a special public meeting attended by thousands of pained loyal citizens, under the presidency of one of the brightest ornaments of Indian society to whom political agitation has ever been foreign, in the very metropolis of the empire. As is evident from the resolution adopted by this meeting, Lord Curzon's Convocation address was not the whole cause but the immediate occasion of the demonstration. His Excellency acted contrary to every civilised principle of British rule in India when he destroyed local self-government in the metropolis by a stroke of his brilliant but impulsive, inexperienced and too rhetorical Viceregal pen; when he quite unnecessarily forged a new fetter for the press of India; when he officialised and Europeanised the governing bodies of Indian Universities, and allowed or inspired a policy of contracting the area of education; when he compromised the dignity and status of both the Legislative Council and the High Court by passing his utterly indefensible Validating Bill; when he sent an expedition to beyond the high mountains with the object of depriving a defenceless oriental people of their much prized independence; when he abolished the competitive examination for the partial recruitment of the Provincial Civil Service, thus earning, in the bitterly sarcastic language of Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh, the thanks of the idle young men of India; when he put forward what the late Chief Commissioner of Assam called the sinister scheme of cutting the great Bengali race in two; and so on, and so on. The public feeling had been sufficiently irritated by this accumulation of wrongs perpetrated by one whose professions had led to great expectations, when on the top of them all came the unfortunate Convocation address, which was the last straw on the camel's back. Political injustice is oftentimes tolerated by the resigned people of India who may meet it with a sigh and dismiss it with a shudder, but a people with their instincts, traditions and training are hardly ever disposed to put up with libels on their national character. Macaulay was in more respects than one a real benefactor of our countrymen, andy et his cowardly libel on the Bengalis has never been forgotten, and he is not still forgiven for it. When, therefore, a person in high authority not only wrongs a people by manifold injuries but deliberately insults them in addition, it is easily understood why the atmosphere is at once charged with electricity.

Herein is found the explanation of the gigantic demonstration held in the Town Hall of Calcutta on Friday evening. Of its unprecedented success it is unnecessary for us to say a word. The two leading Anglo-Indian dailies of Calcutta have done it for us in the passages which are extracted elsewhere. When the Englishman gives the description, it does, of the meeting, it is enough to say that Lord Curzon has successfully made himself much more unpopular than any of us imagined. In the first place, the presidency of Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh is itself of sad import for his Excellency. His description of himself we can imagine would not be welcome to His Lordship. Then look at his speech. We have read many a magnificent oration by consummate masters of style, we have admired many a declamation spiced with the choicest invective for its elegance of diction and the cleverness and skill with which the attack was driven home to a formidable antagonist, but such a performance as Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh's we confess we had not the fortune to come across. We can only describe it as superb and inimitable. Imperturbable temper and uncommon self-restraint, by the side of pungent irony, cutting sarcasm, convincing logic, a scorn of the vulgar tricks of the mere rhetorician (Viceregal or other), innuendo couched in language to which exception could not possibly be taken but which is on that account only the more agonising to its object—in the result what a crushing effect this pitiless analysis and exposure has on its victim. We had our doubt at first about the wisdom of limiting the speech-making to the President, but we gladly own that by dispersing without any more speeches after Dr. Rash Behari's unsurpassable performance, the organizers of the demonstration gave the crowning evidence of their wise and cautious statesmanship. The tribute the Statesman has paid them is well merited. Another noticeable feature of the meeting must be mentioned. Both Surendranath Banerji and Lalmohan Ghosh were there, but they were content to remain sympathetic spectators. The movers and seconders of the resolutions, even the formal ones, were nearly all men who had never actively identified themselves with the Congress, and men of considerable social eminence and individual worth.

Lord Curzon is the first Viceroy and Governor General of India during whose tenure a censure has been passed on the illustrious occupant of that most exalted office. The protest made by Calcutta will be followed up by similar demonstrations at Bombay and Madras, and for aught we know other capital cities may follow the example. In other words, the confidence of educated India, which is the rightful spokesman of the entire nation, in the head of the Indian Government is declared lost. Is it for the welfare of India, is it right of England, is it just to our gracious Sovereign whose representative in India that august functionary is, that that individual should voluntarily continue, or be suffered to remain, any longer as the Governor General and Viceroy ? It is inconsistent with the personal no less than the political self-respect of the functionary himself, while it will not certainly conduce to the promotion of more cordial relations between the ruling and ruled countries, that Lord Curzon should longer be India's Viceroy. The Calcutta meeting passed a resolution that its protest should be submitted to the Secretary of State for India, through whom our Sovereign and his Government speak to India. What will he do with the resolution? If Mr. Brodrick has the capacity to rise equal to the occasion, he will put himself in communication with the Prime Minister, and the latter will submit to his Majesty another gentleman's name to be sent out to Calcutta. But we hardly think there is such courageous statesmanship at Whitehall as to take this action.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th March,
1905.

A suggestion to Parliament to remove Lord Curzon from the Viceroyalty of India.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 16th March, says :—Will not the House of Commons be more profitably engaged in considering the anomalous position of Lord Curzon in India than that of his quondam Lieutenant Sir Antony MacDonnell at Dublin Castle ? We were at first rather inclined to think Sir Antony in the wrong, as it is certainly not compatible with the position of a permanent under-secretary to make himself even indirectly responsible for original schemes of policy independently of the Government, but we are now convinced on a perusal of the correspondence that passed between him and Mr. Wyndham that he was not in the wrong. The Chief Secretary has now been thrown to the wolves, and Parliament may leave the affair. But has it no duty to the people of India for whose good government it is ultimately responsible? With such outraged public feeling as exists in India about Lord Curzon's policy, ought not Parliament to demand of his Majesty's Government to provide for His Lordship elsewhere?

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
12th March,
1905.

Protest against the advertisement of the Government Telegraph Department inviting European and Eurasian candidates only for employment as signallers.

6. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 12th March, referring to the advertisement, published by the Government Telegraph Department, in some of the Anglo-Indian papers, inviting European and Eurasian candidates, and not Indians, for employment as signallers, says that it is very strange that Indians should not receive Government appointments in their own country. Are Indian youths not fit even to serve in the Telegraph Department? Englishmen are rulers of the country, and they should accord equal treatment to all classes, and not deal with Indians on the principle of "might is right," which is a most unfair, unjust and iniquitous doctrine: the wise rulers would be well-advised to steer clear of it.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th March,
1905.

Government of India's refusal to publish a statement showing all the new appointments with a salary of Rs. 5,000 a year and upwards, created since 1892.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th March, referring to the question the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale recently put in the Supreme Legislative Council asking for the publication of a return giving a list of all the new appointments with a salary of Rs. 5,000 a year and upwards, created by Government since 1892, and to the refusal of the Government of India to prepare the same on the ground that it would involve a very considerable amount of labour, says:—We do not think it unjust or uncharitable to suppose that the real reason for declining to supply the needed information is different. It must be owing to the apprehension that the revelation which the statement will contain will be the reverse of flattering to the Government. It may not after all support Lord Curzon's plea of 'unexampled liberality,' which in any event is an obvious exaggeration, and consequently is, according to the Viceregal Convocation preacher,—. The results of the statement published in 1892 were unsatisfactory enough. According to it, while there were 28,000 Europeans holding Government posts worth over Rs. 1,000 a year and drawing the total annual pay of 15½ crores of rupees, and 33 per cent. of these, who drew among themselves from Indian revenues six crores of rupees, were not resident in the country; there were only 17,000 Indians employed in the whole of the Empire on a pay of over Rs. 1,000 a year, and their total annual pay was only three crores of rupees. In other words the absentee Europeans actually drew from the revenues of this country more than double the whole amount of the whole salary of the whole of the Indians who were allowed to enter into the administration of their country on more than Rs. 1,000 a year. This revelation was startling enough in all conscience, but who knows if the Government of India are not afraid that the administration has been conducted in such a spirit since 1892 that in the year of grace 1905, they cannot, as Englishmen and as decent men, screw up courage to publish to the world the facts of the situation of to-day?

BHARAT JIWAN,

Suggestion for introducing pie post cards in place of the existing pice ones.

8. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 13th March, says now that the Postal authorities contemplate reducing the registration-fee from two to one anna, and carrying, for half an anna postage, letters weighing up to three quarters of a tola, instead of half a tola only as at present, it would probably be not amiss for the editor to press the suggestion, he made several times before, of introducing pie post cards (in place of the pice ones). If this suggestion be adopted, the writer has little doubt that it will swell the Government revenue in the Postal Department as largely as the introduction of pice post cards has done. It goes without saying that pie-cards will be used much more extensively by the people than the pice-cards are, and that even the poorer classes who number millions, and cannot afford to use pice post-cards, will find it within their means to use pie-cards for exchange of communications with their relatives, friends, &c. The editor therefore strongly recommends his suggestion to be favourably considered by Government on this occasion.

Certain predictions regarding His Majesty the King-Emperor, by an Indian astrologer.

9. The Pocket Akhbar (Agra), of the 28th February, says that, according to the predictions lately made by one Pandit Ram Narain, astrologer of Cawnpore, the year 1905 is not auspicious for His Majesty the King-Emperor; that the Prince of Wales will succeed to the throne in 1908, &c. Would that the predictions so far as they relate to His Majesty proved false, and God kept him safe and sound for a long time to come!

CITIZEN,
20th March,
1905.

Progress of Russo-Japanese war, an object lesson for the Indians.

1. THE Citizen (Allahabad), of the 20th March, says :—The strange quiet that prevailed for some days at the seat of war no doubt gave rise to the various rumours that reached us of negotiations of peace said to be in progress and to be concluded at no distant date. The present signal defeat of the Russians at the battle round Mukden, indeed, the most terrible that they have had to sustain since the war broke out, tells us that the lull was but one preceding the storm, and that the Russians have only recently fought their last fight, their energy being well nigh spent and their resources exhausted. The Power that has just been crushed by the little Asiatic island has hitherto been regarded, from the military point of view, as one of the greatest on earth. But both on land and sea has she been humbled by a number of exploits, which, even as France and Germany admit, have thrown all Western exploits into the shade. The splendid victories of Japan have struck the imagination of the whole of Europe, and we of India have peculiar reason to be proud of the various moral elements which the strength of Japan evinces. A sad contrast though the present state of things in India furnishes to that in Japan: Japan's rapid rise in the scale of nations teaches us not to give way to despondency, for the day may yet come when we too shall make an effort not to dissipate our national energy, but direct it to the organisation of achievements similar to theirs. For the present it is given us only to rejoice, to rejoice at the sight of our brother dictating terms to one of the greatest military Powers of the world. France has refused to make more advances of money to Russia, and it is now time for Russia to make in all sincerity overtures of peace to Japan.

'RASTGO,
February, 1905.

Alleged non-observance of the Parliamentary Act of 1833 and of Queen Victoria's Proclamation of 1858.

2. The Rástgo (Allahabad), for February, referring to the Parliamentary Statute (Government of India Act) of 1833, and to Queen Victoria's Proclamation of 1858, according to which no distinction of creed, colour, &c., should be made among the British subjects in India in filling up Government appointments, regrets that the provisions of these documents are not faithfully carried out. These documents are as precious a Charter for Indians as the Magna Charta, which the Englishmen extorted from their King John in 1215, is for them; and hence the former should value their Charter as highly as the latter do theirs. In the Proclamation Her late Majesty most solemnly gave pledges for equal treatment of all classes of her subjects, and India's salvation lies in their ungrudging fulfilment. The Indians should therefore use every constitutional means to get those pledges duly redeemed, and the British Government, too, on its own part, should be willing to give effect to them.

AL BASHIR,
14th March,
1905.

Al Bashír's* advice to the Musalmans to keep aloof from the agitation against Lord Curzon's Convocation speech.

3. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 14th March, observes that the agitation of the Congress press against Lord Curzon's recent Convocation speech is assuming undue proportions. In the declamations in which Lord Curzon's statements are contradicted, endeavour is, at the same time, made to prove the mendacity of Europeans in general, which cannot but tend to create hatred between the Eastern and Western nations. Efforts are also being made to hold public meetings in all (large) towns, in the country, to protest against Lord Curzon's said speech. All these things are calculated to do more harm than good to India, and the editor would, therefore, advise the Musalmans to keep aloof from the movement.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th March, 1905.

A public meeting to be held at Lahore to protest against Lord Curzon's Convocation speech at Calcutta.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th March, says :—A piece of good news comes from Lahore. We learn that a public meeting will be held there on or about the 22nd instant to protest against the historic Convocation sermon of the Viceregal padre. Will Allahabad not march abreast of her sister capitals?

EXPRESS,
23rd March,
1905.

Surplus in the budget, and a suggestion for reduction of certain taxes.

6. The Express (Lucknow), of the 23rd March, says:—It is believed that the accounts for the current financial year will close with a handsome surplus—the largest perhaps yet known. No one knows definitely how the money is going to be disposed of. The Military department, however, will probably absorb a good part of it. Large sums of money, it is stated, are likely to be placed at the disposal of various other departments of the public service in the shape of what are known as non-recurring grants. Among our countrymen of all classes who are in a position to understand the question, the feeling is general that these surpluses should first be used in reducing taxation which at present is very heavy. They hold that surpluses are no indication of the prosperity of the people, and that the level of taxation in India is much higher than it ought to be. In fact there are a number of taxes which were levied in an emergency, and it is only reasonable to hold that they should have been taken off the list when the finances of the country began to look up a bit.

Among the taxes levied were the income-tax, the enhancement of the salt duty, the reimposition of import duties with a countervailing excise on cotton goods manufactured in this country and the periodical enhancement of the land revenue of the State. The coinage of silver was temporarily stopped. This last measure while it brought considerable relief to Government and to those Europeans who make remittances to Europe had an injurious effect on the prosperity of the people of India. As Mr. Gokhale said, it largely depreciated the small savings in silver of millions and millions of our poor people. The year 1894-95 was the worst year from the point of view of exchange, the rupee having touched the lowest level, viz. 13*d.*—and even in that year the finances of India showed a surplus of 70 lakhs. The exchange began to rise every year until in 1898 it established itself at 16*d.*, and from that year large surpluses began to accrue.

About one-third of the net revenue of India is spent in England. What are known as Home charges now stand at 16 millions sterling or about 27 crores of rupees.

The suggestions regarding a further reduction in the salt duty, a reduction in the land revenue demand of the State in those provinces where the agriculturists have had a series of calamitous years and the abolition of the excise duties on cotton goods, have been pressed upon the attention of Government more than once by the newspapers; and we do not think the authorities can be unaware of their importance to the best interest of the country. The reduction made in the duty on salt two years ago was highly appreciated. Its further reduction will be a boon for which the country will feel deeply grateful. An impost on salt is a tax which presses heavily upon the poorest among the population of this country. It is not without its baneful influence on the agriculture of the country. Cattle constitute the wealth of an agricultural country like India, and any stinting of the supply of salt to them cannot but be harmful. It is the opinion of those who have studied this matter with some care that the duty on salt stands in the way of the cultivators giving their cattle this necessary ingredient of diet. If the Government of India do not see their way to doing away altogether with the duty on salt, they should reduce it at least 50 per cent. It has been shown again and again by various authorities that the land revenue assessment in most parts of India requires very considerable reduction. It presses upon the people very heavily at present. Mr. O'Conner, who was for nearly 20 years Director General of Statistics with the Government of India, has in a paper advocated a general reduction of 33 per cent. In his official capacity he had to study very carefully the agricultural and economic conditions of the country. He had at his disposal information of a very reliable and correct description, and there is no reason to dispute the conclusion he has arrived at. The agricultural classes of India's population have suffered the most on account of the artificial raising of the value of the rupee, and it is only just that the surplus now at the disposal of Government should be utilised to afford them relief.

There can be no two opinions as regards the soundness of the suggestion that the excise duty on cotton goods manufactured in India should be abolished. This is a matter regarding which European and Indian Public opinion is unanimous, the officials of Government being of the same opinion as their non-official fellow-subjects. The Chambers of Commerce in India have more than once supported the demand for abolition. As the coarse fabrics turned out by Indian Mills are consumed by poor classes this abolition must benefit them. The duty that is levied, though in the first instance is paid by the producer, must eventually fall on the consumers.

AL BASHIR,
14th March, 1905.

Objection taken to Macmillan's Geography Reader prescribed as a text book in English schools in the United Provinces.

7. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 14th March, in continuation of its previous article (vide article No. 11, page 349 of the United Provinces weekly "Selections" for 1904), regrets to say that the Educational Department of the United Provinces has made another attack on Islám by prescribing Macmillan's new Geographical Reader—Asia—as a text book for the VIII class in English schools. The following passage is to be found on page 234 of this book :— "Mecca is one of the oldest cities in Arabia and occupies a good position for a capital. In the centre of this city is the Kaaba or 'Cube' temple, the foundations of which date as far back as Muhammad, who made out that it had been built by Abraham. The famous Black Stone, which is kissed by all faithful believers, is in the south-east corner of the Cube, and close to it there is a sacred well, the stinking waters of which have been the cause of constant outbreaks of cholera." Is not the language in which the charge is brought against the Prophet very improper, and is not the holy well of Zamzam deprecated in very malicious and offensive terms, in the above passage ? Is it lawful to make such malicious attacks on the religious feelings of any section of His Majesty's subjects, and what reasons, if any, are there to prescribe such objectionable works as text-books in the public schools in India ? Surely the Muhammadan community in general, and the Central Standing Committee of the Muhammadan Educational Conference at Aligarh in particular, ought to take speedy steps to get the book in question removed from the school curriculum, or at least to get the objectionable passage expunged.

ADVOCATE,
19th March,
1905.

The Advocate's expectations from Lord Curzon's coming visit to Lucknow.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th March, says :—We hope during his short stay at Lucknow and Agra, Lord Curzon will fully avail himself of the opportunities that His Excellency gets of receiving first-hand information as to the agricultural condition of the provinces, particularly as to the immense loss inflicted on the agriculturists by the late frost. In preparing estimates of revenue for the coming year, the Government of India will, we dare say, make moderate estimates, and take into consideration the amount which the Government, to save the tenantry from ruin, will have to remit. We hope by the time Lord Curzon visits Lucknow, estimates for the whole province will be ready, and we trust His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor will secure the full measure of His Excellency's sympathy with the distressed tenants. While on the spot His Excellency may be able to find out the amount of injury done by the rains to the crops, and make his own estimate as to the share which the Government should suffer along with the people in their dreadful loss.

While in Lucknow His Excellency will, we trust, pay a visit to the Colvin Institute. In Badshahbág, where it is proposed to build a hostel in connection with the Canning College, the Supreme Government may encourage the idea of erecting a new building for the Canning College. When His Excellency sees the young men of old aristocratic families of Oudh on horse-back—who may go to escort him from the railway station to the Government House—he may be induced to consider if the time has not come when the doors of the cadet corps may be thrown open to them by which some of them may be given a chance to gratify their military ambition. We do not think that the ruling Chiefs will object to their relations mixing with the sons of Taluqdars who in late years had a greater responsibility to discharge or held even greater rank in the eyes of the State. We hope no caste feeling will be allowed to stand in the way of the ambition of young Taluqdars and territorial landholders of these provinces from being gratified. We do not know how the great question of the seat of Government will be decided by His Excellency or his successor. But apart from the general question which has yet to be decided, there is the scheme of expansion of Lucknow in which His Excellency's sanction is necessary. We may hope that the scheme now matured by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor will receive His Excellency's support. Lucknow is soon advancing to supply the place of winter residences for the inhabitants of Naini Tal, Mussoorie, Dehra and other hill stations, of (permanent residence for) poor Europeans who cannot after retirement think of settling outside India. As such its scheme of expansion has some claims on Imperial funds. We expect much good from the short visit of Lord Curzon to Lucknow. Let us hope our expectations will be fulfilled.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th March, 1905.

Large increase in the "miscellaneous appointments" made during Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty, and the Indians.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th March, says:—We will give a solitary instance of the anti-Indian spirit by which the Government of India under Lord Curzon has been pervaded. What are called 'miscellaneous appointments' have been raised in number from 14 to 32 in the course of the present Viceroyalty. The newly created places include those of Director-General of Education; Director-General of Indian Medical Service and Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India; Secretary to the Director-General; Civil Surgeon, Simla; Joint Civil Surgeon, Simla; First Assistant to Meteorological Reporter; Assistant Reporter on Economic Products; Cryptogamic Botanist; Government Entomologist; Inspector-General of Agriculture; Inspector-General of the Civil Veterinary Department; Superintendent of the Natural History Section of the Indian Museum; Deputy Superintendent to the same; Curator, Indian Section; Director-General of Archæology; Chief Inspector of Mines; two Inspectors of Mines; Superintendent of Linguistic Survey; Chief Inspector of Explosives; Librarian, Imperial Library, Calcutta; Editor of the 'Imperial Gazetteer for India;' Administrator-General of Bengal; and Deputy Administrator-General of Bengal. Will it be believed, during the reign of 'unexampled liberality,' not a single one of these appointments has fallen to a son of the soil? Well may Lord Curzon's Government shrink from the ordeal of having to face the music of public criticism consequent on the publication of a return—the one asked for by Mr. Gokhale—which will reveal many unpleasant realities.

KHICHRI SAMACHAR,
18th March, 1905.

A suggestion to the Maharaja of Benares to appoint a European to be the Diwán of his estate.

10. The Khichri Samáchár (Mirzapur), of the 18th March, advises the Maharaja of Benares to apply to the Government of India for the services of a European officer as Diwán (minister) of his estate; and says that if His Highness accepted this advice, it would be good both for him and for the Government.

HINDOSTHAN,
13th March, 1905.

A suggestion for bringing to book a certain man for administering some nostrum to a patient at Kalakankar.

11. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 13th March, referring to the recent outbreak of the plague at Kálákánkar, and to the deaths of a baker and his wife as first victims, says:—After the baker and his wife had died, a kahár boy died, his death being ascribed to a pill which was given to him by some old people, who believe in such nostrums.

As a matter of fact, there are in this Raj certain stereotyped remedies, such as for snake-bite and sannipát (delirium) which have hitherto been freely and indiscriminately distributed to patients: to be precise, we mean without any diagnosis of the case. For instance, if a man came and said so-and-so had been bitten by a snake, or had got sannipát, the man dispensing the medicines in question gave him certain doses of the specific to be administered to the patient without going to, or sending for him, (regardless) whether the patient died or survived. This practice was suppressed by the present Raja, who has established two dispensaries on his estate; but recourse to these quackeries is still persisted in by the old superstitious folk of the Raj, who, despite modern science, which they wot not and disregard, insist on going the way of their forbears.

When the boy died it was said that his was not a plague case, as his death was due to the effects of the pills which one Surju had given him at night when he got worse. When Surju was sent for, he had absconded. We trust, however, the Government will take notice of this fact, and deal with Surju for administering this medicine.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
30th March, 1905.

The present British Tory Government, and its special indulgence to Lord Curzon in matters relating to India.

1. THE Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th March, says:—We remarked the other day on the preposterous claim of the Tory party as the sole defenders of the constitution, when they are capable of feats like the appointment of a permanent Under-Secretary as the colleague and not the subordinate of his Parliamentary chief. Untenable at any time, this claim must appear as particularly audacious after the unconstitutional manner in which Lord Curzon was enabled to leave India last year and return to resume the Viceroyalty after a short holiday, and, further, after the way in which a mere private person as he was, he was allowed to look into confidential papers and advise His Majesty's Government on Indian questions when he was in England. Mr. Brodrick has admitted in replying to Mr. Swift MacNeill in Parliament, (1) that during Lord Curzon's stay in England His Majesty's Government were in frequent consultation with him on matters relating to India, including Tibet; (2) that many confidential communications were shown to him; (3) that it was only an official part that he did not take in the Government of India when he was not Viceroy; and (4) that Lord Curzon had thus been exceptionally treated as a privileged person even before he was formally reappointed. Defenders of the constitution, indeed!

INDIAN PEOPLE,
30th March, 1905.

Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty, and the Indian public opinion.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th March, says:—Is the conviction resistible, after a perusal of the Madras speeches, following close on Dr. Rash Behari Ghose's formidable indictment at the Calcutta meeting, that Lord Curzon is in rather a strange position as India's ruler and her Sovereign's representative? The Indian Press itself has spoken in no mistakable terms; but what is even of greater consequence is that it should have been thought necessary in the interest of the country and the empire alike to hold public demonstrations to express want of confidence in the head of the Government. One such vote in the House of Commons would put an end to an English administration. In India the position of affairs is no doubt different, but we venture to think it is more and more becoming a moral obligation on an Indian Viceroy either to govern in conformity with public opinion or to throw up his place if he could not conscientiously do so. Lord Curzon's own position in respect of Indian opinion is now only too well known, and that being what it is, His Lordship is expected to realize what is now demanded of him.

JAM-I-JAMSHED,
12th and 20th
March, 1905.

Stoppage of a hereditary allowance to one Humá-i-Tajdar Begam by the present Nawab of Rampur.

3. The Jám-i-Jamshed (Moradabad), in its combined issue of the 12th and 20th March, states that one Humá-i-Tájdár Begam, an aunt of the present ruling Chief of Rampur, is living in her old age in great distress and privation in muhalla Kisrole at Moradabad, His Highness having stopped, on some imaginary grounds, the hereditary allowance which she received from the State. She has been obliged to sell all her jewellery, &c. to gain her daily bread, but now she is unable to keep the wolf from the door. It is very hard indeed on this lady that she should have to starve, while so near a relative of hers as Nawab Hámid Ali Khan, is the ruler of Rampur. The Government should certainly enquire into the matter, and prevail on His Highness to restore the allowance to the poor Begam, so that she may end her days in comfort and peace.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
30th March, 1905.

Local Government's Orders re the remission and suspension of revenue on account of injury from frost in the United Provinces.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th March, referring to the recent Orders of the Local Government re the remission and suspension of revenue on account of injury from frost in the United Provinces, says:—The Lieutenant-Governor has rendered conspicuous public service by enunciating the right principles in a most important matter.

We enter more debateable ground, however, when it is stated that only four annas remission of revenue shall be granted for loss exceeding eight annas up to 10 annas, that only six annas remission of revenue shall be granted for loss exceeding 10 annas up to 12 annas, and only 10 annas remission of revenue for loss exceeding 12 annas. How can a man who has lost nearly his entire crop pay up six annas revenue? It is visible on the surface that the amount of remission sanctioned is less than adequate. May we hope that the decision of Government will be reconsidered on this point? We think this essential.

ADVOCATE,
30th March, 1905.

Satisfaction expressed at the Orders of the Local Government re remission and suspension of revenue in the United Provinces on account of injury from frost.

5. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th March, says:—The Government Orders issued on the subject of remission of revenue in districts affected by the late frost will, we hope, be read with a sense of great relief and appreciation. The action taken by the Local Government has been prompt and one which will at once relieve the distress caused by the late frost and will prepare tenants better to meet the dreadful loss to which they have been subjected. As justly observed in the Government Orders, the suspension of revenue will have given only temporary relief, while the burden of debt would have been like a millstone round the neck of the cultivators. Thanks to the broad-mindedness of Sir James LaTouche's Government and His Honour's deep sympathy with the poor and afflicted condition of the tenantry into which condition His Honor made a thorough enquiry, 45½ lakhs of rupees will be written off in the Revenue Roll, and the tenants saved from the necessity of going to the village banker. The well-to-do among the zamindars will no more be harassed to pay the penalty of being rich enough to meet the demands of the Government. Rich and poor alike among them shall have the benefit of the benevolence of the Government. The zamindars shall not be required to submit the list of cultivators whose rent they propose to remit. The Tahṣil Amla will not be asked to judge individual cases. Exacting zamindárs will not be given a chance to withhold remission from such of their tenants whom they think to be well able to pay their rent. For all these substantial measures of relief our grateful thanks are due to the Lieutenant-Governor and the Revenue Officials. As to the estimate of the loss as far as the Lucknow Division is concerned, we can speak from personal knowledge that the estimate is fair. We do not ourselves know if the loss in Rohilkhand district, besides Sháhjahánpur, has been so low as laid down in the Government letter. But whatever it might be, the principle laid down is fair: wherever the estimate is not correct it can be rectified by proper representation. The Government by laying down that it shall remit a portion of the rent has enabled tenantry to meet the adversity in as good a manner as it is possible for it.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th March,
1905.

The Indian People on the Resolution of the Government of India on the Report of the Police Commission.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th March, says:—The Resolution of the Government of India in the Home Department, on the Report of the Indian Police Commission, 1902-03, appears in the Gazette of India, dated the 21st of March 1905. We are told "the Report of the Commission was signed on the 30th May 1903, seven months and a half from the commencement of their laborious investigation." It is therefore at once apparent that the Resolution of the Government of India appears not a minute too soon. We look in vain for any explanation of the delay, we had almost said the unconscionably long delay, that has transpired in the promulgation of the verdict of the Government of India. The boast of Lord Curzon's that he is always anxious to take the public into his confidence is once again dissipated into nothingness when we remember that not only has the Resolution appeared with much tardiness, but that the Report itself has been jealously withheld from the public till the very last moment. Public opinion has clamoured in vain during all this time for an early publication of the Report; but it has been kept within the pigeon-holes of the Secretariat with a care and caution which has been known to fail only once—and that in the case of the Times, which, superior to the threats of the Official Secrets Act, gave the public some glimpse of it last year, as if the Report did not immediately concern the people, as if it contained the achievements of Western diplomacy with some foreign Eastern potentate. The fact stands out in bold relief that in this matter, as in so many others, public opinion has been treated with that scorn which has during recent years so much characterised the ways of the Government. Lord

Curzon's Government have inaugurated the inexcusable practice of withholding the reports of commissions of inquiry from the public until the Government have made up their mind on the recommendations contained therein, i.e., until public discussion is rendered futile; and this mischievous procedure cannot be too strongly deprecated. In the present instance, is it entirely hopeless to discover the reason for this? We think not. Underneath the heavy crust of official phraseology, it is not impossible to find traces of that reason. The internal evidence contained in the Resolution, howsoever artfully concealed by the language of official reserve, becomes at places palpable. For instance, we read at one place, 'As to the European officers, many of whom (the italics are ours) are admirable servants of Government, and even in cases when the disparaging remarks of the Commission may be held (the italics again are ours) to apply, it may be pointed out that their deficiencies have been due in the main to the careless fashion in which young men were appointed before the present system of recruitment was introduced.' This forced and unpleasant admission is qualified by the remark which precedes it. For we are told that 'its traditions (the traditions of the Department) are native, and, it may be added, so are the traditional beliefs regarding it.' At another place we read the following sentence: 'By picking out and massing together all the separate plots which at various times disfigure police work in India, the Commission have produced a picture which would, in the opinion of the Governor-General in Council, give to any outside observer a somewhat over-coloured idea of the ordinary conduct of a police inquiry or of the habitual behaviour of the police, at any rate in the majority of Indian provinces.' But an attempt is made in the very next sentence to soften down the effect of this over-colouring by saying that 'it seems to him (the Governor General in Council) that the Commission have perhaps hardly made sufficient allowance for the tendency of the Indian witness to exaggerate, especially when he has a genuine grievance.' And as if the Indian character had not been sufficiently condemned to serve as an apology for the inevitable evils incidental to the Department, we are reminded that 'the giving and taking of money, whether mere gratuities or something more serious, is still traditional among the Indian people, and quite as much so among the givers as among the takers; and is objected to only when it exceeds certain recognized limits, and becomes injurious and excessive.' Then we come across a few sentences which are quite significant. 'But', says the Resolution, 'whatever view may be taken of the subject-matter of this chapter (ch. II), whether it be regarded as a summary of popular opinion or a deliberate expression of conclusions arrived at, the Governor-General in Council has no hesitation in giving publicity to the Commission's statement of the case. The agency which is exposed and censured is in the main an indigenous agency, its shortcomings are by none more freely denounced than by the inhabitants of India themselves; the picture itself brings out the difficulty of the task of governing India, arising from the nature of the instruments which it is necessary to employ; and the state of affairs now, unsatisfactory as it may be, represents an immense advance on that described in the report of the Commission which investigated the cases of police torture in Madras in 1855.' Well, if the agency which is exposed and censured is in the main an indigenous agency, why should the Government have had hesitation so far in giving publicity to the Commissioners' statement of the case? Has that hesitation been due to the Commission having indiscreetly denounced a portion of the foreign agency employed in the Department? Or, has it been due to the fact that in some respects the views submitted by the Commission failed to fit in with a pre-conceived or orthodox notion of the correctness of things? Or, has it been lastly due to a consciousness of the fact that the question of the reform of the Police resolves itself ultimately into the question of the separation of the Judicial and Executive functions of the Magistracy which is brushed aside by a simple though significant remark at the conclusion of the Resolution, that 'the reconstruction of the Police is, indeed, merely a step towards the improvement of the administration of criminal justice in India?' We hope we are not imputing ungenerous motives—of which we hear so much in these days of political piety—when we surmise that the Government have hesitated 'to give publicity' to the Report of the Commission, because suggestions have not invariably agreed with convenience or convictions in high quarters, because public criticism would have demanded another mode of treatment of the entire question than has been adopted in the Resolution.

On the general features of the Resolution we shall not waste many words. We can only express our profound regret that a subject of such vital importance as the reform of the Police—touching as it does the people so immediately—should have offered to the Government nothing better than an opportunity of indulging in the tritest commonplaces of official lucubrations, repetitions of hackneyed and time-worn observations, expressions of hopes and fears which have come to us as a heritage from a long array of governors and administrators. There is no attempt at laying down broad principles, no endeavour to construct a really practical and effective scheme of reform. It is a patchwork at best, and the patches are too glaring. Some increase in the salaries of the lower staff, a few additional posts to be created, and still more positions of emolument for Europeans—these seem to us to be the salient features of this long deferred Resolution. For this, it would seem, the Government hardly required the costly and cumbersome machinery of a peripatetic Commission. The same effect might have been obtained by a mere Resolution. But Commissions are the fashion of the day, and the Indian tax-payer must put up with them, even if he does not get an adequate return for his money.

ADVOCATE,
26th March, 1905.

The Advocate on the Resolution of the Government of India on the Police Commission's Report.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th March, says:—The Report of the Police Commission and the Resolution of the Government of India on it have been published. To the members of the Commission the country's thanks are due for the many reforms proposed by them, and to the Government of India for substantially accepting them. The increase in the number of village chaukidars, their freedom from subordination to the regular police, increase in the number of constables, improvement in their pay, increase in the number of Sub-Inspectors and facility in their promotion, reform in the mode of their recruitment, grant of horse and halting allowances to them, exemption of constables from contributions for their uniform, laying of educational qualifications in the case of Sub-Inspectors and the creation of new posts for Indians in the higher ranks, are reforms highly valuable in themselves, and Lord Curzon's Government deserves the hearty thanks of the country for accepting the suggestions meant to make the police service attractive, and to improve the status of the force. We are glad the Report is followed by a note of dissent from the Maharaja of Darbhanga. The Maharaja, while thanking his colleagues for the reforms proposed by them, has rendered a great public service in saying that in his opinion the administration by police cannot be improved without the separation of judicial from executive functions. Maharaja Sir Rameshwar Singh is right in asking that a number of higher appointments in the D. S. P. grade should be reserved for Indians, and that all classes of people be allowed to compete for the posts by holding a simultaneous examination in England and India. This reform shall have to be carried out. In the meantime, we have every reason to feel grateful for what has been done. In ten years a better class of Indians will enter the Police service as Inspectors and Deputy Superintendents, and we trust that by honest work they shall be able to strengthen the claim now made that in the higher branches they should have a fair share. The pay of European officials has been raised, and it is a matter of satisfaction to learn that the service will in future be manned only by officers recruited from England, who are successful in a competitive examination, and will on arrival in India receive a special training in the Police Training Schools.

CITIZEN,
27th March, 1905.

The Citizen on the Resolution of the Government of India on the Report of the Police Commission.

8. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 27th March, says:—Elsewhere we reproduce the main features of the Resolution of the Government of India on the much needed reforms advocated by the Police Commission in their report, which the Government characterise as an admirable and valuable piece of work. Chapter II of the report appears to have in an uncompromising and irrefutable method proceeded to show how every official act or enquiry of the head constable, the sub-inspector, and even the Inspector, affords the policeman a safe and fitting occasion to make fresh exactions; how even respectable men of a town or village are bullied by him; and why he is regarded as the constant terror of all decent men in the land. Lord Curzon, however, in criticising this chapter, by virtue of the power inherent in him of rendering any act or omission valid or invalid at will, invalidates all arguments of the Commissioners in support of their charges. His Lordship maintains that the views expressed by the Commission are but an echo of popular views on the subject, and that even where they seem to have expressed a personal opinion, it can hardly be regarded to be independent and uninfluenced. His Lordship's consolation is that, even if the censure passed on the members of the Indian police is deserving of any attention, it must be remembered that it has been directed against only the Indian members, and the Indian, on His Lordship's own showing is hopelessly corrupt. The scheme of reform as originally recommended by the Commission would involve an expenditure of 44 lakhs a year, but modified proposals would cost ten lakhs less. The financial state of Government, though represented to be highly prosperous, would not admit of the total expenditure recommended being incurred at once. With a view to effecting a radical change in the habits and manners of the Indian police, so that the members may cease to be represented as ruffians of the deepest dye and come to be regarded as so many Gabriels rendering duteous service to the State, the reform that the Government contemplate introducing as early as may be possible is to raise the pay of constables who have served for three years by one rupee, and that of sub-inspectors to Rs. 50. This increment and the appointment of a number of additional sub-inspectors, so that one may be posted to each station, will, it is hoped, bring about the millenium. We need hardly refer to the reform that the Government regards as most urgent. Considering that it is in reference to a branch that has a semblance of the military force and that may at any moment be required to come to the rescue of the Empire, Government has wisely given precedence to the reform of the armed police reserves. The pay and position of these men are to be improved first and then those of the constable and the sub-inspector. The pay of European constables and sergeants will be Rs. 90 to begin with. Assistant Superintendents, whose pay will be Rs. 300—500, will generally come from England, but will have to remain at a training school in India, for at least 18 months. Surely, there is a proposal to create a Provincial Police Service to be filled by natives of India, who will be known as Deputy Superintendents, and who may eventually rise to the post of District Superintendent drawing Rs. 600 to Rs. 900 in four classes. We do not object that the salary of the European District Superintendent will be Rs. 700 rising to Rs. 1,200. But what we fear is that the Provincial Police Service too under the administration of narrow-minded Governors, will in time come to be reserved mostly for Europeans: for are not Europeans born in India "statutory natives?"

ADVOCATE,
30th March, 1905.

The Government of India's Resolution on the Police Commission Report, and the recruitment of the higher branches of the Police Service.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow,) of the 30th March, says:—The only outcome of the Police Commission which will cause some disappointment in Indians is that the higher branches of the service will still remain closed to them. The policy of the Government of India that higher branches of all services should be exclusively manned by Europeans has been extended to this service also. In the Education Department to the Indian Service the admission of Indians is almost impossible; a few can get in by recommendation. So it will be in the higher branches of the Police Service. If simultaneously the would-be D. S. Ps. could not be examined both in England and India, at least the Police Service Examination, like the Civil Service, could be thrown open both to Indians and Europeans. We would have been satisfied had the youth of the country been allowed to enter into the higher branches of the Police Service by passing the test in England. But this has not been done. We are, however, glad to note that the Government of India has made it impossible for the failures of other branches to enter into the Police Service. It will be no more a resort for the brothers and brothers-in-law of Anglo-Indians. The Government of India will sanction recommendation of the Local Government for direct appointments only in exceptional cases. And in making direct appointments we trust the claims of the sons of the soil will not be forgotten. Anyhow the disappointment caused by closing the higher branches against the natives of the soil has been partially compensated by the creation of the new office of Deputy Superintendents. If a proper selection of officers be made, if, as now in the case of Deputy Collectors, the Government insists on certain general educational qualifications, the Deputy Superintendents, after ten to fifteen years' service, may furnish good material from which the District Superintendents could be drawn. What the Government of India have evaded to do now, it shall be forced by public opinion of the country to concede ten years hence. Every case in which a tried and thoroughly capable Deputy Superintendent will be superseded by the Assistant Superintendent recruited from England will rouse heart-burning of the officers superseded and indignation of the country. The Government of India by not facing the question now has simply given occasion to the people to keep up the agitation, and we hope that in the course of the next ten years, by which time let us hope we shall forget the present reactionary spirit in which the administration is carried on, we shall have the reform which has been denied to us now.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th March, 1905.

The Indian Financial Statement, and the Excise Revenue.

10. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th March, says:—We read as follows in paragraph 11 of the Financial Statement:—

> Under Excise, an increase of 10½ lakhs over the actuals of 1903-1904 was taken in the Budget, but this will be exceeded by Rs. 37,79,000. Every Province has exceeded the estimate, except Burma (where the decrease is nominal), the increase being greatest in Bombay, Madras, the Central Provinces and Berar. This branch of the administration demands, and is receiving, the constant attention of Government. Fluctuations from one year to the next afford no sure ground for any general conclusions, but if the facts relating to a substantial period of time are examined they lend little colour to the belief that the habit of drinking is on the increase. The main cause of the growth of revenue from liquor is undoubtedly the higher rate of taxation now imposed upon it.

This opinion is not confirmed by the provincial reports on the excise administration. Everywhere we see that the consumption of intoxicants has disquietingly increased, and except in Bengal and the Central Provinces, we do not even witness any earnest effort at improving matters. Nor does the attitude of the Government of India on the Bengal Excise Bill, which has been welcomed as a sound piece of temperance legislation, induce the belief, notwithstanding the loud professions of Lord Curzon, that in the near future considerations of revenue will be subordinated to the need of putting down the drink evil as much as possible.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 30th March, 1905.

The Financial Statement of the Government of India, and the special grants made for education and District and Local Boards in the United Provinces.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th March, says:—While we are duly thankful that our province has been given a portion of the special education grant of 35 lakhs made in Mr. Baker's Budget, we shall be pardoned for our inability to think that full justice has been done to the United Provinces as compared with the other provinces. Bengal, Bombay and Madras have made relatively much greater educational progress than the United Provinces, and more is also being done to meet their educational needs by the respective provincial Governments than in the United Provinces. In these statements we have the full support of the Director of Public Instruction, who, to do him justice, has never been wanting in energy to press our claims on the attention of the Local Government. It might have been expected in the circumstances that the United Provinces would not get less money than her elder sisters, even if she would not be given more. As a matter of fact, however, she receives only six lakhs against Bengal's ten lakhs. We do not quarrel with Bengal's opportunities to make herself heard by the imperial gods; nor do we forget that Mr. Baker is a Bengal Civilian. But we cannot do less than express our sense of dissatisfaction at the scant justice that has been done to our neglected province. The same remark applies to the grant-in-aid of the funds of district and local boards. As well here as in the case of education, the needs of the United Provinces are greater, not less, than of Bengal or Madras, but we get only eight lakhs against Madras' 14 and Bengal's 12½.

ADVOCATE, 30th March, 1905.

Lord Kitchener's Army Redistribution Scheme, and its expenditure.

12. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th March, referring to Lord Kitchener's Army Redistribution Scheme, says:—This scheme recognises what Mr. Balfour said some months back, namely that the most vulnerable point in the British Empire was the Frontier, particularly N.-W. Frontier, of India. Be that what it may, it most effectively kills the cry for a reduction in the military expenditure under the Government of India. Both Lords Curzon and Kitchener proceed with the work of adding to the cost of Indian defence with a masterful hand and refuse to hear any protest, reasonable or unreasonable. It would, however, be going wide of the mark to say that the Russo-Japanese war has provoked this desire to increase the military charges. Long before the war broke out or was very near breaking out, Lord Curzon treated us from his place as President of the Supreme Legislative Council to something like a foreign policy for India which was meant to take cognizance of what might transpire in Arabia, Persia, Turkistan, Tibet and Siam, Beluchistan and Afghanistan having long ago come under British influence. It seemed as if Lord Curzon came in 1898 with instructions to stifle the cry for reduction in military expenditure so effectually raised and proved to the hilt by Congress men here and our friends in England, particularly the late lamented Mr. Caine.

* * * * * * * *

The scene conjured up is indeed glorious and enlivening to our rulers, redounding to their power of organisation and imagination. But what about the biped animal that toils and moils in the fields, or in the workshop, or in the factory or in the office, whose hard-earned money has to make the scene so bright and glorious? Military expenditure is going up by leaps and bounds, quite irrespective of the development of our resources. For the five years ending with the next the figures are in round numbers 25 crores and 79 lakhs, 28 crores and 23 lakhs, 29 crores and 26 lakhs, 33 crores and 3 lakhs, 33 crores and 35 lakhs respectively. This is something tremendous and not at all proportionate to the increase in revenue. One is really at a loss to know where this process of rise is going to stop. When the Redistribution Scheme is fully carried out, it will involve a considerable permanent addition to our military expenditure. Of this there is no doubt. But Mr. Baker cannot at present put forward an estimate of what this will amount to. The prospect is anything but encouraging.

CITIZEN,
27th March, 1905.

Recruitment of the clerical establishment in some public offices at Allahabad.

13. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 27th March, says:—Favouritism to the exclusion of legitimate claimants seems everywhere to be the order of the day. In our recent issues we have shown how in the office of the Inspector-General of the Railway Mail Service in India, the merits of capable men have been ignored and outsiders imported, whose main title to appointment is their complexion, by a degree or two fairer than that of those rejected. We have also shown that the Accountant-General of the United Provinces rides the same hobby horse, and how unsuccessfully he attempted to ride it of late. It is with pain and sorrow we note that even in the office of the Board of Revenue for these provinces, the authorities are swayed in their action by race prejudices. As an instance, we may cite that one Mr. Decosta, formerly belonging to the Secretariat and having his promotion stopped for reasons we do not choose to publish, has had his services transferred to the Board on a pay increased by Rs. 50 a month. The rumours that have reached us against the Board of Revenue are many and numerous. But we reserve their publication until we hear the announcement of the result of the competitive examination recently held there. We are, indeed, anxious to know how the post of Assistant Superintendent, that has fallen vacant, is to be disposed of.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
February, 1905.

A French writer's views on India under British rule.

1. THE Hindustán Review (Allahabad), for February, publishes in part a translation of one M. Filon, a French writer's views on India of to-day, in which he, at one place, says :—Mr. Bose estimates the annual income of the ryot as 33 shillings. Out of these 33 shillings, the State takes away 5. It is really with these five shillings wrested from the miserable starveling called the ryot that are kept going the grand entertainments and receptions of the Viceroy, the Commander-in-Chief, the Lord Chief Justice (sic), the Members of Council, and the officers of the Civil Service. It is the ryot who pays for their champagne, their stylish landaus, the laces of their wives, the wages of their Musalman butlers and Hindu valets. This man who is unable to feed his own children feeds a foreign army of occupation numbering 75,000 men. In the last year of the East India Company, the cost of maintaining a soldier in India had mounted up to £19 annually. The insane waste, which is the characteristic trait of the British administration, carried the figure, in twenty years, to the absurd sum of £79, which in its turn is, no doubt, already exceeded to-day. It is India who pays the cost of the little wars, which are often abominations of injustice and cruelty, that England takes care to maintain on her North-West frontier of India ; it is India—a detail which was quite unforeseen—who had to face the expenditure of the Egyptian war of 1882. They had created a famine fund to provide against a recurrence of the scarcity. When in 1897 they looked for this fund, they found an empty safe. Money destined to buy bread for starving natives had helped, by a turn which was doubly murderous, to kill the Afridis. Finally, it is again India who surrounds with comforts and luxury the old age of her former administrators, who return to England to pass there the evenings of their lives. All that with the five shillings of the ryot ; and whoever has once dined in one of those beautiful houses adjoining Hyde Park, where the Anglo-Indian usually makes his gorgeous retreat, has devoured a fraction, however infinitesimal, of that wonderful treasure made of accumulated human misery.

"We bleed India," Lord Salisbury one day exclaimed. Twenty years have passed since His Lordship made the utterance, and the bleeding still continues ; and Lord Salisbury has been in the ministry all the time. And I have nowhere heard it said that His Lordship passed very bad nights, and that the bleeding and enfeebled India was the cause of his troubled sleep. To bleed the labourer whose strength is our capital, since he works for our benefit—is it a humane policy, is it an intelligent policy either ? They say that the Spaniards have made a hell of Cuba, or the Turks of Armenia. May be ; but what is certain is that the English, in many respects, have made the people of India regret the Musalman domination. I do not make this remark, but it is the observation of Lord William Bentinck, whose competency or sincerity no one would call in question. A Hindu writer goes further : in his eyes, the English rule in India is worse than all the modes of primitive conquest, including the one which consisted in slaughtering all the adult males of the conquered nation, and in making the females concubines and the children slaves of the conquerors. The conqueror installed himself in the house and the bed of the vanquished, but little by little he submitted to the influences of his new surroundings and of the conquered race : he restored to circulation and the general wealth of the country all that he took before, like the rain-cloud which gives back to the earth the water absorbed by the rays of the sun. In the case of the English in India, nothing of the kind takes place. In place of an hour of pillage, we have a hundred and fifty years of systematic, graduated and progressive spoliation. Instead of the massacre after the battle, we see there a people condemned to die a slow death, confined in the Tower of Hunger, and—it is horrible to contemplate—the population in this prison house is always multiplying. A frightful mortality and a still more frightful birth-rate ! Will this really be the last word of the colony of exploitation ? Will it be the master-piece of the 'superior race,' which they always propose for our imitation ?

ZAMANAH,
February, 1905.

An appeal to Lord Curzon to avail himself of the present opportunity to ameliorate the condition of the people of India.

2. The Zamánah (Cawnpore), for February, publishes an open letter, addressed to Lord Curzon, from one Shiva Shambhu Sharma, in which the latter observes that vast changes have taken place in the British empire since the appointments of Lord Cornwallis and Lord Curzon as Viceroys of India. It is a matter for much chagrin that while Great Britain has attained the zenith of prosperity and glory during the last hundred years, India has lost whatever little position she still enjoyed, notwithstanding that she has been under the rule of the most powerful and successful nation. Lord Curzon is considered to be a most gifted and energetic Viceroy. The India Office is also entirely under his thumb, and the Prime Minister is his special friend; so that he is perfectly free to do what he pleases in India. But it is a thousand pities that instead of utilizing his present opportunity for raising the people of India from the state of slavery into which they have fallen for more than a thousand years past, he wishes to throw them still farther in the background, by following a retrograde policy. It passes one's comprehension how a man of such high intellect and talents as Lord Curzon has come to believe that Indians are not fit to perform the duties of a number of offices, and that his own countrymen alone are competent to hold them.

CITIZEN,
3rd April, 1905.

Suggestion for holding, in all chief towns in India, protest meetings against Lord Curzon's Calcutta Convocation speech and administration policy in general.

3. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 3rd April, says :—Calcutta and Madras have held meetings to protest against the Viceroy's Convocation speech and his reactionary policy and measures, and a similar meeting will be held this evening at Allahabad. This is as it should be. Out of evil cometh good. If the Convocation speech was an evil, out of it has come good in the form of a movement to enter protest against Lord Curzon's policy in general. There would not have been held these protest meetings, had not the strictures in the Convocation speech acted like the last straw on the camel's back. But this protest movement must not be a half-hearted, indifferent thing. This would naturally be so characterised, if the whole country did not join it. A protest meeting will soon be held in Bombay. But such meetings should also be held in Lahore, Allahabad and Nagpur, which are all provincial capital towns. But this will not be enough. There are other chief towns which are regarded as centres of thought and political enthusiasm, and where large numbers of educated men reside. There are such towns in every one of the provinces and presidencies. If Bombay holds a protest meeting, should Poona sit idle ? If Lahore comes forward to do its duty in the matter, should Delhi, Amritsar and Multan continue indifferent ? If Allahabad leads, must not Lucknow, Cawnpore, and Benares follow ? So with regard to other parts of the country. We have every faith in the good effect of such a unanimous and spirited protest. It may not be quite apparent, but yet it will be there. Such protest may not do away with the wrong done and evil wrought in the past, but it is sure to serve as a corrective for the future. But for that purpose, the protest movement should be as widespread and as unanimous as possible.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd April, 1905.

Protest against the proposed appointment of a Civilian as Chief Judge of the Chief Court in Lower Burma a second time.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd April, referring to the proposed appointment of a Civilian as Chief Judge of the Chief Court in Lower Burma a second time, says :—We will not remark here on the violation of a definite promise involved in the appointment of a Civilian to succeed a Civilian at Rangoon. Nor is it necessary to call attention to the scorn with which public opinion has been treated by a Government which wishes to be regarded as a power to be influenced, and which has a certain pious horror of being 'abused.' We wish to emphasise rather the departure from sound principle and established precedent alike that has been made during the present régime in appointing Civilians to places which ought to be always reserved for practising lawyers, barrister or vakil.

In this departure, and in the proposal to establish a city civil court in Calcutta, the Englishman sees a latent danger to the High Courts which are just now not in much favour with the Executive Government. The apprehension may have a foundation in fact, or may not have it; but considering the general tendency of Government in recent years, it behoves the entire public, European as well as Indian, to keep a jealous eye on every reactionary move of Government in judicial administration.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
2nd April, 1905.

The Government of India's Resolution on the Police Commission Report.

5. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 2nd April, complaining of the Government of India's delay in publishing the Police Commission Report, and of the issue of its Resolution thereon without first giving the public an opportunity to express their opinions on the recommendations of the Commission, gives a brief summary of the changes or reforms which the Government has decided to introduce in the Police Department, and says that one would think there was hardly any need for raising the salaries of the higher grades of the police service, the emoluments of those grades being already sufficiently high. Besides, the eighty lakhs of rupees, which the Government proposes to spend (by instalments) in improving the lower grades of the service is quite inadequate for the purpose. It is further to be regretted that the Government should have, as a rule, debarred Indians from higher appointments in the service, and thereby acted quite in contravention of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria's Proclamation of 1858.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd April, 1905.

The Financial Statement, and the revisions of land settlements.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd April, says :—We read in paragraph 15 of the Budget :—' We anticipate that the loss of Land Revenue which has occurred in the current year (as compared with the Budget) will be nearly, though not quite, made up by the revision of settlements and the bringing of new land under assessment, especially in Burma, Bengal and Madras.' Leaving, on one side, the assumption that the revision of settlements shall result in an enhancement—Mr. Baker knows the mind of Government and realizes that revisions are undertaken only with that motive—we submit it is an injustice to the ryots to continue these revised settlements now. The ryot has lately been hit hard not only by successive bad seasons, but by the results of currency ' reform.' He has to pay his tax in a coin of artificially enhanced value, which means a concealed increase in the amount of the assessment. He labours under the second disadvantage that the prices of his produce have fallen; under the third that his money-lender has been automatically benefited by the same reason ; under the fourth that the value of his silver savings has been considerably depreciated. These are strong reasons for a reduction in the assessment levied on him—at least to bring it down to its former level, even which was higher than is good for the individual, the community or the State. And it is this recommendation which the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale made in his Budget speech of last year as well as in his memorable speech at the Bombay Congress. The member for Bombay returned to the charge in his masterly Budget speech of Wednesday last with greater insistence than ever. The Calcutta Statesman, it may be added, has endorsed Mr. Gokhale's plea. Far from this being done, however, the Government coolly announce that they will push on with their own policy, and that it will be immediately so beneficial to them as to compensate for such loss of revenue as they have had to put up with on account of the bad seasons. In other words, they quietly take away (and knowingly) with the left hand what they have given with the right with much trumpeting.

CITIZEN,
3rd April, 1905.

The Indian Budget, and a suggestion for relieving the Indian tax-payer of a moiety of the military expenditure.

7. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 3rd April, says:—It has been announced with a flourish of imperial trumpets that the Government treasury is overflowing with gold and silver, and we are told that the authorities have in their hands a surplus of no less an amount than 523 lakhs of rupees. The news must have caused joy to many simple Indian folk, but we are sorry that we are not liberal-minded enough to participate in this rejoicing. The surplus of five crores and twenty-three lakhs sounds indeed cheering, but when we remember that the total revenue extorted from this poor country amounts to 125 crores and 15 lakhs, we find that there is enough reason to be sorry over such a state of things. Knowing, as we do, how deep the poverty of the masses is, how can we rejoice at the circumstance that a foreign Government, that permits a drain of many crores of rupees to its home beyond the ocean, has presented us with a budget for the coming year with a show of surplus? Budgets with a surplus are described by our rulers as "prosperity budgets," but judged from the people's point of view, they cannot deserve that high-sounding optimistic name. We shall be reasonably said to have a prosperity budget, only when we shall enjoy prosperity and have at the same time a budget showing a large surplus. But where, at this juncture, is there prosperity in the country? When millions of Indians have still to live from year's end to year's end on half rations, when a majority of the vast middle classes do not know how to make the two ends meet and have to stint themselves in many ways, and when the higher classes, in order to meet the many demands on their purse from the Government and for other reasons which can be removed only by the Government, have to run into debt and get ruinously involved in it, how can it be said that the country enjoys prosperity? All classes of people in British India, except the governing classes, are suffering from adversity, and not enjoying prosperity. In the face of this fact, this most undeniably unhappy state of things, it is idle for our Government to pass off any of its annual budgets with a surplus as a "prosperity" budget. If such a budget means prosperity, it is prosperity not of the people, or the land, but mere affluence of the coffers of an alien Government.

Thus we see that there is no connection whatever between surpluses and the people's prosperity. The Government seems to be anxious more for showing a surplus in its budget than to adopt measures that may tend to improve the condition of the people. The plain duty before the British Government in India is to reduce taxation, to secure perfect sanitation for the country, to extend education, making it free and even compulsory, to remove the causes of famine, to foster and improve indigenous industries, and, if in doing all this, it cannot find money enough to maintain the army it keeps in India, it should secure the amount it requires for the purpose from the treasury of the Government in England, for India is ruled by England not for the benefit of India alone but of England too. The possession of India makes Britain a great Imperial power in the world, and in return for this material advantage England must pay for the Indian Army to the extent needed by the circumstances of this country. If the resources of India are so enormously developed that she overflows with wealth, India may not demand from England the cost of her army, but so long as she is poor and half-starved, England must come to her aid. Under the present circumstances, the putting of the burden of her entire military expenditure on India's weak shoulders is an iniquity the enormity of which will have to be admitted by all men whose sense of justice has not been vitiated by prejudice. Thus it will be seen that in order to make the country prosperous, the method is not to overtax the people, and then to show a surplus in the annual accounts, but to reduce taxation and secure for the people the necessaries of life, by inducing the Government in England to contribute its share to the enormous military expenditure of India. It is a deliberate distortion of a clear fact to represent budgets with surpluses as proofs of our prosperity. Lord Curzon vaunts of a monopoly by the British of the highest ideal of truth, but if the description of budgets with surpluses as prosperity budgets be considered by the Government to be consonant with that ideal, every Impartial-minded man would regard the ideal as a very low one.

The Government has decided to make use of a portion of the surplus shown in the Budget for 1905-06 for purposes which it claims to be such as to confer signal benefits on the country. With the exception of the reduction of salt tax and abolition of famine cesses in some of the provinces, none of the measures to which the surplus is to be devoted will do real good to the country. On paper they make a rather good show, but in the hands of Anglo-Indian huzúrs, the proposed measures will only further the working of the ruinous reactionary policy which Lord Curzon has initiated. We have no desire to discuss them here in detail. If the Government of India is really desirous that India should prosper, the only way open to it is to reduce the military expenditure by half its present amount, or to induce England to pay the half of the amount if no reduction can be made, and then to begin the various Indian reforms which would really transform this land from an impoverished country to a prosperous one. If thirty-five (sic) crores of rupees—for that, we believe, will be half the amount of our present military expenditure—be annually spent for the betterment of the condition of the Indian people in the way approved by the people, in twenty-five years or so India may reach a condition which may truthfully be described as prosperous. If Lord Curzon has the noble ambition to make India prosperous, let him look to carrying out such a programme. His Lordship must know that he cannot hoodwink the Indian people by solemnly characterising his budgets with surpluses as prosperity budgets. Deep in the midst of adversity as we are, that false cry from the mouths of officials helps only to intensify the tragedy of our lot.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
February, 1905.

Suggestion to Government for taking steps to preserve the tomb of Zeb-un-Nisa, the celebrated daughter of Aurangzeb, at Lahore.

8. The Hindustán Review (Allahabad), for February, giving a brief account of the life of Zeb-un-Nisa, the celebrated poet-daughter of Emperor Aurangzeb, and referring to the neglected state in which her tomb lies at Lahore, says :—The zeal which recently characterized the Government of India under Lord Curzon in preserving ancient monuments, and rescuing places of religious or historic interest from uses for which they were not intended, raised hopes in some quarters that the tomb of the Poet-Princess of India will receive the attention of the Government ; but unfortunately it seems hitherto to have been forgotten. We believe, however, that the immense historic value of a tomb, which commemorates a lady of such remarkable intellectual powers, will not long fail to be recognised, and that steps will be taken to preserve what remains of it, before all trace of it is lost.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
6th April, 1905.

Protest against the proposed curtailment of plague expenditure in the United Provinces.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th April, referring to the question regarding expenditure on plague raised at the late debate on the annual Budget in the Viceregal Legislative Council, says :—We find that the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale urges the writing off of plague loans as irrecoverable in his part of the country. The same plea may be made for the municipal boards of these Provinces which have been hit so hard by plague. We confess we are nothing but amused when we read the Hon'ble Mr. Porter's complaint against the plague expenditure of our Provincial Government. Three lakhs, which was the sum provided in last year's Budget, was felt by most of us to be a mere bagatelle ; but this sum, according to Mr. Porter, is to be further reduced in the next Provincial Budget. We protest in anticipation against such ill-advised action. The necessity is rather that the Government should spend twice, if not thrice three lakhs on plague measures.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th April, 1905.

Protest against the Pioneer's wish for Lord Milner to succeed Lord Curzon.

1. THE Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th April, says:—Every friend of British rule, every well-wisher of India, every partizan of righteousness in international transactions, will devoutly pray that the wish of the Pioneer may remain unrealized that Lord Milner should succeed Lord Curzon. The people of India will only find themselves cast from the frying pan into the fire by a change from Curzon to Milner. The mere thought of its possibility is enough to unsettle the most composed mind.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 13th April, 1905.

Lord Curzon's foreign policy and internal administrative measures.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 13th April, says:—We think it desirable to briefly examine the record His Excellency the Viceroy gave of his achievements during the last seven years, particularly as the poor man's friend, in his Budget speech.

'The head of the Government may,' said Lord Curzon, 'by the manner in which he conducts the affairs of the country at large, and its foreign affairs in particular, exercise a considerable influence upon the scale of expenditure during his term of office.' The observation is perfectly true; and judging by this test we can have nothing but disapproval to bestow on the various measures of his foreign policy and his conduct of the affairs of the country generally. The principles by which he is guided in deciding the foreign policy of India are doubtful to a degree. He has convinced himself that Russia has designs on India, and that that empire should not be allowed peaceful penetration in Central Asia. He has his own idea of Great Britain's place in Asia, and to carry out that idea is a too costly job. It is none of India's business, we emphatically assert, to help in British aggression in Asia. It is not her purpose to contribute the cost of the military and diplomatic operations which are designed to deprive defenceless Asiatic peoples of their independence. It is not that an ambitious Imperialist of the Kipling-Chamberlain school might send a military invasion to Tibet and so-called diplomatic and commercial missions to Afghanistan and Persia, that the starving Indian peasant contributes the lion's share of the yield of his land to the State Exchequer in one or other of the numerous ways designed by a civilised revenue-wise Government. Lord Curzon has made himself directly responsible for much fruitless and unfair addition to our already crushing military expenditure by his aggressive policy, while he has also been instrumental in considerably increasing the cost of genreal administration by measures which are miscalled reforms, by the creation of fresh appointments for his own countrymen which are really costly sinecures, but which he loves to mistake for offerings in the shrine of the new goddess of efficiency. So far as his foreign policy and the imposition on India of fresh military burdens which are firstly England's, and only secondarily India's concern, are concerned, as well as on the question of the fresh appointments created, we cannot do better than ask the readers to carefully peruse that portion of the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale's masterly speech on the Budget and the tabular statements he appended to it.

This brings us to the remarks made by His Excellency on the services his Government have rendered in securing an equitable apportionment of financial burdens between India and England. Public memory looks back with satisfaction on that chapter of His Lordship's administration. But it is only too easy to exaggerate the character of those services, as well as to be a little unfair to previous administrations by the manner of exhibiting the little triumphs. Lord Curzon, for instance, spoke as if the principle that England should bear the entire cost of Indian troops borrowed for service outside were only now established, and that as a result of his Government's exertions. We have an impression that this is not the whole truth. It will be in the public recollection that in 1896, the Government in which he was then Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, borrowed Indian troops to serve in Suakim and that they imposed the ordinary charges of those troops on the revenues of India. It will be further remembered what gallant stand against the perpetration of this injustice was made by Lord Elgin's Government, and also how strenuously and uncompromisingly the Liberal party, headed by Lord Rosebery in the Upper and Mr. John Morley in the Lower House of Parliament, protested against it. The Government escaped defeat on that occasion by the skin of their teeth, more than fifty of their own followers having abstained from voting. The Government were certain to be defeated on that memorable occasion, if they did not make it a question of confidence. India did not get justice then, but the moral effect of the Government of India's attitude and of the position taken up by the Liberal party was such that they have never again attempted to repeat their mistake. It is to this chiefly, and then to the recommendations made by Lord Welby's Commission, and not to any heroic efforts that Lord Curzon's Government might have—secretly—made, that we, with our present information, are disposed to attribute the wisdom that has dawned even on the Tory Government. It is easy to prove how much Lord Curzon's Government have left undone in this vital matter of apportionment of expenditure between England and India which it was their duty to do, how much less they have actually done than what any of the preceding Governments had done or would have done. Almost every Viceroy without exception was vehemently protesting against the injustice of the present apportionment. Lord Northbrook never ceased to harp on this theme, Lord Ripon's Government went into the history of the whole subject and conclusively demonstrated that poor India was being bled at rich England's expense, and Lord Lansdowne's Government similarly appealed to the Imperial Government's sense of justice. Finance members like Sir Evelyn Baring and Sir Auckland Colvin, and Military members like Sir Henry Brackenbury, were of the identical opinion. May we ask Lord Curzon to produce the record of his Government on this subject? We fear it cannot be, for the best of reasons that it is non-existent. We do not know how Lord Curzon will view the question, but to our mind it is inconceivable that any previous Government of India would have refrained from urging a substantial contribution from the Imperial Exchequer towards the cost of an enterprise carried on beyond the high mountains like the Tibetan expedition, or towards a comprehensive scheme of military reorganization designed primarily in the Imperial interest as Lord Kitchener's scheme undoubtedly is. Unfortunately, the Viceregal tongue and pen, which descant with such surprising self-complacency on what heroic feats were performed to make England pay for the entertainment of her Coronation guests, do not condescend to say one word on these momentous problems of far-reaching consequences. It would have been decent and modest, to say no more, if Lord Curzon had been content to forego the supreme delight of self-laudation—in respect of this matter at least, if it is beyond His Lordship's power altogether to leave it to Sir Walter Lawrence and the Times of India to sing his praises.

It seemed from what he said, that in his own opinion the second great claim which Lord Curzon has established on the gratitude of the Indian millions rests on his method of disposal of the surpluses. 'It is in the disposal of surpluses', we quote His Excellency's words, 'that in my opinion, the responsibility of the head of the Government does most definitely come in. It is one of the first of his functions', we are told, 'in consultation with the Finance Minister and his colleagues, to consider the fair and equal distribution of the bounty which good fortune may have placed in their hands.' And Lord Curzon elaborately expanded the thesis that he had done all that was right and proper and necessary in this direction; interpolating the special remark that it is the masses, the voiceless poor, whom he has sought most to benefit. Of course all classes and sections of the people have had justice done to them; for, is it not the fact that 'honourable members can scarcely realise how anxiously year by year we have considered the claims of all those classes and persons and have endeavoured to apportion the relief equitably between them?' One should have thought that the money that fills the State treasury chests having been entirely contributed by the people and not having rained from heaven or been brought from England, any Government, with the least pretension to the title of a civilised Government, would necessarily deliberate in this sense without thinking it necessary to advertise the fact as a singular manifestation of justice and financial wisdom. But Lord Curzon is Lord Curzon, and it is perhaps too late for him to overcome his constitutional inability to maintain discreet silence on the claims of number one, and we shall let alone this consideration. What is more to the point is whether the Viceroy's claims to financial sanctity are well-founded, whether they are exaggerated, or whether they are chiefly of a fictitious character. To consider this point we have to examine the details kindly furnished by His Excellency himself at considerable length, and we are obliged to leave this consideration for another occasion.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th April, 1905.

The new agreement with the Amir of Kabul.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th April, says :—When will the agreement with the Amir of Afghanistan concluded by Mr. (perhaps he will become Sir Louis on June 26th) Dane at Kabul be published ? The people of India have no place in the economy of the British Empire, except as milch-cows, have no ambitions such as prompt the Imperialist mind, and are loath to be involved in shady political transactions which besides being immoral, cost them a good deal in money. And yet, by virtue of their total exclusion from the councils of their Government and their utter helplessness to effectively make themselves heard and respected, they are simply dragged at the chariot-wheel of rampant British Imperialism of the Chamberlain-Milner-Curzon type, and made to pay heavily out of their, by no means full, pockets, that one after another of the Asiatic kingdoms with which they naturally sympathize, may be subjugated by the diplomatic Western Powers. Is the Dane-Habibullah Kabul agreement part of this expensive and unrighteous game ?

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th April, 1905.

Government's attitude towards the Rolt case contrasted with that towards the Tilak case.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad,) of the 9th April, says :—Indian public opinion is only concerned that justice should be done at all times and under all circumstances, and distinctions of race and colour and creed are foreign to it. It was scandalized, not less than the Anglo-Indian press, at what seemed to be the gross injustice done to Mr. Rolt, whose case must be fresh in our readers' recollection, and remonstrated accordingly against the same. It rejoices that an impartial investigation has been made into his case under orders of the Bengal Government, and feels a sense of relief that he is found innocent of all the charges brought against him. It makes no complaint against, on the contrary it distinctly approves of, the liberal compensation of Rs. 15,000 paid to him from the public funds on account of the legal expenses he has incurred in his defence. So far so good.

But here it cannot help asking how the procedure followed by Government in the case of Mr. Rolt and its whole attitude towards him contrast with the treatment meted out to the Rolt of Poona by the Government of Bombay. This Rolt was more heartlessly persecuted than almost any other individual we can think of, and he has been put to incomparably more worry and much more expense. His character, too, was completely vindicated by his Majesty's High Court of Judicature. And yet, when that gentleman applied to the Government of Bombay and then to the Secretary of State for equitable compensation, the appeal was dismissed without compunction. And what may be the reason for this ? So far as the unsophisticated public could see, it is nothing more and nothing better than that he is an Indian and not a European, he bears an honourable political character which is repugnant to your close alien bureaucracy: he happens to bear the name of Tilak and not Rolt. This is the high crime and misdemeanour for being guilty of which Mr. Tilak is to be denied justice. And yet—and yet—, but perhaps the sentence had better remain uncompleted.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th April, 1905.

Complaints regarding the non-supply of advance copies of the budget, &c., to the press by the Legislative Council in the United Provinces.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th April, says :—The Amrita Bázár Patrika was complaining the other day of the delay in the publication of the Provincial Financial Statement, and the hurry with which the discussion thereon is rushed in the (Bengal Legislative) Council. A curious practice obtains in this province in this respect. The Budget is supplied to the honourable members of the Council but a very few days before it is taken up for so-called discussion ; but the Press is not supplied with copies till the very day of the discussion. In the other provinces the Press is supplied with copies along with the non-official members. Is it thought by Government out here that the public and the Press which represents them may be ignored with impunity? Another point calling for notice is that the agenda paper supplied to the Press here does not give the full list of questions that will be asked. It only says 'Questions will be answered.' The interpellations proposed to be answered in the Imperial and Bengal Legislative Councils are received in advance in the office of the Indian People; but till the questions are actually put and answered in the Council we remain without knowledge of them in our own province. We appeal to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor to revise the procedure we have been obliged to criticise.

ZUL-QARNAIN,
7th April,
1905.

The Police Commission Report.

6. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th April, says that the Police Commission Report is rather disappointing to the Indians. The greatest grievance of the public was regarding the oppression and corruption of the low-paid police constables, but no adequate steps have been taken to redress it. Another public complaint was that European District Superintendents of Police being generally ignorant of the language, manners and customs of the people, were not in touch with the latter. This defect is proposed to be removed by creating some new appointments of Deputy Superintendents of Police to be filled up by natives; but, if under this term, domiciled Europeans and Eurasians are to be included, the object of the reform will be altogether defeated, the latter keeping aloof from Indians, as non-domiciled Europeans do.

RAHBAR,
7th April,
1905.

Government of India's Resolution on the Police Commission Report.

7. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th April, in commenting upon the Police Commission Report and the Resolution of the Government of India thereon, regrets that while the Indians desired to see the hands of the police tied down (in certain respects), the Government is going to make them still more powerful. The principal duties of the police are to bring offenders to justice, and to protect the weak; but as the District Superintendents of Police are, as a rule, foreigners and unacquainted with the manners, customs, &c. of the people, they have mainly to depend upon their low-paid uneducated subordinates for the discharge of these duties, and the latter are extremely oppressive, tyrannical and corrupt. The real reform of the Police Department therefore lies in appointing educated, kind-hearted Indians, on good salaries, to the higher grades, and in the separation of judicial and executive functions, so that the magistrates who try cases sent up by the police may have nothing to fear from the complaints of District Superintendents of Police to District Magistrates, in case they pass judgments contrary to the wishes of the District Superintendents. But the object of appointing the Police Commission was not, it would seem, so much to improve the police as to secure more appointments for Europeans in the Police Department, and the Government of India was perhaps right in its aim; for otherwise what could be the resultant gain of England in conquering India? New appointments of Deputy Superintendents of Police are, it is true, to be created, and filled up by natives; but this only means that these men will have to discharge all the duties of District Superintendents, while the European incumbents will be simply sinecurists, drawing the fat salaries and taking the credit for the work. It is to be much regretted that during the régime of Lord Curzon, Indians have been excluded from the posts of District Superintendents also.

SAHIFA,
12th April,
1905.

A robbery committed on the road leading from the Shikohabad town to the railway station, district Mainpuri.

8. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 12th April, states that on the night of the 27th ultimo a number of passengers, who were proceeding, in ekkas, from Shikohabad to the railway station, which is about a mile and a half from the town, were attacked by robbers and relieved of their property worth about Rs. 2,000 on the way. There is a small police station with only one chaukidár, between the station and the town, and there are no arrangements whatever for lighting the roads. Surely the local authorities should take suitable steps to make the road safe for travellers at night.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th April, 1905.

A complaint against the Municipal Board, Benares.

9. The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th April, complains that though its proprietor offered to print all sorts of Municipal work, forms, &c., both in English and Urdu, at rates 5 per cent. lower than those tendered by any other local press, yet the Municipal Secretary, Benares, has not thought it fit to entertain the proprietor's application favourably. The chairman and the members of the Municipal Board should certainly see to the matter, and not let the Board refuse to accept a saving of 5 per cent. in their printing work, for no good reason. The health officer of the Board gets his office job printed at present at the Qádri Press, which is the property of Bakhshi Qádir Bakhsh, a member of the Board.

ADVOCATE, 13th April, 1905.

A suggestion to the Local Government for making an inquiry into the affairs of the Municipal Board, Shahabad, district Hardoi.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 13th April, says:—We think the time has come when the Local Government should institute an inquiry into the affairs of the Sháhabad municipality. The present attitude of the District officials towards certain members who do not enjoy the confidence of the majority is most undignified. Not only the resolutions passed by the Board are not carried out, the members are insulted and publicly disgraced. If half of what we have heard of the treatment of Shaikh Mumtaz Ali, a member of the Board, by Mr. Time (?) Sub-Divisional Officer, is true, pitiable must be the state of the Municipal members. Imagine a Joint Magistrate going into the town in search of a member with whose official work he is dissatisfied. The member is publicly insulted. He gets frightened, conceals himself in the zenana; a chaprási is ordered to produce the absconded member before the sáhib, and with great difficulty the colleagues of the member succeed in persuading the irate officer to believe that the man cannot be found and that it would be dangerous to make a search for him in the zenana. If Mumtáz Ali's conduct was reprehensible, whether as an elected or nominated member, he could be forced to sever his connection with the municipality. If his conduct was criminal, he could have been prosecuted. But why should a Sub-Divisional Officer, a Civilian and not a police darogha, attempt to take the law into his own hands, and thus cause unnecessary excitement. We hope an inquiry will be made into the affairs of the Sháhabad municipality.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 7th April, 1905.

An Indian killed by a British soldier in Shahjahanpur.

11. A correspondent of the Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th April, states that on the 15th ultimo a British soldier went on the Pawáyan road accompanied by a comrade and deliberately fired at one Hira, severely wounding him, from the effects of which he died in a few minutes. After due inquiry, the accused was tried by the District Magistrate, but, in spite of the convicting evidence of some 25 British soldiers and three native witnesses produced by the prosecution, the Magistrate refused to believe the facts, and acquitted the offender. Such cases of downright miscarriage of justice, in mixed cases in which the offending party is a European, are certainly calculated to cause much dissatisfaction and heart-burning among the Indians. What is worse still, a European murderer is not only spared the gallows, but he is not even punished with a fine or imprisonment. The deceased Hira was a stranger in Sháhjahánpur, earning his living there as a water-carrier, and his family and children, who are at another place, are very probably left quite destitute. Government should, at least, send for the record of the case, and see if there was really wanting anything in the evidence to convict the accused.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th April, 1905.

Employment of Indians in the public service.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 9th April, says:—The analysis of the Government of India's statistical returns made by Mr. Gokhale and Rái Sri Rám Bahádur forms a crushing indictment of the anti-Indian policy systematically pursued by the Government of India, and never more so than by Lord Curzon and his colleagues. What answer has His Excellency to give to the disagreeable fact that between 1897 and now, most of the prizes of the public service have fallen to the lot of foreigners? Of course none. Lord Curzon seems to make much of the statement contained in the Court of Directors' despatch of 1833, that it was not chiefly by conferring high State appointments on them that they sought to advance the condition of the Indian people. How does this avowal serve Lord Curzon's purpose? Even the educated Indians who loudly clamour, and quite naturally and justly, for their fair share of public appointments, are not so foolish as to think that that is the chief means of India's regeneration. They know as well as Lord Curzon that it is through the material and moral regeneration of their country that national salvation is to be attained. But does this mean that they ought not to demand justice in appointments to the public service? Is this not at once economically necessary and politically expedient? Are unceasing foreign exploitation and the stunting of the nation's intellectual growth compatible with their deliberate ostracism from the public service? We can promise to Lord Curzon that he has seen only the beginning of the agitation against the violation of the Parliamentary and Royal pledges, which his Government have sought to defend and uphold.

The Viceroy's speech at the debate on the Budget, and the question of appointment of Indians to the higher grades of the public service.

CITIZEN,
10th April,
1905.

13. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 10th April, says:—In the course of his speech on the Budget, His Excellency the Viceroy was pleased to ask if it was not after all a vain exercise to dispute as to the exact number of places that were or were not to be given to this or that class in an administration. We submit that the dispute is by no means a vain one. For its sole object is 'the good of the country and the protection of the people.' By way of illustration, we cite a recent instance out of myriads of such that we have at our disposal. In the office of the Inspector-General of Railway Mail Service in India, located at Allahabad, a number of new appointments had of late been sanctioned, two of which carried a salary of one hundred rupees a month to begin with. These two appointments might, on grounds of practical expediency and personal fitness, have been offered to some of the old native employés in the office. But Mr. O'Brien thought it wise to adopt a different course. Both the appointments he has filled up with men who are probably but 'statutory' natives, one of them, a Mr. Sullivan, having been imported all the way from Madras. Now this man has for the purpose of recovering his travelling expenses submitted a bill for Rs. 148.

It would thus appear that had Mr. O'Brien freely and impartially admitted to the post offered to Mr. Sullivan some competent man of his own office, or, for the matter of that, any man in Allahabad or in the United Provinces qualified by his education and ability to fill the post, we should not have been required to meet the present demand of Rs. 148. Mr. O'Brien, who will not have to pay the amount from his own pocket, may contend that the amount is not very large; but as the Finance Minister, in telling the Indian tax-payer how his money is annually spent, cannot possibly explain each and every item of expenditure, we can reasonably conclude that not an inconsiderable amount favouritism of this particular sort makes away with. We do not of course for a moment hold that Lord Curzon is directly responsible for the two appointments referred to above. It is, indeed, beyond the power of even His Lordship, as he modestly admits, to know every detail of the administration of 300,000,000 of people. But when the head of a Government stoops to validate and uphold the illegal acts of his subordinates, it is no wonder that such irregularities should be the order of the day.

Protest against the transfer, on promotion, of one Mr. D'Costa from the Government Secretariat to the office of the Board of Revenue in the United Provinces.

CITIZEN,
10th April,
1905.

14. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 10th April, says:—Heads of administrations may not as a rule be personally responsible for vagaries of the type we have referred to above. It is, however, our painful duty to mention that there have been cases in which Sir James LaTouche has been known to encourage them. For, unless it was with the knowledge and consent of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, how could the services of Mr. D'Costa have been transferred from the Secretariat to the office of the Board of Revenue? At the Secretariat Mr. D'Costa had been given to understand that he had absolutely no chance of promotion; at whose instance then was his removal recommended to the Board on a pay to be shortly enhanced? Import of outsiders, when there is already a sufficient number of competent men in office, is sure to engender discontent and weaken the efficiency of the public service. Mr. D'Costa is not, moreover, a solitary instance. For, like him, Mr. Smith, Mr. Nestor and several others, to the exclusion of legitimate claimants, have from time to time been imported by the Secretary. We by no means approve of this practice of Mr. R. W. Gillan, and we strongly condemn the recent appointment of Mr. D'Costa, and particularly his being placed in charge of the record branch, for, if we mistake not, financially this man is very much embarrassed, and it is hardly meet to place in his custody the valuable deeds and documents which the United Provinces Board of Revenue may be expected to preserve in its archives.

CITIZEN,
10th April,
1905.

A Muhammadan movement at Lucknow for getting Sir James Digges LaTouche's term of office extended.

15. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 10th April, says :—A movement has been set on foot by some Muhammadan gentlemen at Lucknow to move the Government of India and the Secretary of State to extend Sir James Digges LaTouche's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces. A circular letter addressed by the President of the Rifáh-i-Am Association, Lucknow, to the leading native residents of the province, urges that it is the moral duty of all interested in the cause of education to make a strong representation on the subject, so that the reforms commenced by Sir James LaTouche may reach a stage, under his fostering care, at which they will be likely after his departure to achieve some measure of success. Need we say that popular feeling is altogether opposed to the movement ?

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th April, 1905.

A suggestion for expansion of the powers of the Legislative Councils in India.

1. THE Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th April, says:—If the Indian Councils Act of 1892 had not stopped with effecting a perfectly imperfect reform, if the non-official element in the Councils had been further strengthened and more powers given to the members, several domestic reforms of a progressive and beneficial character would have been effected in the course of the dozen years the Act has been in operation, reckless extravagance on unproductive and mischievous objects would have been checked at the same time that sanitation and education would not have been starved, and reactionary legislation like the Sedition Act of the Elgin and the Universities Act of the present régime would not have been passed. The small instalment of reform that was granted in 1892 in response to the agitation of the Congress, the country received with thankfulness as fairly satisfactory for the time being. The time has undoubtedly come when a further step should be taken in the same direction, and it is incumbent on Congressmen to agitate for it from now in the same determined manner as they had done in the earlier years of their great organization, so that the next step may be taken by the Liberal Government that will shortly succeed Mr. Balfour and his colleagues.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th April, 1905.

Need of a college in Kashmir, and the Resident.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th April, says:—The Central Hindu College Magazine for April contains a note from the pen of Mrs. Annie Besant on education in Kashmir which, for the revelation it makes and from the quarter from which it comes, deserves more than a passing notice. We are told that there is great need for a college at Srinagar, as at present the boys who pass out of the Hindu High School have to be sent all the way to Lahore if they desire to prosecute their college studies. The State gives them scholarships; still as can be easily understood the arrangement is very unsatisfactory. His Highness the Maharaja and his brother Raja Sir Amar Singh 'are both eagerly desirous to have a college in Kashmir and one in Jammu,' and still they cannot carry out their wish. Why? Mrs. Besant supplies the answer. 'Education in Kashmir,' she says, 'is, in fact, in fetters, and every effort of the State Government to raise it to a higher level has, so far, been frustrated. The boys are exceptionally bright, but they are allowed no chance, and their own ruler has not been permitted to give them the advantages he longs to bestow. Under the peculiar conditions of Kashmir, the sanction of the Resident is necessary for every item of budgeted expenditure, and the education estimates have been ruthlessly cut down. Crores are to be spent on a useless railway, the upkeep of which will be most costly and the returns from which are problematical, while a few thousand rupees for education are grudged.' It is necessary to repeat that the writer is not a hypercritical Congresswalla, but Mrs. Annie Besant.

'The result of this denial of higher education,' adds the illustrious lady, 'is that scarcely any Kashmiris are found in the higher official positions of their own land; these are filled by "lent officers," Government servants from British India, who have little or no interest in the country.' Of course we ought not to 'attribute motives,' and the facts are too telling here to necessitate this on our part; but will Lord Curzon, the special friend of education and of the Native States, inquire into the matter and teach that anti-educational Resident the lesson he seems to stand in need of? If this is not done, it is eminently a case for an interpellation in the House of Commons by some sympathetic M. P.

JAM-I-JAMSHED,
16th April, 1905.

Alleged heavy expenditure incurred by the Nawab of Rampur on Lord Curzon's reception.

3. The Jám-i-Jamshed (Moradabad), in its combined issue for the 9th and 16th April, referring to the recent visit of Lord Curzon to Rampur, says that it is rumoured that Nawab Hámid Ali Khán spent 12 lakhs of rupees on the preparations made for His Lordship's reception. If the rumour is well founded, the Rampur treasury whose annual receipts and expenditure are almost equal at present, could not possibly meet this heavy extra expenditure, and the money must have been borrowed, and had His Lordship known this fact he would not probably have allowed the Nawab to spend so much on the occasion of his visit. The writer further adds that His Highness is hardly a popular ruler. He pays little attention to the claims of his own people for employment in the State, and has filled almost all the high posts with outsiders generally of low origin, which has naturally caused much dissatisfaction among the Rampurians.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th April, 1905.

The Indian People on the Provincial Budget of the United Provinces.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th April, in reviewing the Provincial Budget of the United Provinces, says :—The agriculturist is by far the most important factor in the economy of the Indian State. Unless he can stand on his legs the Imperial coach cannot be run. He must drag it. And he has been the hardest hit during the last decade not only on account of a succession of adverse seasons and of a cruel pestilence, but on account of a currency policy which should never have been adopted for gaining any trumpery advantage, considering its disastrous effect on the ryot population. This being so, the need is not for further re-settlements and enhancements of revenue with machine-like regularity, but for a reduction in the assessment. The Hon'ble Mr. B. K. Bose and the Hon'ble Mr. G. K. Gokhale have ably argued in this sense in the Imperial Legislature, but without avail ; not even the incontrovertible plea of so exceptional an authority as Mr. J. E. O'Connor, who in his admirable paper before the Society of Arts last year recommended an all-round reduction of 25 per cent. in the land revenue demand of the State, has had any effect on the revenue-wise mind of Government.

Our next illustration of the methods which Government resort to in the process of increasing their revenue will be taken from the Excise Department. The entire articulate section of the community has been insistently clamouring against the forced growth in the consumption of intoxicants which Government Excise policy is leading to, and pressing the Government for such a modification of that policy as will result in making the people a little less addicted to drink. We have complained of the policy itself, and of the illiberal administration of that policy by departmental heads who are more zealous for revenue than jealous of the well-being of the people. We have proved from the figures and facts furnished to us by the Department itself in its annual reports how terribly the drink evil is on the increase. We have accordingly prayed for a reduction in the number of liquor shops and for recognising the principle of local option in practical administration. Of course our cries have gone on unheeded as a sympathetic response to them involves some considerable loss of revenue, and while we have never thought that Government wishes the population to get drunken, we have neither been able to resist the unpleasant conclusion that if in the process of their making increased revenue the drink evil does automatically increase, they will not mind the result much. The figures given in the present Budget do not induce a modification of this view. The following will show at what appalling rate the drink revenue has been mounting up in this province :—

	Rs.
1896-7	44,64,440
1897-8	45,14,960
1898-9	56,84,847
1899-1900	63,69,842
1900-1	69,00,211
1901-2	74,10,028
1902-3	82,23,000
1903-4	94,58,526
1904-5 (Revised Estimate)	1,01,00,000
1905-6 (Budget Estimate)	1,05,00,000

What country can stand this for any length of time? An increase of 60 lakhs, or two and one-third times of what it was only a decade ago! These are the processes by which an increase of revenue is obtained, considerably to the detriment of the people, and this very increase is cited as proof of their prosperity; a double wrong being thus perpetrated.

The text upon which we are writing is the inadequacy of the revenue placed at the disposal of this Government by the Imperial Government for carrying on the administration with progressive efficiency. We have shown above by reference to two heads of revenue to what extremes the Government is obliged to go for the sake of obtaining the needed revenue. We will prove by reference to two most important heads of expenditure how it is driven to starve the most reproductive branches of the administration, even when revenue is obtained by what we cannot but call unfair means, all owing to the fact that the Imperial Government takes away too much of our revenue. The two heads we will take for illustrating our argument are Education and Sanitation. Let the readers remember that these Provinces are the most backward in all India in respect of educational progress. Let them further recollect that according to the head of the Educational Department, who is extremely unlikely to exaggerate or to make unreasonable and ambitious demands, the minimum additional expenditure necessary two or three years ago for these Provinces to come up to the level of Bengal, Bombay and Madras was 20 lakhs of rupees. After this fresh expenditure, Mr. Lewis said, the average annual expenditure on education would come up to only five pice per head on all branches of education, and this five pice was already exceeded in the advanced presidencies. In his last annual administration report, the Director of Public Instruction tells a tale of woe from the first to the last page in respect of want of funds, and he is so impressed by the starving of education that he asks at one place, rising above the restraint of his official position, whether it is considered that these Provinces do not deserve to make educational progress to the extent that Bengal, Bombay and Madras are doing. These are considerations which must have weighed with the Provincial Government in making up their educational budget for the new year, and we will assume that it is only the inability to provide the funds that is mainly responsible for their not making the necessary provision; although we have an uneasy consciousness that the want of effective desire to meet the full needs of the situation is also not wanting, and further that it is partly their own fault that they have not got a more liberal provincial settlement.

* * * * * * * *

We have only a remark or two to make on the expenditure under the head of Sanitation. The latest plague figures as our readers are aware give more than 23,000 deaths a week in this Province. That the outlook is alarming does not require any laboured demonstration. What has our philanthropic Government done to arrest the ravages of the disease and to help in relieving human misery? Last year only one lakh of rupees was given to district boards for the purpose of cleansing towns and villages not municipal towns. There was a lapse of Rs. 72,000 from the grant made under this head. 'The liberal treatment of Municipal Boards in the matter of relief from police charges,' we are complacently told, 'has rendered unnecessary special grants to enable them to meet their plague expenditure.' As if (1) formerly liberal treatment had been extended to them, and (2) their present resources permit them to incur half the expenditure necessary for plague preventive measures after meeting their every-day charges! The Government could afford to give Rs. 69,000 for making unnecessary increases in the salaries of officers of the Indian Medical Service who are amply remunerated without this increase; side by side of this is the statement that the allotment for plague expenditure has been reduced to two lakhs from three, 'as in the existing state of the provincial finance no special grants for general sanitary purposes are contemplated,' etc. The one word by which to characterize this we do not care to use. By the light of this the Lieutenant-Governor's personal assurance that Government are ready and anxious to carry out any measure that carries with it a reasonable hope of success does not, we say with all deference, possess much weight, in our eye at least. We can think of but one civilized Government that has reconciled itself to meeting a situation of such unprecedented gravity with a sigh and dismissing it with a shudder, and that Government is—the British Government of India. It is disagreeable to introduce a racial question into so mournful a subject, but we really wonder whether a national Government would have displayed the same callous indifference to the lives of the people, and whether our present Government itself would not have been suddenly quickened into action if any appreciable mortality from plague had occurred among the European population of India. 'No special grants for general sanitary purposes are contemplated'—this is the most tragic sentence that a responsible Government could bring itself to pen in the present state of India. It is what we venture to call the tragedy of the United Provinces Budget of 1905-6, and it is enough by itself to forbid us to join in the chorus of congratulation with which the budget was greeted at the Council meeting in the usual orthodox and off-hand manner by the amiable honourable members.

ADVOCATE,
16th April, 1905.

Imposition of a pilgrim tax at Ajodhia and Hardwar

5. The Advocate (Lucknow,) of the 16th April, says:—The "Rám Naumi" in Ajodhia and Bysákhi in Hardwar attracted, as usual, large crowds of pilgrims to those holy places. It is yet too early to say in what form will be the new pilgrim's tax, sanctioned by the Government for the benefit of the municipal finances of Fyzabad, to be levied on visitors to Ajodhia. But there can be no two opinions as to the extreme unpopularity of the tax. A heavy burden has been heaped upon the Fyzabad Municipality by asking it to look after the sanitary and other comforts of people who are not permanent residents within its limits and who do not contribute anything towards the Municipal funds, as thousands of them are too poor even to purchase the necessaries of life during the day's stay at Ajodhia. But why should such people be taxed instead of the Pandas who can afford to be taxed, as they receive numerous heavy presents? It is a pity that after creating greater facilities for people to visit Ajodhia in large numbers, the State, through one of its departments, should show its inability to look to the ordinary needs of sanitation.

The increased profits from the railways derived from the pilgrim traffic ought to be made to contribute something towards the costs of sanitary measures for a place where the intensity of the crowds has become ten times more than what it used to be before the creation of the facilities. We do feel that the tax is extremely impolitic as in one way or the other every pilgrim returning from Ajodhia, hundreds of thousands of whom are unable to make any distinction between a Municipal tax and an Imperial impost, shall carry home stories of the greed of the Sirkár, always anxious to add to State coffers. Such taxes are impolitic, because while they bring a few thousand rupees for some local purpose, they add also to the prevailing discontent.

But what is worse is that such taxes when once imposed are seldom removed; at times they are collected even without any authority. Some years ago on the occasion of Báruni Amávasya a tax for local purposes was imposed on pilgrims in Hardwar. An anna was added to the charge for the railway ticket of every passenger who visited Hardwar, and outposts were established at which collections at the rate of an anna were made before pilgrims who came on foot were allowed to visit Hardwar and have a bath in the Ganges. The tax was obnoxious, and we do not know whether on account of obnoxiousness or otherwise the tax was abolished as far as the visitors on foot to Hardwar were concerned. But the tax on visitors who travel over the railway is still maintained. This is strange. If the tax has been abolished, as certainly it must have been, since no collections are made from visitors that go on foot, why should the people coming over the iron-road still be asked to pay one anna per head? This is unfair, and we feel that we have only to bring this to the notice of the Local Government to have this irregular collection abolished. Moreover, the imposition is unreasonable on the ground that Hardwar has now a large stationary population, and is growing in importance. It is becoming the summer resort of the Hindus from the Panjab and the United Provinces, and for months it is used as a sanitarium.

PRAYAG SAMA-CHAR,
16th April, 1905.

Levy of a poll tax by the Municipal Board from pilgrims at Ajodhia.

6. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad,) of the 16th April, says that pious Hindus gladly endure every kind of trouble and hardship in visiting their sacred places. But it is to be regretted that lately the municipal authorities and Government officials have shown undue desire in placing fresh difficulties in their way, which did not exist even in the time of most tyrannical Muhammadan rulers. This year the Municipal Board has introduced a poll tax at the rate of an anna a pilgrim at the Ramnaumi fair at Ajodhia. It would appear that the Maharaja of Ajodhia offered to pay a lump sum to the Board as compensation with a view to dissuading the Board from introducing the poll tax, but that the Board was inexorable. It is supposed that the Maharaja will make an appeal to Government. The Press, too, should be up and doing.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
16th April, 1905.

Levy of taxes at the Benighát at Allahabad, by the Cantonment Magistrate, and the deputation of the Muhammadan police there.

7. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 16th April, says that hitherto the traders who plied their trades at the confluence of the rivers at Allahabad had to pay tax in the shape of ground rent to the Collector on the occasion of the Mágh Mela every year, but that the Cantonment Magistrate has now appeared on the scene and levied an additional tax of an almost equal amount. The result is that everything which has always been dear at the fair has become doubly so. The Cantonment Magistrate has not stopped here! Inside the fort there is a tree supposed to be the holy Akshayabat tree. So far the pilgrims have had free access to it. But now every person who goes to see the tree has to pay quarter of an anna at the gate of the fort and half an anna at the tree, when a lamp is lighted for him, the place being a little dark. Moreover, every carriage and ekka driver who takes pilgrims to the bándh or embankment has to pay half an anna and quarter of an anna respectively every time; consequently the carriage and ekka drivers refrain from taking pilgrims to the bándh and weak and sickly people who have to walk are much inconvenienced. Some twenty years ago the rumour regarding the use of beef at the fair by the Muhammadan police on duty created a deep stir among the pilgrims, and Government prohibited any Muhammadan policemen being deputed to the fair in future. Of late the orders of Government in the matter have not been strictly observed, which led to an unpleasant incident lately. On the occasion of her late visit to Allahabad, the Maharani of Balrampur gave a feast to the Prayágwáls. When a number of these people were taking their food on a wooden platform, a Muhammadan police constable got upon the platform. The Prayágwáls considered his entry as pollution and ceased taking their food. The authorities should inquire into the matter and strictly enforce the Government order in future.

ADVOCATE,
16th April, 1905.

Complaint regarding the imposition of excessive fines in the High School, Fyzabad.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th April, publishes the following letter from a correspondent:—Sir,—With reference to your editorial note about the infliction of fines in the Fyzabad High School, published in the Advocate of the 16th March 1905, I am sorry that it was not strong enough to meet the exigencies of the case.

As I have been with much difficulty able to ascertain the amount of fines for a period of nine months of the school year, i.e., from April 1904 to January 1905, I beg to send you the same for the information of the public and the higher school authorities concerned:—

	Rs.	a.	p.
April 1904	10	15	0
May (half month vacation)	8	14	6
June (vacation)		...
July 1904	19	4	6
August „	28	0	0
September „	14	0	3
October „	26	12	9
November „	40	7	6
December „	19	6	6
January 1905	30	12	6
Total for 8½ months	225	15	6 (198-9-6).

But it is remarkable that most of the fines now inflicted on the boys are, though quite contrary to the spirit of the Rules, for their failure to secure a certain percentage of marks arbitrarily fixed by the teachers for the Headmaster, in the weekly or monthly examinations of the school, or even on the scholars not being able to learn their day's lesson and many other such trivial offences—if offences they can in any sense be called.

The effect of this severity has simply been disastrous to the cause of high education in Fyzabad, as not only that numbers of boys had to leave the school altogether, as the following table will show, but there are many boys who have taken to thieving to pay the fines, and many to actual begging in the class.

Excluding the college classes the average enrolment of each year ending 31st March is as follows:—

Year	1897-98.	1898-99.	1899-1900.	1900-1901.
Boys	262	255	249	265.
Year		1901-02.	1902-03.	1903-04.
Boys		245	186	165.

To tell you the truth, Mr. Editor, instead of creating a love for learning in the mind of the youth, the teachers are turning their classes to be looked upon by their pupils as so many shambles, more to be shunned and feared than respected as their alma mater.

But I think it is not so much the teachers that are to blame for indulging in punsihment as a pastime as the "Draft Code of offences and punishments in Anglo-Vernacular schools." (Here follows a copy of the Code.)

Establishment of cattle breeding farms in the Bombay Presidency.

ARYA MITRA,
16th April, 1905.

9. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th April, observing that the "slaughter" (destruction) of cattle is not only proving ruinous to the Indians, but that, affecting as it does the agriculture of the country, seriously tells upon the Government coffers also, is glad to notice that the Bombay Government has decided to spend Rs. 26,000 in purchasing bulls for breeding superior class of the bovine species, and to establish breeding farms at Kolhapur and Ahmadabad at a cost of Rs. 4,000 a year. The Government of India would do well to have similar measures taken in the other provinces also.

(g).—General.

The Rolt case, and the Indian character.

HINDOSTHAN,
10th April, 1905.

10. The English Hindosthán (Kálákankar), of the 10th April, says:—It is eminently gratifying to find that, as a result of the exhaustive inquiry held into the charges brought against Mr. Rolt—charges the prosecution were unable to sustain—by the Committee appointed by the Bengal Government, whose recommendations the Lieutenant-Governor has confirmed, Mr. Rolt is to be reinstated in his former post as Manager of the Khagra Estates, having been pronounced by the Committee qualified for re-employment under the Court of Wards, and, in addition to being paid his salary from the time of his suspension up to the end of 1905, he is to receive as compensation the further sum of Rs. 15,000 to indemnify him against the expenses incurred in his defence. The result of the inquiry, while it is most gratifying to everyone, carries the highest commendation of the patience, care and thoroughness with which the Committee of inquiry set about their labours in unravelling what is, alas! of only too frequent occurrence in India—a deep plot and conspiracy to ruin a man's career, to serve their own ignoble and infamous ends.

Intrigue, plot and counter-plot are the very essence of the Indian character, and nowhere in the Empire is this proclivity more rampant and conspicuous than in Native States, small estates, zámindáris, and, in fact, in every walk of life where Indian influence and control are paramount. The villainous conspiracy to blast Mr. Rolt's character is only one out of thousands of such cases which are happening every day in India—to the ruin and degradation, in many instances, of honourable and innocent men: of men who have injured no man or thing, but have tried to do their duty conscientiously and unflinchingly. And the pity of the thing is that the native character is so debased that the very man whose friendship you accept and believe in as genuine, that is the very man who stabs you in the dark. Little wonder, then, if the efforts hitherto made to bridge the social gulf between Europeans and natives have been futile—and, we fear, must ever remain so.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
16th April, 1905.

11. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 16th April, on the authority of its Lucknow correspondent, states that on the 28th ultimo His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, accompanied by a number of high Government officials and respectable persons, paid a visit to Nazírabad and Amínabad, and also inspected the cultivated land lying behind Aminabad. His Honour's visit has given rise to different ideas. Quot homines, tot sententiæ. According to one man the whole of Aminabad will be demolished, and a park, called the Victoria Memorial Park, will be laid out on the ground. Another man thinks that the Aminabad street will be widened. Let the real object of His Honour's visit be what it may; but there is no doubt that, if Aminabad be turned into a park, the town of Lucknow will undergo a great change or revolution.

ARYA MITRA,

A complaint against local railway officials in general.

12. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th April, refers to the instructions which the newly constituted Railway Board has recently issued to the higher authorities of the various railway systems in India, calling upon the latter to take steps that tickets may be issued to third class passengers before the arrival of a train at every station and that a sufficient number of third class carriages be provided in every train to prevent overcrowding; regrets to say that the local officials are never expected to give up their practices unless superior authorities pay them surprise visits and see how they carry out their orders. The writer himself has seen that though signboards are put up at the doors or windows of booking offices of larger stations, on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, to the effect that tickets are sold there at all hours of the day, but the booking clerks commence booking passengers only when a train is about to arrive. Other railway officials similarly fail to carry out other orders issued on behalf of third class passengers.

ADVOCATE,
16th April, 1905.

Need for introducing the system of platform tickets on the important stations of the East Indian Railway.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th April, says:—In every important East Indian railway station the Indian community badly feels the necessity of platform tickets. The present practice is that people are permitted to resort to the platform to receive friends with the permission of the Station Master. Europeans and Eurasians do not stand in need of any such permission: in the case of Indians it is grudgingly given, and when it is refused, it causes not a little humiliation to the party seeking it. Few self-respecting men ask for a favour which may be refused without any reason being given for the refusal. At Cawnpore self-respecting Indians go even to the length of travelling from the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Station to the East Indian Railway Station a few minutes before the arrival of the train in which they desire to see their friends, rather than go and beg of the Station Master for permission to enter the railway platform. The East Indian Railway in this matter should follow the example of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and issue platform tickets, which will help to keep the platform clear of any crowd and at the same time save people from an amount of inconvenience. The proposal is so reasonable that we hope the East Indian Railway authorities will accept it. A formal representation on the subject might be made by the principal residents either of Allahabad or Cawnpore, where the grievance is so keenly felt.

ADVOCATE,
20th April, 1905.

A Muhammadan meeting held at Bombay in opposition to the public meeting lately held there to protest against Lord Curzon's utterances.

1. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th April, says :—We received the following telegram from a correspondent on Tuesday morning :—

"Attempt to get up a Muhammadan demonstration against the public meeting respecting Lord Curzon's utterances proved a miserable fiasco. At first strenuous endeavour was made to convene a public meeting of Muhammadan inhabitants of Bombay, but had to be given up as even Muzza Persad (sic.) where Muhammadans usually meet was refused. Then Mr. Nasarulla Khan, barrister-at-law, who got up a hole-and-corner anti-Congress Muhammadan Association at Ahmedabad, in the name of that still-born Association, called a meeting at 8-30 P.M., at his father-in-law's house when there were not twenty people. One hour was lost in beating up something like an audience which, however, did not exceed a hundred people. When the first resolution was moved, a wealthy and independent Muhammadan gentleman, member of the Corporation and Standing Committee, and not a Congresswala, pointed out the ridiculous absurdity of passing a resolution in the name of Muhammadan inhabitants of Bombay when the majority of those present did not know why they were asked to come. He said that the whole Muhammadan community strongly resented Lord Curzon's utterance, and should act in concert even with Congress people who were doing useful and valuable work in the country. When votes were taken Mr. Nasarulla Khan, the Chairman, counted 63 for and 38 against it. Haji Yusuf disputed the correctness of the number, saying the majority was the other way and demanded a poll. A scene of confusion ensued and the Chairman left the meeting in great disorder."

Attempts to pass in the name of communities views which are not shared by the members in general end as ignominously as has this attempt failed, and we can only pity that Mr. Nasarulla's Anjuman should have thus attempted to injure national interests. When the Anjuman was brought into existence at Ahmedabad, we were assured that it came into existence to protect Muhammadan interests. Curious must be the regard for Muhammadan interests when the first public act done by the Anjuman is to plead guilty to the aspersions cast on the Indian national character. Can moral degradation go any further?

ADVOCATE,
23rd April, 1905.

The Government of India's refusal to forward to the Secretary of State, the Resolutions passed by the Calcutta public meeting protesting against Lord Curzon's utterances.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd April, says :—Under Secretary of the Government of India, in his letter, dated Simla, the 10th April, 1905, writes to Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh, M.A., D.L., C.I.E., of Calcutta :—"I am desired to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 22nd March, 1905, forwarding a copy of the Resolutions adopted at a public meeting held at the Town Hall, Calcutta, on the 10th March, and to say in reply that the Government of India are unable to accede to the request contained in it." Why should the Government of India refuse the forwarding of the Resolutions? It is true that the Resolutions of the Calcutta meeting condemned the policy of the present head of the Government of India; but is that head justified in refusing to send up the condemnatory Resolutions to his own superior without even assigning reasons? No subject of His Imperial Majesty King Edward can address the Ministers directly; the representation should proceed through the proper channel. But when help is sought from the proper channel, it refuses to render any help and at the same time declines to give any reason for such refusal. This is the way how the grievances of the people go unheeded. In the present case the mere fact that the Government of India has withheld the document from transmission will not prevent its finding its way to the Secretary of State.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
23rd April, 1905.

Appointment of a successor to Lord Curzon in the Viceroyalty of India.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd April, says :—We have been from the first of the deliberate opinion that Lord Curzon's retention of his present office for any length of time bodes no good to India. We did not feel at all sorry when His Lordship left for England last year, and we exhorted and implored him not to come back to rule over us. After the recent protest demonstrations we suggested that personal and political self-respect should induce him to change the scene of his labours. But we are now inclined to feel that he should postpone his departure till the Liberals come into power, so that they may appoint his successor. The news that Mr. Balfour wishes him to resign now that he may appoint Lord Dudley or the Duke of Marlborough as his successor is disconcerting. We have great regard for the former who has so endeared himself to the people of Ireland during his Viceroyalty over there, but we feel the necessity of having for the next Indian Viceroy a statesman permeated by Liberal ideas and Liberal principles, and an administrator of experience, like Lord Aberdeen for instance. And it must be voted a misfortune if it will fall to Mr. Balfour to appoint Lord Curzon's successor. This is our reason for wishing (on second thoughts) Lord Curzon to remain at Simla till he receive notice to quit by the fact of the installation of the Liberal party in office.

CITIZEN,
24th April, 1905.

Return of the Kabul Mission.

4. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 24th April, says:—The Kabul Mission returned to Simla the other day. No more definite announcement has been made about its result than that it has concluded with the Amir a treaty similar to that which existed with His Highness Abdur Rahman. This is a rather indifferent statement, and we do not quite know why a full statement on the subject should not be officially made. Secrecy in State matters looks so autocratic that Lord Curzon would observe it even when there was no apparent necessity for it. Perhaps we shall have to be in the dark about it till the facts of the Mission are published in a Blue Book and placed on the table of the House of Commons.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal's speech regarding educational matters in the United Provinces at the debate on the Provincial Budget.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd April, says:—Pandit Sundar Lal has made out an unanswerable case for the less unjust treatment of Indian professors in colleges. The facts mentioned by him prove what retrograde progress has been made in this matter. It cannot surely be contended that as time advances, as the number of educated Indians increases, Indians entering the education department become less efficient and deserving: this will be a reflection on the education imparted in our colleges which no one can bring himself to make. There is no reason that we can think of except racial bias that is responsible for the state of affairs complained of by Pandit Sundar Lal, and the sooner it gives place to other tests of the qualifications of professors the better for the cause of education in India. The member for the University spoke with authority when he put in his powerful plea for the establishment of a Medical College in these Provinces, and we are sorry that no more attention was given to his words than the bare statement by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor that we would have our Medical College in its own good time. The improvement of the Government Training College at Allahabad, the establishment of a Law College for these Provinces, provision for the teaching of other sciences besides Physics and Chemistry are the other urgent educational needs to which Pandit Sundar Lal has called attention. That these things require still to be pressed on the Government, is itself proof eloquent of the phenomenal educational backwardness of these Provinces. That the Government did not feel itself in a position to give satisfactory answers to Pandit Sundar Lal shows how much more in need of funds it is than itself or the Imperial Government is willing to concede.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya on plague measures in the United Provinces.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd April, says:—The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya's suggestion that the Government should consider the advisability of carrying out a systematic and thorough disinfection, during each recurring period of subsidence of the disease, of every building or hut in which a case of plague occurred during the last preceding epidemic, does not necessarily involve resort to the use of force as the Government suspect. If it should do so they are certainly right in declining to carry it out. But considering that the Hon'ble Pandit suggested the eminently feasible alternative that if the Government be not prepared to carry out these measures at one and the same time throughout the infected area of the province, a beginning might be made in a few selected localities, we must say that the suggestion deserved a better fate than to be summarily rejected. This method has not been tried so far anywhere. The Government was wrong in saying that it was tried at Allahabad. What was done here was to carry out disinfection in the beginnings of an epidemic, and that too not with much thoroughness we believe.

ADVOCATE,

The Advocate on the mismanagement of the North-Western Railway.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th April, makes the following comments on the management of the North-Western Railway:—"There should be some limit to which Railway mismanagement may be tolerated. We do not know whether it has come to the notice of the Railway Board that there is great dissatisfaction with the North-Western Railway train service and with the Railway staff which appears to be indifferent to public convenience. We may give our personal experience of a journey which we had to make ten days ago from Meerut to Jullundhar and from there to Dehra Dún. From the sad experience which we had during twenty-four hours, we can well imagine the lot of those who have constantly to use the line. At the Meerut station the first thing we were told by the Station Master was that the Bombay mail was usually late one hour and a half. So we had to content ourselves with resting a little in a waiting-room half of which was occupied by the bar-room, and the soldiers, a number of whom were travelling that night, managed to keep the room noisy till midnight when the Bombay mail came usually late. Berths for our party could be secured in a carriage which we were led to believe would take us to Jullundhar without a change. At Umballa, however, at an hour when the train should have been near Jullundhar, the passengers were told to hurry up and vacate the carriage as it was to go to Kalka. It is scandalous that people without a warning should be made to vacate carriages and that at places like Umballa there should be no arrangement for keeping extra carriages. In the meantime the Punjab mail reached Umballa and the staff, knowing full well that the Bombay mail would leave earlier, told the passengers to occupy seats in the Punjab mail which was already crowded, saying it would leave earlier. This did not happen. The Bombay mail did leave first and reached Jullundhar at ten instead of 7-30; but they say such delays are not unusual, and this was confirmed on the return journey. The through traffic from the Punjab to Hardwár is so heavy that the Railway Administration has through train service from Lahore to Dehra Dún. This was the train which we had to take in the evening. It left Jullundhar in time, but between Jullundhar and Saháranpur it lost over two hours and the train which was timed to reach Dehra Dún at 8-40, reached its destination by 12-40. Thus mail and passenger trains are both running late to the extreme inconvenience of the passengers and dislocation of business. Days before the Bysakhi fair at Hardwár the North-Western Railway began to use goods wagons for third class passengers. Actually a week before the fair some twenty wagons were running full of pilgrims. There may be some excuse for using wagons after the mela is over, as it is desirable to disperse the crowd at an early date, and ignorant men, in their anxiety to get home, do not mind the use of wagons. But there can be no excuse whatsoever for the use of wagons days before the bathing day. This is a state of things to which it should be the concern of the Railway Board to put a stop at the earliest possible date.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
30th April,
1905.

Grant of a representative form of Government to the Transvaal.

1. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th April, says:—We have before drawn attention to the difference in the treatment meted out by England to India and to the Transvaal in respect of financial transactions. The same contrast is observable in the case of the political concessions the ruling country is prepared to give to her most valuable dependency and her youngest colony. India is inhabited by a highly intellectual and civilised race quite capable of looking after its own affairs and a race, too, which by its uniform loyalty and peaceableness has deserved well of England. The Transvaal is inhabited by a cosmopolitan financial gang, the only thing white about whom according to the Pioneer is their skin. The Transvaalers have also been very few years in subjection to England. The people of India, however, do not to this day enjoy a shred of self-government: their Legislative Councils are as yet farces, and their ruler thinks so poorly of them as not even to condescend to receive the resolutions of their great National Congress at the hands of its President. Look at the other side of the picture. The Transvaal has been already given representative Government. The new Constitution 'establishes a Legislative Assembly, wherein, except the Executive officers, all members are elected, namely, thirty to thirty-five elected and six to nine official members.' The franchise, however, is granted 'only to whites.' We are now and then allowed to understand why Lord George Hamilton thought that British rule will never be popular in India.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th May,
1905.

Lord Curzon's administrative measures in India.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th May, says:—'The first twelve reforms which I foreshadowed in 1896,' said Lord Curzon in his Budget speech, 'are, I am glad to say, now accomplished. The next twelve have been carried also and during the remaining year I hope you may carry to completion the third dozen also.' It is the misfortune of India that most of these 'reforms' related to essentially trivial matters. But few of them touched what might be called the great problems of the Empire on whose satisfactory solution depends the future weal or woe of its peoples; and it is unfortunate that in these few cases, Lord Curzon has mistaken reaction for reform. His treatment of the Education question may be cited as an instance in point. The gigantic problem of the condition of the people cried aloud for solution in his time, but he has merely approached the subject and left it. He has not had the courage or the wisdom or the sympathy, to include the subject of famine prevention within the scope of the MacDonnell Commission, nor has he been equal to the institution of the village economic inquiry recommended by the Famine Union. The future historian will record of Lord Curzon's administration that it was one of little things well done and of great tasks ill performed or shirked.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

ADVOCATE,
30th April,
1905.

The new Anglo-Afghan Agreement.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th April, says:—The Government of India has decided not to publish the text of the new Treaty concluded with Afghanistan till such time as the Secretary of State has seen the document and marked it with his seal of approval. Why has this secrecy been thought necessary, when in the House of Lords assurance has already been given that the present agreement does not cover new grounds? Till such time as the document is published, the English statesmen and publicists are doing their best to prepare the minds of the English public for the surprises which are in store for us. Our task is simply to hear what they have to say. In the foreign policy of India we have no voice, it is a matter in which it has been taken for granted that we are not concerned. We have simply to hear what others have to say, and, whether willing or unwilling, to pay the bill.

The Government of India's Resolution on the Police Commission Report.

4. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 21st April, referring to the Government of India's Resolution on the Police Commission Report, says that as the Government did not publish the Report before passing the Resolution it did not get the benefit of Public opinion on the Report, and the result is that its decisions on the recommendations of the Commission are not satisfactory. The editor then, quoting at great length, from the comments of the Bengalee newspaper on the Resolution, endorses the same, and observes that the powers of the police not being reduced in any way, but left intact as they were before, bare increase in the salaries and strength of the police staff is hardly expected to effect any material reform in the Force. No real improvement is to be expected in the working of the Police Department unless special steps are taken to recruit it from educated, honest and God-fearing men, and very substantial increase is made in the detective force.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
27th April,
1905.

Complaint regarding the non-utilization of sanctioned State technical scholarships in the United Provinces.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 27th April, says:—Asked when it proposes to utilise the technical scholarships placed at its disposal by the Government of India, our Government stated that it had not yet been able to find any student of whom it could be said that the grant of a scholarship to him would benefit a sound industrial undertaking and secure him permanent employment. But pray, what effort has been made to find whether eligible candidates exist or not? The Government's decision to await applications from intending candidates before notifying that the scholarships are available is of a piece with putting the cart before the horse. Who is aware of its intention to give such scholarships? If the notification be first issued, and if two competent young men cannot be selected from among the applicants, then, and not now before any effort is made, will be the time for saying that eligible candidates are not available. As a matter of fact we do not for a moment believe that there is such complete and hopeless dearth of competent young men. We rather think with Mr. Malaviya, and we had said as much more than once before, that many young men are anxious to go to America, England and Japan for acquiring higher scientific and industrial education, and we are sure it is not the want of eligible men but the absence of the will to find them out and help them that blocks the way. Then, what is meant by saying that the young men selected should be such that the grant of a scholarship to them 'would benefit a sound industrial undertaking and secure him permanent employment?' This sentiment seems to be an echo of the burden of Sir James LaTouche's Convocation song, that industrial development must precede technical education. We fail to see what good is sought to be achieved by thus arguing in a vicious circle. This is no argument for denying these provinces an advantage that has been conferred on the other provinces.

INDIAN PEOPLE
4th May,
1905.

Comments on the Native Press in the Bengal Administration Report for 1903-4.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th May, says:—When Sir George Campbell as Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal said some uncomplimentary things against the Hindoo Patriot, which was then edited by the late Kristo Das Pal, that redoubtable publicist stoutly protested against his action and succeeded in getting them withdrawn. Under Sir Andrew Fraser things have slightly changed, and instead of unfavourable comment on an individual newspaper an exaggerated and hence, according to Lord Curzon, untruthful attack on the 'native' Press of the province as a whole has been published in the pages of the Administration Report for 1903-4. In this we are told that the Press 'in too many instances exhibited the defects of exaggeration and lack of sobriety and restraint which have so often been alleged to be characteristic of the Press in Bengal.' This is a sweeping indictment which should not have been allowed in the sober pages of an Administration Report without being supported by at least a few specific instances. This, however, has not been done, and we cannot but say that Sir Andrew Fraser committed a grave error of judgment in allowing it to be published to the world on official responsibility.

This Daniel come to judgment, we mean the author of the report, descends from the general to the particular in the next sentence where he says: 'An unpleasant side of native journalism is the tendency to personal attack on individual officers of Government who have in some particular incident incurred the displeasure of the press and who are thereafter held up to continual reprobation.' This is a wholly unmerited reflection on the Press. Nothing is farther from the wish of any respectable and responsible publicist in India than to indulge in such profitless and harmful pastime. What our sapient critic seems to have overlooked is that in India journalism is not as a rule a paying profession, that it is not a trade as in other countries, and that newspapers are generally started out of pure patriotic motives. The main end in view is to serve the country by influencing the mind of the Government in the right direction and by creating a wholesome public opinion among Indians themselves. When an abuse of his position by an officer of Government comes to the notice of a publicist, he certainly exposes it; not with any pleasure, however, but as the Press is the only medium for the exposure of official high-handedness and ventilation of public grievances. And with such natural reluctance it is that the Press adversely criticises persons apart from measures, and so susceptible is it to the least act of kindness on the part of any official (particularly a European), that it is often only too profuse in expressions of grateful admiration for the self-same individuals.

A worse and even more inexcusable instance of official exaggeration in criticising the Indian Press, and a generalisation without the least evidence in support of it, is contained in the following further sentence in the same precious pronouncement:—'As in other countries, so in this province also the proprietors of newspapers find that nothing conduces to sale of their publications so much as an account of a cause celebre, and when the natural supply of such occurrences fails, there is a tendency to supply the deficiency by invention and exaggeration.' Again we demand evidence. We protest against the insinuation of ungentlemanliness and dishonesty against a body of men who have on the whole rendered useful service to the country and deserved well of even the Government. It is an un-English act that has been perpetrated by Sir Andrew Fraser in not drawing his pencil through these unworthy remarks, and it is an unfounded, and in any event grossly exaggerated libel on the less powerful and prosperous but the more disinterested, useful and public-spirited section of the Press of India, that the Government of Bengal published in the pages of its Administration Report.

ADVOCATE,
11th May, 1905.

Lord Kitchener, and the defence of the North-West frontier of India.

1. THE Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th May, says:—The Kabul Mission of Lord Curzon and "The Call of Lord Kitchener" may jointly help India into serious complications with Afghanistan for fear of Russian designs upon this country. Between the two it is pretty easy to apportion responsibility in matters of military policy. Mr. W. T. Stead would fasten it wholly and solely upon Lord Curzon, who as Viceroy has practically the power to declare war or make or preserve peace. In the April issue of The Review of Reviews we read:—"The reverberation of the Japanese victories will make it more than ever necessary that Europeans who hold dominion in Asia should comport themselves civilly towards their Asiatic fellow-subjects. Especially must Anglo-Indians abate that detestable 'Side' which the most of them assume in their dealings with natives. Among the outward and visible signs by which this change of heart should be manifested to the world, the recall of Lord Curzon is urgently necessary. The advent of a Liberal Government at home ought promptly to be followed by the installation of a new Viceroy at Calcutta. Fortunately, in Lord Selborne, the pro tem. High Commissioner in South Africa, they will have a trustworthy successor ready to hand. Lord Curzon began well. He has degenerated. He forced the Empire into the buccaneering expedition into Tibet against the counsel of his own Commander-in-Chief, and he would have involved us in the immeasurable disaster of a new Afghan war if he had not been peremptorily overruled from home. His recent utterances have given just offence to the educated Hindus, and it is a cause for profound thankfulness that the time of his removal draws near. A Viceroy to whom an Afghan war is regarded as other than an intolerable and Imperial disaster is a Viceroy who ought to be recalled by telegram the moment his bellicose designs are known to the Government at home."

A writer in the pages of the North American Review, evidently an "Anglo-Indian" apologist for the Viceroy, gives to the world a scheme for the conquest of the Amir's territory as is said to have been propounded by Lord Kitchener. The Sirdar has visited the frontiers and formed his own opinions on the spot. To save India from Russian aggression is to arrange for the defence of some 700 miles of frontier lying between Karachi and Peshawar. The tribes inhabiting the regions between India and Afghanistan are wild still and have not been tamed sufficiently to only keep quiet when trouble ensues at their back, what to say of aiding the British troops and the Afghan soldiers to beat back their common enemy. Russian railway activity in the north and north-west of Afghan territory makes England uneasy. The intention now is to create outposts in advance of the red line far into the interior of Afghanistan.

The Russian bugbear is of course the only cause of this intense desire to go further and further. The immediate danger hovers over Afghanistan, though the objective of the dangerous party lies eastward from those wild regions. Absorption of the Amir's kingdom into the Russian Empire is as certain as speedier and frequent attempts upon India in that case. In the face of such a certainty some politicians advise partition of the buffer state between the two European Powers on both sides. England cannot bear the idea, and for two reasons. Her sphere of influence extends over Afghanistan "where our influence has been established and our interests materialised." The policy should be, the writer in the Review says, to sterilise the glacis of India. So Afghanistan must be guaranteed. To do so the Amir must do two things: to sanction the construction of railways and to let the Afridi and other hill tribes severely alone, to be dealt with by the British Government of India. As the Amir is sure of the good intentions of the English and must also look to them for aid in danger, the writer thinks he will be easily tractable. Afghan shrewdness is perhaps too deep for him.

If the Amir's wishes and temper in this affair are matters of mere guess-work the steps that are being taken in India mean very serious consequences. Telegrams, travellers' accounts and special reports have begun to pour in and the Anglo-Indian Press is growing restless over a possible Russian coup some day over the Pamirs and across Afghanistan. The feverish activity on the part of Russia in Central Asia may be the effect of the Kabul Mission whose work obviously lay in minimising the possibility of the ascendancy in Kabul of the influence of a Power whose insidious march Indiaward has been the cause of so much bloodshed and expenditure of men and money in the frontier. Be that as it may, Lord Kitchener has made up his mind to make the large army still larger. Lord Kitchener's reforms are based on the latest experience and the most recent military science, and they aim at making the heterogenous forces of India uniform, efficient, and ready in peace time to pass into a state of war. Many of his schemes will take time. He wishes to create real Indian officers possessed of initiative and independence; and if he succeeds he will add enormously to the strength of the Indian army. He is straining every effort to make his army self-contained and in a short time he will cease to depend on Great Britain for his guns, rifles and ammunition. This is all very good as far as the efficiency of a force is concerned.

In this as in other affairs India cannot be independent of England. For two things Great Britain must come to this country's rescue. Reinforcements must come from England alone, though the colonies may send a few regiments or so. But England must find the money for the stupendous task. The Army charges on India already amount to one-fourth the total revenue. But this sum has to rise very high to make the defence of India possible in the sense in which Lord Kitchener understands it. What to say of the margin of taxation being perilously small we have really reached the breaking point. Unless the tension is relieved a little, a crash may come any day. Plague and famine give warnings of the coming catastrophe. Assuredly then India can neither find the money nor the army to add the defence of Afghanistan to that of her own. The tax-payer of England must, the writer says, pay the bill and find fighting men.

But it is one thing to say it in the press, or, for that matter, even in Parliament, it is quite another thing to induce the Ministry to do it. During these years all increase in the Army charges have been debited to India. We have little hope of relief from the British Exchequer. Hope or no hope, we cannot but look with dismay and indignation at the slow but sure development of a new policy foreshadowed by Mr. Balfour in his speech on Army Reforms when he said that the battle for the defence of India must be fought beyond the external frontiers of India. The Prime Minister began to feel the ground; Unionist and Russophobe papers are paying the way; Lord Kitchener will enforce its claims; and Lord Curzon will sanction it. God save us from such a catastrophe.

The Military expenditure in India.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 11th May, says :—The Indian Social Reformer makes a timely quotation from Sir Robert Peel against those who are for piling up fresh military burdens on the poor people of India, who, if they had their way, would convert India into an armed camp. 'Peel was not afraid to say,' writes Mr. Morley in his Life of Cobden, 'that it is impossible to secure a country against all conceivable risks. If in time of peace you insist on having all the colonial garrisons up to the standard of complete efficiency, and if every fortification is to be kept in a state of perfect repair, then no amount of annual expenditure can ever be sufficient. If you accept the opinions of military men, who tell a Minister that they would throw upon him the whole responsibility in the event of a war breaking out, and predict the loss of this or the other valuable possession, then the country must be overwhelmed by taxation. It is inevitable that risks should be run.' Heavy military expenditure, Peel declared, meant heavy taxation, and heavy taxation meant discontent and revolution. He repudiated the old maxim, Bellum para si pacem veiis. A maxim that admits of more contradiction, he said, or one that should be received with greater reserve, never fell from the lips of man. Unfortunately for the people of this country the Government of India has almost a military constitution, with seats in the Executive Council both for the Commander-in-Chief and the Military Member. It is in our opinion an essential reform that the Commander-in-Chief should be deprived of his seat on the Executive Council.

ADVOCATE,
7th May, 1905.

Remission of land revenue by Government on account of frost, and the petty zamindars in the United Provinces.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th May, says:—It was an act of great prudence that the Government did not give an occasion to the different agencies working between it and the tenantry to have any hand in finding out the amount of remission of rent to which they were entitled on account of the late visitation of frost. The orders have been gratefully received by the tenants in every part of these provinces, and they will be the source of saving thousands of tenants from distress and misery. The amount of help thus given is real, and every pice of it has been availed of by those for whom it was intended. But these orders have not given satisfaction to the zamindars with small means. In the course of the week we have received two vernacular communications from two distant parts of these provinces, Allahabad and Bulandshahr. The zamindars of these places feel that the recent Government orders will not prove beneficial to them; both of them hold more or less the same views and think that the remission policy though helpful to the tenants, is not helpful to them; on the contrary it may rather ruin them. Similar views are held by a large number of petty landed proprietors in Oudh. We must at the outset say that we have no sympathy with the zamindars who in their selfish interest go so far as to condemn the generous policy of the Government. Their troubles have our sympathy, but not their hard-hearted suggestion that they should not be made to contribute towards the remission amount. They say remission means their ruin in so much as they will have to borrow to pay land revenue this year, and the debt will not be realised in the years following. As the debts against the cultivators shall be written off, landlords will be unable in even prosperous years to realise arrears from the cultivators. It is argued with some force that ordinary middle class zamindars have very little margin left to them. They cannot meet the Government revenue from the current demand, and they cannot go to rich zamindars for a loan which it will be possible for them to pay off. * * * * * * * *

We understand that some zamindars are thinking of making a representation on the subject to the Local Government. We hope that the zamindars will not give a handle to their opponents by making any ridiculous proposal as to the amount of the money which should be remitted to the tenants, and thus proclaim to the world that their interests are antagonistic to the interests of the cultivators. They can ask some more concessions on their own behalf in which prayer they may have the sympathy of their tenants also without injuring the latter.

HINDUSTANI,
10th May, 1905.

Remission of land revenue by the Government, and the petty zamindars in the United Provinces.

4. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 10th May, publishes a letter in which the writer contends that the recent orders of the Local Government regarding the remission of land revenue on account of the frost in the United Provinces, while saving the tenants from distress, will prove ruinous to petty zamindars, who generally live from hand to mouth. The zamindar is, for instance, allowed a remission of Rs. 500 in the revenue he has to pay to Government, and for this he is required to remit Rs. 1,000 of rent to his tenants, so that he must borrow Rs. 500 to make good the deficiency, and carry on his business. Moreover, the zamindars have to pay the cesses in full, no remission having been made in them. All this is calculated to make the lot of zamindars, especially the petty ones, very hard, and indeed the Government would do well either to require the zamindars to remit only the same amount of money in rent as it, on its own part, remits to the former in revenue, or simply suspend and not remit the payment of revenue, so that the zamindars may be able to realize the suspended rent in future, and thereby pay off the loans they may have to borrow for tiding over the present exigency.

Commenting upon the above letter, the editor condemns the suggestion of the correspondent as narrow-minded and selfish. He admits that the financial condition of petty zamindars is not satisfactory: but it will be absurd for them to request the Government to withdraw its concession of remission of revenue. The zamindars had better ask Government for some special concession to themselves, as for instance, leniency in, or suspension of the collection of unremitted revenue from them during the present year. As regards the general complaint of the zamindars that they are left with a very small margin of profit from their estate after paying the Government dues, there is little likelihood of its being removed until and unless zamindars as a body join in with the Congressists in demanding a suitable reduction in the present rates of the assessments of land revenue.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 7th May, 1905.

Complaint regarding the ill-treatment of a woman by a Police constable at Allahabad.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 7th May, publishes a communication as follows :—Sir,—It was my lot to witness a very painful spectacle in this city on Tuesday morning, the 2nd instant, at 11 o'clock, on the City Road just near the railway overbridge. The policeman who was stationed on the spot was severely beating a helpless woman who sat under the shadow of a tree there, for what offence she committed I know not. I was driving on an ekka from the chauk and saw this while passing, and I confess I could not suppress tears in my eyes when I saw this. Till I was out of sight the shoe-beating was still going on, on the neck, the back, the shoulders, etc., of the unfortunate woman. If she was really guilty of any offence, was it, Sir, within the right of the police constable to resort to shoe-beating? And if he could with impunity behave in this shameless manner in open day by the side of perhaps the most frequented thoroughfare in the capital of the province—the seat of the Government and the High Court—what could he not do under other circumstances? And yet we have responsible European officers like Mr. Leslie Porter and leading Anglo-Indian prints like the Pioneer objecting to adverse criticism of the policeman by educated Indians!

Sir, the above case is only typical. It ought not to be passed over in silence by the Police authorities of Allahabad. That they may be able to trace the beast of a constable who so disgraced himself, I have given particulars of time and place.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 11th May, 1905.

Government of India's Resolution on the Police Commission Report, and Police Inspectors.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 11th May, says :—In this article, we purpose to briefly review the Resolution of the Government of India so far as it affects the higher grades of service in the department.

To begin with the inspectors, we are told that 'the Government of India consider that the rule should be that inspectors should ordinarily be appointed by promotion from among sub-inspectors, but that direct appointment should be permitted up to a maximum of 10 per cent. of vacancies. The duties of inspectors will be to hold charge of circles comprising several police stations, or a large town; and within these they will exercise general supervision and should be ready to assist in investigations. They will, in short, be responsible to the Superintendent for all police work in their circle.' Now, so far as the principle of appointment by promotion from the lower grades goes, we think it is difficult to commend or condemn it in the abstract. Its success to a great extent depends upon the sort of men who fill the lower ranks of the service. The sub-inspector is bound to carry with him in his higher sphere of official life the weaknesses and the shortcomings which have been his characteristic in his subordinate position. On the other hand, it is plain that the prospect of promotion ought to act upon him as an incentive to good conduct and trustworthy ways, while the experience acquired in subordinate positions will always come handy to him in checking the errors of his subordinates and controlling their work when he finds himself raised to the next higher rung of the ladder. It is thus obvious that the real reform must begin with the sub-inspector. He is and ought to be always the one important unit who requires to be paid the greatest attention. Judicious recruitment of sub-inspectors ought to furnish the Government with an efficient and reliable body of inspectors, and judicious recruitment must, as we have more than once had occasion to remark, have regard to the educational and moral qualifications of the men who are taken in, and not to mere accidents of birth or family connections. As it is, the Police Department is the great asylum for the do-nothings and despairs of both the Indian and European society, though we are free to confess that there are here, as everywhere else, honourable exceptions. With regard to direct recruitment, we are disposed to think that the percentage allowed by the Government is not sufficient, and that it would, on the whole, have been better if the recommendation of the Commission 'that Government should reserve the power to appoint direct a certain number, not exceeding twenty per cent.,' had been accepted by the Government of India. There is, to our mind, a great need of fresh and pure blood being infused into the department, and we only hope that in making direct appointments, the Government will not allow themselves to backslide into favouritism. We note with regret that no educational qualifications are laid down by the Government for those who may seek to enter the department by direct appointment. Having regard to the emoluments of inspectors, which we think are decent enough, the Government should be able to attract a good body of men with fairly high educational merits. The pay sanctioned by the Government for this class of officers is divided into three grades—Rs. 150, Rs. 200, and few special appointments on Rs. 250 a month. We also note with pleasure that 'the local allowances to kotwals in a few large cities in the United Provinces will be retained by reason of the special status and obligations of these officers.' 'As regards travelling allowances the Government of India have decided to grant to circle inspectors a daily allowance of Re. 1 when absent from headquarters, and to sanction fixed horse or conveyance allowances for inspectors in charge of towns and prosecuting and reserve inspectors. So far as the travelling allowance goes, we feel bound to say that it is inadequate in the extreme. The ordinary duty of an inspector making it necessary for him to constantly travel in the interior at considerable distances, it is ridiculous to expect that he should be able to meet the ordinary expenses of travelling within one rupee per diem. As it is, an inspector's visit to a police station in the interior, like the visits of so many other officers, is nothing short of a visitation disturbing the equilibrium of the entire station. The burden of hospitality generally falls on the immediate subordinate, and it is notorious that that burden is, but by a shrug of his shoulders, easily shifted on to the shoulders of the people. If the true state of facts were known, many a sub-inspector could give his tale of woe in this matter. The inspector sahib, like so many other sahibs, has to be kept in good humour, for he has the ear of the Superintendent of the Police, and what better way can there be than that he should be fed well, his myrmidons—for the inspector sahib is generally surrounded by a host of them—should be ingratiated with—his horse should be taken good care of—and nothing left undone to see that the inspector sahib should leave the thana well pleased with himself and the thanadar sahib. All this means money—and where is it to come from? Surely not from the pocket of the sub-inspector. Unless, therefore, an immediate metamorphosis of inspectors into supremely contented or scrupulous beings is expected, or unless it is anticipated that the future race of inspectors will be prepared to feed themselves on thin gruel and their horses will be like automatons absolutely above the wants of their animal nature, it is, as we have said, ridiculous to expect that this allowance of one rupee a day will suffice to purchase for them their ordinary conveniences and an ordinary degree of scrupulousness.

Before we close this article, we desire to say one word about court inspectors. To our mind, court inspectors are an anomaly and an anachronism. The ordinary duty of a court inspector is like that of a Government pleader, and we see no reason why the Government should not have paid public prosecutors for Magistrates' courts. In these days when court inspectors have not unoften to be pitted against trained lawyers, both European and Indian, it seems absolutely necessary that the prosecuting staff of the Government should be a competent one. We all know the extent of the legal knowledge or training of the court inspectors in general, and it cannot be pretended that the Government cannot get a sufficient supply of trained lawyers to supplant court-inspectors. The advantages of having trained lawyers to prosecute their cases, will certainly more than counterbalance a few disadvantages that may result from the abolition of this class of officers. As it is, court inspectors are not unoften found to be sitting alongside of Magistrates and advising them, instead of pleading before them, and though they may rejoice in this distinction, it is certain that in not a few cases the confidence of accused persons in our courts is shaken by the manner in which they behave or are allowed to behave themselves in courts. This is a point which may well have attracted the attention of the Government, but perhaps, considerations of prestige will not suffer it to be done.

HINDUSTANI,

1905.

France and Japan.

1. THE Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 17th May, referring to the alleged breach of neutrality by France in allowing the Baltic Fleet to stay and coal at the French harbours, observes that in spite of its solemn assurances of maintaining neutral attitude France may have given help to the Baltic Fleet because she fears that the success of Japan against Russia will leave Japan free to deal with France and Germany and oust them out of the Far East for good. The Japanese press is of opinion that France has violated the laws of neutrality by giving help to Russia, and appeals to England to interfere in accordance with the Anglo-Japanese agreement by which England is bound to help Japan in case any other Power helps Russia. Moreover England's interests in Asia are identical with those of Japan, and therefore the union of the two Powers will not only benefit the latter but will also enhance the prestige of the former, and put a stop to the bloodshed now going on between Japan and Russia.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Indian settlers in South Africa.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th May, says:—The various methods adopted by the colonists of South Africa to drive away the Indian settlers from that part of our common Empire, cannot of course all be honest. The end, the anti-Imperial end of these self-advertising 'Imperialists' is to have nothing to do with Indians in any shape or form—excepting of course the enjoyment of the fruits of their labour. And they, practical politicians that they are, believe that the end justifies the means. A curious illustration of this is furnished by our exceptionally disinterested and useful contemporary, the Indian Opinion of Natal. The facts are briefly as follows. The Potchefstroom people are very much exercised over the proposed erection of a mosque by the Indian Muhammadans. At the Town Council meeting where in spite of legal opinion to the contrary, the Councillors decided to oppose the erection of the mosque, they also passed a resolution instructing the Medical Officer to make an inspection of that part of the town and report at once to the Council. And the Medical Officer submitted the following faithful report according to their desire:—

> The premises were on the whole fairly clean, but if any epidemic broke out it would be very difficult to disinfect them, as they largely consist of a patchwork of shanties of all shapes and sizes.

We will content ourselves with endorsing the following comment of Indian Opinion on the above:—

> The question naturally arises: what has the Officer been doing all this time? The plague has been in the Transvaal now for a year, and the premises have not been found a source of danger. To-day, they are found to be an urgent danger to the town, and must be dealt with at once, not to prevent the plague, but—the building of a mosque! This would be ludicrous, were it not so openly dishonest.

ANANDA KADAMBINI, July, August and September, 1904.

Need for repairing the ghâts at Mirzapur.

3. The Ánanda Kádambini (Mirzapur), in its joint number for July, August and September, says that the ghâts on the bank of the Ganges at Mirzapur are falling to pieces. They have consequently become a source of very great danger to the general public who resort to the river in large numbers to bathe daily. Mr. Wyndham, the present sympathetic District Magistrate and Chairman of the Municipal Board, who has done much to improve the condition of many a road in the town, would do well to take immediate steps to preserve the ghâts which are so useful to the Hindu community. The descendants of the builders of some of the ghâts are still alive, and they are rich enough to repair their ancestors' ghâts if some pressure is brought to bear on them. Failing this, Mr. Wyndham can easily raise subscriptions from the well-to-do residents for the purpose, if he induces the Municipal Board or Government to bear half the cost of the needed repair. The writer hopes Mr. Wyndham will lose no time in taking the matter in hand in earnest.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th May, 1905.

A butchers' strike at Saharanpur.

4. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 19th May, publishes a long communication in which the writer complains that there has been a strike among the butchers at Sahâranpur for the last 45 days, but that the municipal board has not yet taken any steps to provide a meat supply for the people. The Muhammadans cannot get meat even for their religious ceremonies. A Muhammadan required beef for the performance of the fâtiha ceremony, and obtained permission from the Municipal Secretary to sacrifice a cow. When he applied for the services of the municipal munshi and another servant to supervise the sacrifice, he was required to submit the letter in which permission had been granted to him. When he produced the letter he was told that the Municipal Secretary's permission was against the opinion of the District Magistrate and the letter was detained. The Muhammadan had to defer the fâthia ceremony. Another instance of official high-handedness is that a Muhammadan was arrested, kept in police custody for four days and then sent to the Magistrate for trial for having a quantity of meat in his possession. When the Musalmans met together to consider the question of sending a deputation to His Honour, the Court Inspector or some other police inspector appeared on the scene and induced the Musalmans by persuasion and threats to abandon the idea. At last some Muhammadans quietly left for Naini Tal one by one and are still staying there with a view to presenting a memorial to His Honour. The Municipal Board has sanctioned Rs. 10,000 to arrange for the supply of meat, but only six goats are killed every day. The Muhammadans of Sahâranpur whom Mr. Bower considered to be disaffected towards Government are a very loyal and law-abiding people. If the meat supply were stopped at any town in Rohilkhand, serious consequences would follow. Before interfering with the meat-market the Municipal Board should have made some arrangements for the supply of meat. At present the Hindus have the ear of the local officials and have freely spent money, as much as Rs. 25,000, in bringing about the existing state of things.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 14th May, 1905.

Alleged anxiety of the Government of India for loyalty being taught to school boys.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th May, says:—The Government of India has of late been taking precious good care that loyalty is taught to school boys by means of such books as Lee-Warner's Citizen of India, and its general repressive educational policy is also designed, at least partly, to make of the future generations of educated Indians more loyal subjects than patriotic citizens. Certainly the leaders of Indian thought and activity make no distinction between loyalty and patriotism. On the contrary they are so firmly persuaded of the necessity of British rule over India for the good of India herself that, to quote the language of the late Mr. R. M. Sayani, one of our ablest Congress Presidents, they are loyal because they are patriotic, and patriotic because they are loyal. And the efforts of educated Indians have been systematically directed to securing such wholesome and progressive reforms in the system of British Indian Government that more and more loyalty may become synonymous with patriotism in the national mind.

It is precisely because there is a guilty conscience troubling the mind of Government that it is not a purely disinterested agency striving primarily for the welfare of the people and only indirectly seeking to gain by holding sway over India, it is because of the consciousness of departure from plighted word and of the perpetration of gross political and economic injustice on the people that it is unable to see eye to eye with educated Indians, that to be patriotic is to be loyal on the part of an Indian. They of course fare better in independent Japan. There as Baron Suyematsu says in an article in the Nineteenth Century, the country, the land, the people, the nation, and the State are co-extensive, and may be said to be one and the same thing. Also, the reigning Emperor, the Imperial dynasty, and the State are 'the most lofty object of all that Japanese people can ever have before them in the secular world.' The Japanese educational system, therefore, rigidly enforces the doctrine of patriotism side by side with loyalty. 'In the Japanese conception, true patriotism includes love for the Emperor, and true loyalty includes love for the country, and loyalty and patriotism may be said to be almost identical as to their relative purport.'

A mixed case at Agra.

6. The Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 8th May, states that a hot argument lately took place between one Lieutenant Ford of the Welsh Fusiliers and a Lala Badri Prasad, photographer, at Agra, re some money matter: both the parties instituted prosecutions against each other in the court of the Joint Magistrate. On the 6th May the Magistrate dismissed the Lala's prosecution, and convicting him of the charge brought against him by the Lieutenant sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 100 and 10 days' rigorous imprisonment. The Lala has been released on bail pending his application for revision to the Sessions Judge.

AGRA AKHBAR,
14th May, 1905.

A mixed case at Agra.

7. The Agra Akhbár (Agra), of the 14th May, referring to the mixed case at Agra, says that while Lala Badri Prasád produced witnesses in support of his defence, and Lieutenant Ford's complaint was quite unsupported, the European Joint Magistrate held that a statement made on oath by a European military officer against an Indian could not be treated as false, and convicted the Lala accordingly. The Commanding Officer of Mr. Ford's regiment is reported to have written, during the trial of the suit, letters to the Magistrate, urging him to convict and punish the Lala severely so that it would have a deterrent effect on other Indians. The Sessions Judge in revising the case upheld the fine, but reduced the sentence of imprisonment to that of one day's simple imprisonment.

HINDOSTHAN,
12th May, 1905.

The Native Press in Bengal.

8. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar) of the 12th May, says:—It is indeed too unhappily true that the most prominent feature of Native journalism, particularly in Bengal, is that most objectionable and undignified trait of personal attack into which is infused the most malicious venom and vindictiveness. Journalism, in the true sense of the word, should be absolutely free from this imputation; and it is a maxim universally recognised in higher journalism throughout the world. It is, of course, good journalism to attack and point out weak points and defects in any man's policy—that is, to attack and expose the policy and its whole rottenness; but it is distinctly bad journalism to attack the personality and individuality of the official whose policy may come in for proper condemnation. And it is precisely in this respect that the Native Press in Bengal show a most lamentable lack of discrimination—a process of vilification which not only destroys the intrinsic merits of criticism and detracts from the influence and weightiness of the journal which indulges in this kind of invective, but lowers the reputation and prestige of such a paper, depriving it of serious notice or respectable attention. It is a notorious fact that the Bengalee Press is particularly given to this style of journalism—a style which is a standing reproach against the intellectuality of its editorial staff and leaves the imprint of bad taste and vulgarism on the personnel of the managing proprietary. It is a defect greatly to be deplored, as it converts an otherwise respectable paper into a scurrilous sheet—a thing which no man respects. If, on the other hand, the Bengalee Press would rid itself of this taint, its opinions as a representative body of an influential section of the Indian community, would carry far greater weight and receive greater consideration from Government, which would not only justify their existence, but would be doing a real and substantial service to their countrymen whose interests and welfare they profess to have at heart.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th May, 1905.

India under British rule.

1. THE Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 19th May, observes that as the people of India have no direct access to their sovereign under British rule, they are reduced to the position of orphans. The ancient sovereigns of India used to live in the country, so that the people could easily bring their grievances to the former's notice, and have them readily redressed; but now the British sovereign of India lives beyond the seas, and the people not having him in their midst, can neither love, nor be loved by him. The British Government appoints, it is true, a Viceroy to rule over India, but the Indians are never likely to be as well treated, looked after, &c., as Englishmen living in England are. India is at present aggrieved in respect of many things, such as the police administration, the recruitment of the public service, the administration of justice in mixed cases, &c., but her sovereign being away, she is left to bear her grievances unredressed, the local British rulers not having that genuine sympathy with the people of India as a father has for his children or a sovereign for his subjects.

Disappearance of a young Pathan at Rampur under suspicious circumstances.

2. The Jám-i-Jamshed (Moradabad), in its joint issue of the 7th and 14th May, publishes in its Supplement, the Rohilkhand Punch, a chapter purporting to be taken from a book called the "Tawarikh-i-Hámidiya" or a history of the reign of Hámid Ali Khan, the present Nawáb of Rámpur, (under preparation), in which the writer states that in June 1900 on a very hot day at noon a couple of fierce-looking armed men were seen forcibly carrying a handsome young Pathan in the direction of the Benazír garden at Rámpur. The armed men had left the public road and were taking their prisoner by an out-of-the-way path to avoid attracting people's attention. The youth, who was utterly bewildered and confused at his arrest, seeing a female gardener working in a field, cried out that his name was Jangi; but before he could utter another word, his captors gagged his mouth with a handkerchief, and dragged him onwards. On reaching the entrance of the garden, the prisoner again cried out and asked his captors to tell him where they were taking him, and what was his fault, and they harshly told him that he was guilty of a very grave offence against the "afsar-i-álá" (lit. highest functionary). At the verandah of the garden house the armed men were told by an officer that His Highness had long been waiting for the prisoner. The unfortunate youth was therefore at once taken upstairs by the armed men, and then after the lapse of about two hours, His Highness was seen driving away from the house with Sahibzadá Munna Sahib, the Home Secretary, nothing transpiring as to what became of the youth.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Comments on the dismissal of a Tahsildar in the United Provinces.

3. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 21st May, briefly stating that one Pandit Ganga Ballabh, late a Tahsíldár in the United Provinces, was summarily dismissed, on ex parte evidence in October 1903, after serving Government for 23 years, and that his appeal to the Government of India resulted in nothing, observes:—With the deepest regret we notice that in these days the columns of newspapers are full of grievances of the Indian subordinate officers who unfortunately fall victims to the Government's desire to save by withholding large amounts of pension from those who are turned adrift penniless to beg their bread in old age when they had been cherishing fond hopes of calm and peaceful retirement after long meritorious services to the Government who sometimes adopt a very peculiar procedure to get rid of them easily. Thus the Local Government have turned a deaf ear to such grievances, and the Government of India have invested the officers of the Home Department with full powers to exercise independent and discretionary power in those cases of appeals without doing justice to, and caring for the troubles of the aggrieved party. But in India the poor 'native' gentlemen are subordinate to the European officers whose occasional acts of injustice do not ordinarily reach the ears of the highest authority.

4. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 21st May, complains that hackney cart-drivers at Allahabad, especially Musalmans, who generally overload their carts, beat the animals most mercilessly, when they are not able to draw the heavy carts quick enough. The writer himself saw the other day a lad cruelly beating three lean buffaloes of a cart in which as many as sixty bags of grain, each weighing two maunds, were loaded. The new Municipal Chairman would do well to take steps to put a stop to the cruelty which hackney cart-drivers practise on dumb animals with impunity.

5. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 24th May, complains that the Meerut and the Aligarh trains reach Ghaziabad in the evening at such an hour that the passengers have to wait two hours before they are able to resume their journey. Again, they are not allowed to pass this time on the station platform, but are driven by the subordinate Railway employés into a small close room where at this time of the year one is reminded of the Black Hole. Moreover, while a waiting-room and nice benches are provided for second class passengers at railway stations, even common benches are not provided for poor intermediate class passengers on which they might sit for the time they have to wait at a station. It would be well if respectable intermediate and third class passengers were allowed to wait in the waiting-rooms on payment of small fees. In that case a grievance of native passengers would be removed and the railways would have a new source of income.

ADVOCATE,
1st June, 1905.

Treatment of India as a party question in England.

1. THE Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st June, referring to the question of making India a party question in England, says :—The literature on this subject has already become voluminous. The Anglo-Indian papers are also taking part in the discussion, not without importing banter into the affair. The Statesman, the Advocate of India, and the Times of India have given some attention to the subject, the last in the spirit of the scoffer. There is of course some truth in the view taken by the Times that throwing in our lot with the Liberals may reduce our delegates from apostles to the Indian people into Radical emissaries. But Conservatives and Unionists have practically been weighed in the balance and found wanting. The other Bombay contemporary thinks otherwise. On this very important question our friend says :—"It is proposed that the Indian delegates should generally trust to the Liberal organization in Great Britain for opportunities to address the public, and we think that this is a sound policy. An independent campaign is out of the question for very many reasons, and the Unionist camp, we are sorry to say emphatically does not offer the opportunities which the delegates seek. Nor do we see any harm in handing over Indian questions to party leaders. We have no other political system, and we enjoy no reform or progress which has not been the effort of one political party or another. If progress is to be made in Indian affairs we must rely on the same machinery whatever may be its defects and drawbacks. Indian affairs will, to some extent, be withdrawn from the heat and strife of party bias. So far as we know, the Indian delegates are not going to Great Britain to advise the electorate on the Irish question, the fiscal proposals, secular education and manhood suffrage or any of the great political bones of contention, but will confine themselves to pointing out how progress can be made in matters nearly concerning the destinies of India. Nor, if the delegates know their own business will they colour their statements too highly, or harp too long on the 'bleeding India' string. As to abusing Lord Curzon, one of 'the (British) nation's great men,' we fully sympathise with the British elector's wish to deprecate it from any one else. The delegates may be trusted to keep clear of personality in their advocacy of India's cause as the system is at fault, though its faults may be aggravated by this or that person without meaning to do so."

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st June, 1905.

The Kabul Mission, and its outcome.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 1st June, says :—If the published treaty were all the outcome of the Kabul Mission, it may fairly be said that there was no justification for the despatch of Mr. Louis Dane and his colleagues to the Afghan capital. If, on the other hand, there was in addition any secret treaty, lending itself to the aggressive designs Lord Curzon is suspected to have, then we can only say that that is a fresh act of disservice to India. What we will assume for the time being is that these intentions of Lord Curzon were frustrated by the Amir's unwillingness to yield on those points, and that hence, rather than come back with nothing, Mr. Dane got that precious superfluous treaty from Amir Habibullah which in reality means nothing. If the Amir says he has always scrupulously adhered to the treaty between the British Government and the late Amir, where was the necessity for the despatch of a mission at all unless to secure some fresh concessions from him ? And what was the justification for thinking of acquiring new rights ? And if the new demands were rejected, they must have been of an aggressive character certainly. In the result nothing has come out of the mission so far as the public are allowed a knowledge of the facts. And yet the poor Indian ryot, in whose endless capacity for being bled the Government seem to have infinite faith, has had to pay an enormous amount on account of this abortive Dane Mission to Kabul.

ADVOCATE,
1st June, 1905.

The Advocate on the new Anglo-Afghan treaty.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow,) of the 1st June, says:—The new treaty with Afghanistan obtained by Mr. Dane, with which he is so much contented and satisfied, will not give entire satisfaction to a large section of the people. We confess we are not among those who feel quite satisfied with the wording of the new treaty, because it may lead any day to a serious misunderstanding. British prestige has already suffered in the dealings of the India Government with the Amir. The Government may or may not know, but the feeling in Upper India is that it was a sad mistake on the part of the Government to pay a subsidy to the Amir of Afghanistan. Now this belief will be strengthened when the masses come to know that the principality of Afghanistan which had been so long treated as an independent Indian State on terms little better than those obtaining in Nepal has become a full blown kingdom and its ruler is called His Majesty and no more His Highness. The question is—in return for what promises has this concession been made? What has Amir Habibullah given to India that he should have got a concession on which Amir Abdur Rahman laid so much stress, but died without realizing the hope? The hope that the ruler of Afghanistan might be looked upon much as the great Sultan of Turkey or the Shah of Persia is done was never allowed to be realised. It is even said that Abdul Rahman Khan was allowed to feel discontented with the Foreign Department till his last day. If behind the Dane Treaty there is some other secret binding between the Government of India and the King of Afghanistan, this concession may be permissible. But till such time as the new promises or gains are not made public, public opinion in Northern India where every event connected with the North-West frontier is very carefully watched and commented upon, will consider the mission a failure and the raising of the status of Afghanistan to that of Turkey a grave political blunder. The continuance of the payment of a subsidy to an independent king, who does not conceal his indifference to India and its military needs is another mistake. Mr. Dane is praising the Amir for his hospitality, compliments the Afghans for their good behaviour, considers it remarkable that for five months his mission should have been in Afghan territory without a mishap, attaches importance to the great Darbar where two thousand Civil and Military Afghan officials were present at which Amir Habibullah Khan announced his intention of following his father's policy in dealing with India. But unless Mr. Dane chooses to explain what in return he has got for the concessions granted through him, neither the picturesque scenes of the Darbar nor the charming society of the Amir will remove the feeling of dissatisfaction with which the new treaty has been received in Upper India. Mr. Balfour's speech we publish elsewhere. He spoke with courage. Let us hope when the crisis comes, which, God forbid should ever come, he shall have the support of Amir Habibullah Khan. Mr. Dane's one statement about the non-existence of any Russian influence in Afghan territory must silence such critics as are ever ready to tell the people that Kabul is a hot bed of intrigue and that Russian influence through trade agents is increasing and Kabul is full of Russian influence. Contrary is the testimony of Mr. Dane and it ought to carry that amount of weight which is due to anything coming from such a personage as Mr. Dane.

ADVOCATE,
28th May, 1905.

The Rolt case, and the Bengal Government.

4. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th May, says:—The Government of Bengal has published a long resolution on the case of Mr. Rolt, the Court of Wards Manager, who was prosecuted by a District Magistrate on serious charges of corruption but which could not be maintained in the High Court. Mr. Justice Handerson had left a minute about the case in which he strongly animadverted on the conduct of the local officials responsible for the trouble given to Mr. Rolt. It is this minute which has led to the issue of this Resolution. The Bengal Government, while holding that its officers acted throughout with the best of motives, condemned them for their indiscretion. It had already liberally compensated Mr. Rolt. Nobody is jealous of Mr. Rolt. He was an injured person, and it speaks well of the Government to do its best to repair the injury caused to an innocent person. One remark one is tempted to make in this connection, and it is that had such considerations not been confined to European accused persons alone, had Indians been recipients of such expressions of sympathy, the administration of criminal laws of the country would have become much more easy.

HINDUSTANI,
31st May, 1905.

A suggestion to Government for making some further concessions to landholders and tenants on account of the late frost in the United Provinces.

5. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 31st May, publishes a letter from a correspondent, who contends that the remission of land revenue, which the Government has ordered to be made in the United Provinces on account of the late frost, far from bringing relief to the landholders, will simply add to their distress and difficulties. While the unremitted portion of land revenue will be duly realized from the landholders, the latter themselves will find much difficulty in collecting the unremitted rent from their tenants, and the result of this will be that the majority of the ordinary landholders will have to borrow money, to pay off the Government revenue, at ruinous rates of interest. It would really be an act of great mercy on the part of Government if it kindly suspended collection of the unremitted land revenue for the present season, and advanced takávi to petty landholders and tenants at a reasonable rate of interest.

A suggestion to Government for requiring allBritish Civilians to acquire a good knowledge of the language, &c., of the people before they are given permanent appointments in India.

6. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra,) of the 31st May, complains that for some years past justice has not been properly administered to the people in the law courts in India. The reason is not far to seek. Formerly all British candidates for employment in India were required to learn the language and manners, customs, &c. of the people for two years, before they were appointed to responsible posts. But in these days raw youths, who have passed certain examinations in England, are sent out to India, and are at once installed on the Judge's bench to administer justice. This is very unsatisfactory indeed; and Government should revert to the old practice of requiring all candidates for the civil service in India to acquire a good knowledge of the language before permanently appointing them to any responsible post.

7. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st June, complains that the want of sheds or waiting rooms for native females at railway stations on the Rohilkhand and Kumaun line is a source of great inconvenience to native ladies. The editor has received several complaints in connection with the Pilibhít and the Bareilly City Stations. Females accustomed to live behind the screen are exposed to great inconvenience, specially as doolie-bearers, and coolies too, are conspicuous by their absence on the line. Again, at some stations the booking-clerks are in collusion with the money changers at the stations. When passengers offer a rupee in payment for their railway fare, the booking-clerk either returns the rupee asking them to obtain change or gives them the tickets they want, keeping the whole rupee in payment of the fare without paying them the balance. The railway authorities should redress these public grievances.

He opens the post-office only for an hour or so, in the afternoon, during which he receives and despatches the mails. ADVOCATE,
8th June, 1905.

The coming visit of the Prince of Wales to India, and the National Congress.

1. THE Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th June, says:—We are sure the proposal about requesting His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to open the Congress Exhibition has simply to be thought a little calmly to be pronounced out of court. His Highness will not be at Benares in December. His Royal Highness does indeed come with the set purpose of seeing with his own eyes the wonderful land of Ind and knowing a little of Indian art and civilization, and with the ostensible object of getting first hand knowledge of India and her people under Western civilization. While the glories of British rule and the guadiness of Indian Princes and Chiefs shall dazzle his royal eyes, this will be no occasion for "the feast of reason and flow of soul." The best thing for the Congress to do is to join the popular movement of giving a hearty welcome to the royal guests. This can be done by a message from the President. The welcome from the Congress will surely be an all-India affair and much more representative than any that may be organized in any Presidency town.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th June, in the course of its comments on the Excise Administration Report of the United Provinces for last year, remarks:—We are thankful for what the Government proposes to do, but we do not see any necessity for the adoption of extraordinary precautions. The principle laid down is excellent and it ought to be largely availed of. We hope we shall have in future no grog-shops in religious fairs and in localities the residents of which do not want them. The temperance organizations get thus a field of work in which they may at once commence their activities in order to inform the Collectors where the shops are not wanted. The removal from prominent to obscure places of shops will remove the temptation from the way of many a passer-by.

The burning-ghat at Agra.

3. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st June, complains that the Municipal Board at Agra has ordered the Hindus to burn their dead at a ghát near Tájganj. This restriction will cause a great deal of trouble and inconvenience to those persons who live several miles off. When the Muhammadans are allowed to make use of dozens of burial grounds, without let or hindrance, it is not by any means just and fair to have one burning-ghát for the whole town of Agra. God protect the persons who have to carry their dead friends and relatives long distances on their shoulders for cremation! It is earnestly to be hoped that the President of the Municipal Board will reconsider the order.

Water-supply at Agra.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
3rd June, 1905.

4. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 3rd June, says that Agra has always suffered from the scarcity of water in summer. Even the provision of the water-supply has not put a stop to the complaint. Every year the engine or some other part of the machinery has broken down, and the present summer has proved no exception to the rule. On the 31st May last the water-pipe got out of order, and the supply was entirely stopped from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M.; then a little water came, but did not rise to the upper storeys of houses. The same was the case the following day, and the public inconvenience from the scarcity of water in hot weather may be more easily imagined than described. In order to provide against the contingency when the water-works get into disorder, a large tank should be built at Chipi-tola and connected with the main pipe in the city. The tank should always be kept filled with water, but should be utilized only when the water-works go wrong.

5. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 5th June, says:—So the Government of Lord Curzon has made certain representations to the Secretary of State in Council on the subject of the separation of Judicial and Executive functions in India. That is a statement made by our contemporary of the Pioneer. What the particular proposals of Lord Curzon with reference to this important matter are we cannot well conjecture. But that they are not the Congress proposals on the subject we can confidently predict. Lord Curzon is too superior a person, in his own estimate, to stoop to take the cue to any of his measures or actions from a popular body like the Congress. Perhaps His Excellency has tried his hands to improve the Congress proposals with reference to the question and the result may well be surmised. It was His Lordship who tried to improve the Calcutta Municipal Bill of Sir Alexander Mackenzie and with what result must yet be fresh in our readers' minds. We look forward with no pleasant feelings to the revelation of Lord Curzon's representations on the separation of Judicial and Executive functions.

Branch Dispensaries in the villages in the United Provinces.

HINDUSTANI,
7th June, 1905.

6. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 7th June, complains that the supply of medicines to the Branch Dispensaries in the villages (in these Provinces) is very scanty, so that the hospital assistants in charge find much difficulty in providing suitable and sufficient medicines to patients coming for treatment. The compounders, chaukidárs and the sweepers employed in these dispensaries are also very poorly paid, their present salaries being only Rs. 8, 4 and 2 respectively, which must be raised, if efficiency and diligence in the performance of their duties are to be expected from them.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
11th June,
1905.

British administration of India.

1. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 11th June, says:—There are the strongest reasons why England should treat India with if anything more magnanimity than she shows to her self-governing colonies. We have expressed these reasons many times, and will now only give some of them in the words of Mr. Tozer, who said in his recent paper to the Society of Arts:

> India contains three-fourths the population of the Empire. Her sea-borne commerce is greater than that of Canada and Australia combined. She and not Canada, is really the granary of the Empire, having furnished England during the last three years with 51,384,000cwt. of wheat and 6,627,000 cwt. of flour. As a market for British goods, she is far and away ahead of any other part of the Empire, her purchases last year of the ruling country having been nearly 50 per cent. greater than those of Canada and Australia put together. She has provided scope for the profitable investment of hundreds of millions of British capital, and for large numbers of Englishmen in her army and civil services and in her mercantile pursuits. She contributes 150,000 men and £20,000,000 in money to Imperial defence.

'In virtue of her ancient civilisation, her vast population, her enormous productive power, and her generous contribution in men and money to the defence of the Imperial fabric,' said Mr. Tozer, 'India may justly claim the first consideration after England herself.' But does she get it? The Times of India supplies the answer very moderately when it says that 'it is only the bare truth to say that she does not often get what is her due.' Why? Because the educated people of India do not cry aloud and persistently.

We are glad to have the admission from the Times of India that 'the Indian system of administration has a vital bearing on the economic and industrial condition of the country.' Let those who affect the belief that industrial development does not depend on political conditions and who consequently are all for the former to the exclusion of political activity, bear this great truth in mind. Our contemporary lends its weight to the suggestion frequently made by Indian reformers that the India Office in London has failed of its purpose and sometimes even acted adversely to Indian interests, and says that in any scheme of reform the first attention should be paid to the reform of the India Office so that it may more effectually fulfil the object of its existence. The first necessity from the Indian point of view is the appointment of a couple of Indians to the India Council. A similar step must be taken as regards the Governor-General's Executive Council, and it should further be secured that the Commander-in-Chief will not have a seat in it. The able article of the Times of India under notice will be quoted in our next issue: meantime we cannot but add a word to express our sense of pleasure that it strongly supports Mr. Tozer's suggestion approvingly referred to by us in a previous issue, > that a special industrial census should be undertaken to ascertain in greater detail, than is possible in the general census, particulars of the rural industries and the numbers of persons employed, the extent to which they are affected by competition from without, and what measures can be taken to revive them by instruction or by the introduction of improved appliances.

'Such a survey is essential to the devising of measures which will have the effect of proving really useful.' And we do hope the Government of India will earnestly consider the matter.

Having referred at such length to the Times of India, we may as well say a word on another article printed by it in a recent number, which relates to what it rightly calls 'the biggest fact and the greatest menace that confronts India to-day.' It is plague, 'which is desolating whole cities,' and 'turning some of our fairest regions into abodes of death and woe.' No reasonable man, not even a member of the Government, can deny that 'the most terrible feature of this vast visitation is that practically nothing is being done to stem its ravages. It sounds well-nigh incredible that with literally millions dying around us, no concerted effort to stay the onward sweep of the disease is being made. Yet so it is.' And this, notwithstanding the 'tremendous intimation' contained in the few words:—"Three Million People Wiped Out by Plague in India in Two years." We do not know if this could be said of any other civilised Government. If 'Courage and Sympathy' were really the motto of the Government of India as our Viceregal orator said ought to be, we should have witnessed during the last few years many anxious measures for the material amelioration of the people and many large and far-reaching sanitary undertakings. But where really is courage and where sympathy? Not we are afraid at Simla. The whole article of the Times of India deserves to be read, and we shall publish it in our next issue.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th June, 1905.

Mr. Bonnerjee's speech at the protest meeting lately held in London by Indians, against Lord Curzon's certain utterances and general administration policy.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad,) of the 8th June, refers to the protest meeting lately held in London by Indians against Lord Curzon's certain utterances and general administration policy, and, in endorsing the appeal made by Mr. Bonnerjee, in the course of his speech on the occasion, to the young men of India to take up and carry on the political agitation, observes:—We are glad that Mr. Bonnerjee made a powerful appeal to the young men of India to take up the important work of political agitation at the point where the present leaders will be obliged to leave it, and carry the holy cause to success. This appeal cannot be too frequently repeated. The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale and Babu Surendranath Banerjee seem to feel likewise, for they lose no opportunity of inculcating lessons of patriotism on the mind of Young India. The present leaders are discharging their self-imposed duty with ability and devotion unsurpassed, and to these pioneer workers future generations cannot be too grateful. They have cleared the jungle, as it were, and shown to their successors the path which leads to a reformed and regenerated India. It is for their successors, the young men of to-day, to prove themselves no unworthy countrymen of Dadabhai Naoroji and Gopal Krishna Gokhale by their disinterested and incessant toil for the motherland. May they be inspired by this lofty and unselfish ambition!

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

SANSAR MITRA,
May (June), 1905.

The Amir of Kabul and the British Government.

3. The Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), for May (June), observes that Mr. Balfour's recent speech re the protection of the North-West frontier in India, shows that the Dane Mission to Kabul has been a failure to all practical intents and purposes. The Amir desires to establish direct relations with the British Government and keep an envoy in London for the purpose; but the British Government is unwilling to grant his request, in order to keep Afghanistan under the control of the Government of India. The result is that the Amir too on his part refuses to permit the Indian Government to construct any railway within his territory. The Amir further finds that Russian treatment of Persia is of a very noble nature—the Persian prince has not only been (freely) given military training in Russia, but is considered fit to hold a high appointment in the Russian army. It would be no wonder if these circumstances tended to incline the Amir towards Russia, and he allowed the latter to extend his railway into Afghanistan. But the writer believes that the Amir is too shrewd a politician to allow Russia to do any such thing, which must give very great annoyance to the British Government. The latter would, however, be well advised to retain the good will of the Amir, permitting him even to have an envoy in London, if it be the sine quâ non to secure that end.

Warders in the jails in the United Provinces.

4. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 12th June, re-echoes the views of the Ittihad (Lucknow) on the subject of jail administration in the United Provinces, and agrees with that paper in thinking that the warders in jails have a hard life and are poorly paid. They have to remain on duty for a longer period and receive less pay than their fortunate brethren of the reserve staff who are employed outside the jails, and are usually Government pensioners. They have to pass the whole of their time within the prison walls. They carry no arms and are always in danger of being attacked by the convicts who have got edged tools and implements. Again they have to pay for their uniforms, while uniform is supplied to the reserve guard by Government free. They are frequently transferred from place to place to their great inconvenience and loss. They are on duty for the whole of the day and so have no time to look to their private affairs or even to get food from the bazaar. Their children cannot receive education in the local schools, inasmuch as the schools are situated at a long distance from the jails. Thus any improvement in the status of their children is simply out of the question.

Police reform in India.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 11th June, publishes from a correspondent a communication marked No. 1, as follows :—It is superfluous to observe that the cry for the reform of the Police in India was not of yesterday or the day before. It may be said to be at least twenty years old. Neither is it an exaggeration to state that the cry was universal. It was not confined to one district or one province. Each city, each district and each province of the Empire equally demanded a reform, a reform which should be in every way satisfactory, a reform which should to a large extent allay the unwholesome dread or terror more or less entertained for the force in every nook and corner of the land, a reform which should, as far as possible, stamp out the undoubted corruption rampant in it, a reform, in short, which should entirely alter the present popular feeling of indignation and hatred towards that body, and engender in its place one of genuine respect for an organisation instituted more for the protection of society than for tyrannising over it in divers and devious ways, and for the detection of real crime rather than for its concealment or invention. Reform of this radical but salutary character was demanded by the people in the press and on the platform, not by one community or one race, but by all communities and all races. Neither were the highest tribunals of justice in the land silent on the subject. Cases, now and again, were heard in appeal, where the reviewing judges fearlessly condemned the conduct and action of the police. The law courts of each province can by their records demonstrate the correctness of the statement here made. Indeed, a collection of the most important cases in which during the last twenty years our High Courts of Justice, in their criminal jurisdiction, have fulminated on the proceedings of the police would not only offer most instructive reading, but afford ample pabulum for sensational writers. The realities would prove more romantic than romance itself.

Such being the general character popularly ascribed to the police for at least twenty years past, it was only natural that the cry for a wholesale reform should be universal. Administration followed Administration, but none displayed the requisite courage to take this matter in hand and boldly grapple with it. Two reasons were adduced for the laissez faire policy so long in vogue at the seat of the central authority. Firstly, it was denied that the police were so hopelessly vicious, corrupt and oppressive as was represented. There was the usual popular exaggeration of its character. Secondly, assuming even the condition as generally portrayed, the reform was one which demanded an exceedingly costly perennial expenditure which it was not in the power of the State to incur.

At the commencement of the agitation for reform, the first reason was more prominent and held great sway with the authorities. But as the searchlight of public criticism, as expressed in the Press, and on the public platforms of Provincial Conferences and the Congress was steadily applied to the force, supported by equally stern facts as disclosed in the highest Courts of Criminal Justice, the scepticism on the score of popular exaggeration greatly diminished, while the necessity for reform became more and more insistent. Then the plea of the want of the eternal peace came more and more into prominence. But even that pretext lost its cogency when it became absolutely transparent that the finances of the empire could certainly bear the burden of the additional expenditure needed for the reformation of the police. And no doubt the Indians felt extremely grateful to His Excellency the Viceroy when, among the dozen big problems of administration calling for solution, he courageously included the reform of the police. They were glad to notice the respect which he paid to Indian public opinion in the matter. They were gladder still that, after all, they were to reap the first fruit of the agitation they had persistently carried on when His Excellency appointed the Police Commission under the presidency of Sir Andrew Fraser. Their gratitude, however, to the Government, it must be freely confessed, was not unalloyed. The Indian public was grieved to find that only two Indians were appointed as members of the Commission when it was highly desirable and expedient to have at least one leading citizen from each Presidency and Province of the empire. At any rate, it was loudly represented in the Press that two able Indian lawyers of great experience in matters criminal ought to be on the Commission. There was a unanimous appeal from the country to the Government to place on the Commission the Hon'ble Sir Pherozeshah M. Mehta, who commanded universal confidence and whose experience of police cases was unique. Unfortunately, that appeal remained unresponded to exactly in the same spirit as the one made in 1886 for placing Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji on the Public Service Commission. Indians have no doubt that in either case the Government and the country alike would have vastly benefited by their presence on and assistance to the respective Commissions. In the case of the Police Commission, it goes without saying that the assistance of Sir Pherozeshah would have given the report even a more practical and statesmanlike turn than is to be witnessed therein. However, the Indian public accepted the Commission as it was formed, quite content that at least a good beginning had been made on the practical principle that half a loaf was better than no bread.

Well, the Commission went their rounds. They made fifty sittings, of which thirteen were in Bengal, seven in the United Provinces, six each in Madras and Bombay, and the rest in the other Provinces. They examined in all two hundred and seventy-nine witnesses and received replies from six hundred and eighty-three persons to whom questions had been put. With commendable assiduity and stern impartiality they made their report. They were appointed by the Government of India Resolution of 9th July, 1902, and they submitted and forwarded their Report on 30th May 1903, which was an instance of great and conscientious promptitude. The Report itself is a monument of their great ability and industry. It needs to be well-digested by educated India in order to be appreciated. At the same time, it should be reluctantly confessed that the principal recommendations made in the report for reform fall considerably short of the true needs of the country. Indeed, Indian opinion, so far as it can be judged from what has been represented in the leading Press, is one of disappointment. This disappointment may be discerned in two directions : firstly, in the halting character of the reform, and, secondly, in the manner in which the future recruitment of the important police officers is recommended. It would be well if, for the present, the second matter was allowed to be subordinated to the first. It is a matter connected more with the policy of the Administration than one of executive detail. But the reform itself is of the highest importance. The question, therefore, asked in every well-informed and unbiassed quarter is this : Will the extra annual cost of 1·50 crores of rupees bring about that wholesome change in the conduct and action of the police for which the country has been crying itself hoarse for these twenty years past ? The cost undoubtedly is great, but it might be cheerfully borne provided there was a reasonable and fair prospect of witnessing in a few years the removal of the many ugly evils associated with the present police force of the empire throughout all its grades, the same ugly evils which the Commission have so carefully, so impartially and so vividly delineated in Chapter II of their report. This is the question of questions which has to be answered. It will be carefully examined in the next article by the light offered by the Commission itself in the chapter just referred to.

NASIM I-AGRA,
11th June, 1905

A complaint regarding the water-supply at Agra.

6. The Nasim-i-Agra (Agra), of the 11th June, complains that of all the towns in the United Provinces where water-works have been constructed, the supply of pipe water at Agra is the worst. The pumps are open during the day for 14 hours at Cawnpore, 11 hours at Allahabad, 9 hours at Benares and Lucknow, but only 7 hours at Agra. The income derived from the water-supply is Rs. 34,000 at Cawnpore, Rs. 1,12,000 at Allahabad, Rs. 91,000 at Benares, Rs. 82,000 at Lucknow and Rs. 92,000 at Agra. As regards the annual expenditure on the water-works, it is Rs. 76,000 at Cawnpore, Rs. 53,000 at Allahabad, Rs. 72,000 at Benares, Rs. 53,000 at Lucknow and Rs. 70,000 at Agra. In view of these facts the residents of Agra are fully entitled to claim that the pipe-water should be turned on longer than it is at present.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
11th June,
1905.

The municipal sub-overseer at Agra.

7. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 11th June, complains that the present sub-overseer of the Agra Municipal Board does not possess the qualifications which such an officer should have under the existing rules on the subject. What aggravates the matter still more is that the said sub-overseer, lacking as he does the requisite qualifications, has been given a handsome increment in his pay this year. Surely the higher authorities should call the Municipal Board to account for such utter violation of the rules in the case of the sub-overseer.

OUDH PUNCH,

The Viceroy's speech at the Calcutta University Convocation and an appeal to him to change his policy.

8. A correspondent of the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 15th June, makes some humerous remarks in connection with Lord Curzon's speech at the Calcutta University Convocation, calling His Excellency "nat khat" (a naughty boy). In his speech His Excellency abused the people of India to his heart's content, but the natives too, especially at Calcutta, rose equal to the occasion and held protest meetings condemning his speech. His Excellency had better vacate the cage (retire). If His Excellency were willing to retire, the writer would raise the money to pay his travelling expenses by public subscription. Famine and plague have raged during his administration and there has been a heavy mortality. His Excellency will not be allowed peace even in England. It is time that His Excellency mended his ways. His Excellency should adopt a better policy in future and make amends for the past, and remember that the sighs of the oppressed have overturned the throne of kings.

ARYA MITTRA,
8th June,
1905.

Alleged backwardness of the United Provinces in general progress as compared with other Provinces.

9. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th June, observes that the want of permanent settlement of land, backwardness of education, and absence of any kind of State workshop where the people could learn an art, are some of the principal causes which handicap the United Provinces in its progress, and rather tend to make it retrograde. It is also very unfair that the medical students of the United Provinces should have to go to Lahore or elsewhere for studying for the Assistant Surgeon's examination. There is no reason why the Agra Medical School should not be raised to the status of a college, and the residents of these provinces given facility in entering the medical profession as Assistant Surgeons. Again, what was the necessity of establishing another workshop for manufacturing fire-arms in Bengal while one already existed at Cossipore? Could not the second workshop have been established in any place within the United Provinces? The Government of India has recently conferred another boon on Bengal, by opening an (a central) agricultural college in that Province. All these facts serve to show that the United Provinces is not lucky enough to share in the good graces of the Government of India. The people of the United Provinces have a new grievance against their own Local Government. The Government of India has sanctioned certain technical scholarships to enable Indian students to receive technical education in Europe or America, and asked the Local Government to nominate candidates for the same. But Sir James Digges LaTouche refuses to nominate any, on the ground that he fails to find any suitable candidates. This assertion certainly reflects anything but credit on the kind of education imparted in the schools and colleges of these Provinces, on which a considerable amount of public money is spent. The writer can, however, assure His Honor that several students of these Provinces went to Japan and have returned after mastering various industrial arts, and that some others are receiving similar education in that country at present.

The management of endowments.

SULAH KUL, 11th June, 1905.

10. The Sulah Kul (Gorakhpur) of the 11th June, while not approving of the removal by the Egyptian Government of religious endowments from under the control of the head Kázi, says that the editor is of opinion that in this country also Government should exercise some control and supervision over such endowments. Indeed, the editor will not be silent until Government has made satisfactory arrangements for the purpose. Suppose there is an Imámbára, and according to the will of the donor illuminations are to be held there, and khichra and halwa (articles of food) are to be distributed free among the people during the Muharram. It is the duty of Government officers to see how the illuminations are held and whether the khichra distributed is fit for food. The officers should also see whether there are any savings and how the savings are used. Why should not the savings be devoted to the encouragement of some trade or industry and the profits be made over to the trustee for its use? If the trustee be incapable of managing the endowment properly a committee composed of conscientious and honest men should be appointed to manage it, and submit a yearly report to Government. A Hindu has been made a trustee of a Hindu temple. The management of the endowment is so unsatisfactory in his hands that the income is appropriatad by him and his friends to their own use. Government cannot be justified in looking at these things with indifference. It is its duty to keep an eye on endowments, but of course its interference should not go the length which the Egyptian Government appears inclined to adopt, i.e., setting aside the head Kázi, and taking the entire management into its own hands.

BHARAT JIWAN,
16th June, 1905.

The Indian National Congress and the Prince of Wales.

1. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 16th June, expresses great satisfaction that their Royal Highnesses the Prince and the Princess of Wales will be in India when the next session of the Indian National Congress takes place at Benares, and advises the Congress to invite their Royal Highnesses to open the Congress Exhibition, so that they may be able to see with their own eyes what progress English education has made in this country. A visit to the Congress pavilion will enable His Royal Highness to obtain information regarding the Congress which could not possibly be expected from a perusal of reports. As the object of the visit of His Royal Highness is to get an insight into the condition of the Indian people, it is the duty of the Congress to lay bare the true condition of the people before his eyes. The Congress should not lose such a golden opportunity to invite His Royal Highness to visit the Congress. Indeed, the Congress leaders should be at once up and doing.

ARYA MITRA,
16th June, 1905.

Indians under British rule.

2. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th June, regrets that while the British Government has, ever since the establishment of its rule in India, been conferring blessings after blessings on the Indians, the latter are too stupid to appreciate them. The Britons, in the first instance, snatched the sovereignty of India from the natives, and thereby put an end to the constant mutual strifes and warfare that raged so fearfully among the native rulers, and were a source of great trouble to the people, before the Britons took the supremacy of the land into their own hands. The British Government then took pity on Indian widows and abolished the sati, with the result that they being no longer allowed to immolate themselves on the pyres of their deceased husbands, their number has largely increased in the country, and the public streets of towns are to be found full of prostitutes. The Government has, in the same spirit of kindness, disarmed Indians, so that they may not unnecessarily have to burden themselves with arms. Since the time of Lord Lytton, the British Government has come to shower such blessings on the Indians, it going the length of relieving the people of the responsibility and cares of the administration of the country as far as possible, and loading Englishmen with the same. The result of this special kindness to the natives is that the Government has not only to induce Englishmen to leave their homes and live in a hot country like India, but to make them hold almost all high responsible posts, and be thereby troubled with great anxiety and solicitude for the good administration of the country. Why, Government has now taken even to deputing Englishmen to carry on the administration of the states of "uncivilized" native chiefs. Lord Curzon, the present Viceroy, has outdone all his predecessors in the matter of making special concessions to Indians. He has passed the Universities Act and thereby made it almost impossible for Indians (in general) to graduate, and thus saved them from the very hard labour of studying for the University degrees. He has also been good enough to abolish competitive examinations for public service, for which Indians had to make special preparations, appointments in future being made by nomination, and not merit. Again, Indians are being largely displaced by Europeans and Eurasians in the Police, Railway and Telegraph Departments so that they may quietly sit at home, and do no kind of hard work in any branch of the public service. The Indians were generally proud of their truthfulness and piety, but Lord Curzon in his late Convocation speech denied these virtues in them. This has led the Indians to hold protest meetings in various parts of the country; but the British Government is very shrewd and kind, and it will soon have the goodness to pass some such law as will no longer allow the Indians to undergo the trouble of even holding meetings or forming associations.

EXPRESS,
22nd June, 1905.

Indians in South Africa.

3. The Express (Lucknow), of the 22nd June, says :—The harsh severity and contempt with which our countrymen are treated in British South Africa is evident from a new humiliating regulation that has been inflicted on them. A white man has to pay 2*s*. 6*d*. for a cycle permit, but the Indian 5*s*. In addition, the Indian is by a recent bye-law compelled to wear while riding in the Municipal area a badge costing 2*s*. 6*d*.! One can understand the various means employed by the unscrupulous and unprincipled European colonists to prevent Indians settling in the country for they fear the latter's competition. But the imposition of such humiliating and degrading rules is really unaccountable except on the ground that the local whites enjoy torturing their weak and inoffensive fellow-subjects.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th June, 1905.

Police reform in India.

4. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th June, says:—The Commission has courageously expressed its opinion that "the public system seems to have aggravated the evil," namely of "corruption," both by under-paying the constable and by assigning to him duties which he is not fit to perform. To pay a constable Rs. 6, or even Rs. 7 per mensem, especially when certain deductions are made for uniform, etc., is to offer "strong inducement to dishonesty." No one will disagree with this opinion at which the Commission has arrived on ample evidence. The Indian Government, in its Resolution has, however, very ingeniously sought to modify the generally corrupt character of the constable by pointing out the so-called popular tendency to exaggeration. That may be the opinion of the Secretary, or the personage who drafted the Resolution. But it may be declared without hesitation that it is not the opinion of all well-informed people, who know too well the character of the police as a whole, the character of the police of almost all grades, irrespective of colour or race. Indeed, it may be asserted at the outset that Indian public opinion differs in many respects from the oracular pronouncements of the author of the Government Resolution, and it differs nowhere more widely than in those parts where a far from ingenious attempt has been made to extol the virtues of the white policeman and blacken the character of the dark one, as if the white races were incorruptible; as if corruption of the police in the United States—Chicago, for instance, as graphically described by Mr. Stead,—of the police on the continent, in Paris, Berlin, Rome and St. Petersburg, and in Great Britain itself was not an everyday occurrence. Indians are very careful readers of all that occurs in the so-called "moral" West, and of the immoralities and iniquities of the police in Europe and America. Was it not the case, some years since, that three eminent detectives, Palmer, Meiklejohn and Druscoritch, who had enjoyed a reputation for their perfect integrity, were hauled up before the Criminal Court of London and sentenced to several years' penal servitude? Is it necessary to recall in this place the nefarious history of the crimes of these detectives, these incorruptible policemen till nemesis overtook them and punished their unheard of rogueries? In the case of one of them it was proved in evidence that he had the sangfroid on Lord Mayor's day to rob the insignia of K. C. B. belonging to that great functionary during some social function at Guildhall! It is, indeed, unfortunate, therefore that the Government of India should have endeavoured to whitewash the white policeman at the expense of the black. Take an independent plebiscite, uninfluenced by the official classes, and there will be a wondrous unanimity of opinion that there is not a pin to choose between the character of the Indian and the European policeman. Both are corrupt. And it must be so. Human nature is everywhere much the same.

The mere colour of the skin makes no difference in the verities of humanity. Indian public opinion, therefore, is indignant at the differentiation which the Government of India has attempted between the morale of the Indian and European police. There is no justification for it.

Having thus cleared the ground of misconception and misrepresentation, the further observations of the Commission may be carefully examined and analysed. It is, we repeat, perfectly correct when it declares that the exceedingly low pay which a constable gets is a strong inducement to dishonesty. But will an increase of pay make him honest? If it does, then there would be some hope of reform, some chance of corruption being minimised. But what does the Commission say? It is of opinion that "an increase of pay will not turn a dishonest into an honest official." What is this increase? That a constable should receive an increase of one rupee after three, ten, and twenty years of approved service. This, it may be observed in passing, is "by way of compromise," that is, by way of reconciling the differences of opinion expressed as to the increase by the various Provincial Governments. Fully twenty-four lakhs of rupees will be absorbed on account of this enhanced pay. But the Indian Government is burning with a desire to conserve the strength of the army. It is anxious to reduce the number of troops throughout the empire for garrison duty, that is, for order and protection. In the place of the military, there will be more police of a military character, so that, as finally resolved upon (paragraph 14 of the Resolution) the total cost of additional pay to unmounted police will be Rs. 33·39 lakhs, of which Rs. 19·96 "represents increased pay and Rs. 13,42,880 increased numbers." This financial arrangement should be carefully borne in mind. According to the statistics appended to the Report of the Commission, the number of foot constables is 114,133. The proposed increase in number is put down at 176,936. So that practically an additional police force, military or semi-military in character, is to be raised to the extent of 62,803 which, as pointed out, will cost Rs. 13·42 lakhs per annum. Consequently the Government of India is now about to increase the police force fully 55 per cent. 'The raison d'etre for this addition is unwarranted. It is a question whether the 13·42 lakhs might not have been expended on the existing force itself with the object of obtaining greater efficiency. And here we are brought face to face with the crux of the entire police reform.

The Commission observes that "an increase of pay will not turn a dishonest into an honest official"—meaning such increase as is now resolved upon. But if that increase will do no good in stamping out dishonesty, of what use instituting the reform at all? Of what use increasing the force by 55 per cent? Can it be that by mere addition to the existing strength, dishonesty and corruption could be checked? Are we to presume that, because corruption at present prevails in the police force, aggregating 114,133 men, the addition of the men of the same stamp to the extent of 62,803, will remove the evil? Is this the kind of police reform on which the Indian public is to congratulate the Government? Is this, after all, the wisdom of that authority in the matter? Let the impartial public judge of it. All that can be urged here is this: that it is a strange procedure this method of stamping out or mitigating corruption. The logic of it may be put in the following form: Corruption is rampant. Increase the number of rogues, for the increase will abate the corruption.

But this is not the only absurdity. There is a wider and broader one, to which attention must now be called. If a slight increase in the pay of corrupt constables will not make them honest, why give the increase at all? It is a mere waste of public money, for under no circumstances will the evil be removed. And if the evil be not removed, where is the reform? But does it not stand to reason that in a matter of this character the first and fundamental problem is to recruit the constables from altogether a different set of men than that from which they are now drawn? What is wanted is the recruitment of a class of men of higher morality, men who will be above the petty temptations to which the constables of the day are exposed. It is not from the class of men who are susceptible to the pettiest dishonesty, that we can ever hope to get a reformed police. Hence it is essential to radically alter the recruiting system. It will be worse than useless to go on recruiting the force from the same class of men who now give rise to trouble.

This is the fundamental change wanted. And the present proposal of increase of pay, therefore, seems to be absolutely beside the mark. It will be shown later on how bereft of constructive statesmanship is the reform now proposed and on which strangely enough, the unthinking have been congratulating the Government. The fact is that while the disease has been well diagnosed—or rather now that the popular diagnosis of years has been confirmed by an official Commission—the remedy prescribed is unsatisfactory. It is not even a palliative, let alone the whole cure. This will be clearly demonstrated in the succeeding article.

ADVOCATE,

The posts of school teachers in the United Provinces made pensionable from 1st July 1905.

5. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd June, says :—The Local Government has earned the gratitude of the entire Educational service of these provinces by making the appointments of teachers in all English schools pensionable. Sir James LaTouche has thus righted a great wrong done to poorly-paid employés of the department some 20 years ago. He has thus earned the blessings of hundreds of men. By this measure not only has a wrong been righted, but an advance step has been taken to promote the cause of education by making the teachers' calling more attractive to intelligent products of our Colleges. The Local Government had this question before it for some years. The first step in this direction was to create a Provident Fund for holders of all posts of ten rupees or above in Vernacular Schools. The next step was to make all Headmasterships pensionable; it was intended to make all teacherships pensionable, but want of funds prevented the Government from carrying out its intentions last year. Difficulty of funds having been removed by a large grant from the Government of India, we think the Local Government could not better employ the fund than in making pensionable from 1st July next all posts in English schools. Thus has been carried out the last and most important reform which is likely to promote the cause of sound education in the United Provinces by improving the machinery through which education is to be imparted. With little further improvement in the pay of teachers, the Educational service must prove as attractive to brilliant graduates of our Universities as do other branches of the Government service.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Establishment of laboratories in India for scientific investigation of diseases.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th June, says:—Sad experience has taught us to put little faith in Government Resolutions foreshadowing useful State activity in any department, and we are by no means sure that the latest one about the study of diseases in a laboratory at Kasauli will really result in much practical good. Elaborate correspondence and pretentious Resolutions have generally a tendency in India to begin as well as end in the appointment of highly paid European specialists, whose labours unfortunately do not lead to the promotion of the public weal. Probably the several experts so far appointed by Lord Curzon's Government have done much real good to the country. If so, the public are not aware of it. And it is as likely as not that Mr. Orange and others of these experts have done nothing more than filling comfortable posts on good pay. We can only hope that the new scheme for the establishment of a Central Laboratory at Kasauli and Provincial Laboratories will really bear fruit. And we share the hope of our esteemed contemporary, the Gujarati, that adequate provision will be made there for the training of Indians in the scientific investigation of tropical diseases, and that the Laboratories will be maintained and worked in a true scientific and broad-minded spirit so as to afford to competent Indians full facilities of learning the wonderful secrets and processes of science.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
18th June, 1905.

The use of the Nagri character in the summonses, etc., in the United Provinces.

7. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 18th June, regrets that though the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and other native gentlemen succeeded with great difficulty in getting the Nagri character recognized in courts and other public offices some years ago in the United Provinces, yet the ministerial officials do not faithfully give effect to the Government orders passed on the subject, in practice. True, the summonses and warrant forms used in courts are printed both in the Persian and Nagri characters, but the Hindi forms are generally left blank and the summonses, &c., are issued with only the Urdu forms duly filled in. Similarly, the receipts for water-tax issued to the public by the municipal officials are all filled up in Urdu, so that non-Urdu-knowing persons have great difficulty in checking them, and altercations occasionally ensue between the tax-collector and the payer. Surely the Government ought to insist on its subordinates duly carrying out its late orders regarding the use of both the characters in the papers issued to the public.

CITIZEN,

The late railway assault case at Aligarh.

8. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 19th June, says :—The Railway assault case at Aligarh has ended in the conviction of Davies, the ex-fireman of the E. I. Railway. Whether or not the railway had appointed this man with a full and perfect knowledge of his past conduct, its own conscience knows best. It is, however, a fact that the E. I. Railway authorities try to studiously ignore the antecedents of a European, particularly when he happens to be a jail bird. In support of our contention we may mention the case of the guard, E. L. Corbet, whose case may still be fresh in the memory of our readers. He had on conviction by a jury of the Calcutta High Court been punished with imprisonment by a judge, but forthwith on his discharge from jail was reinstated by the E. I. Railway, and, if we are not very much mistaken, continues at Asansol in the same capacity. You may pass on a European criminal the highest sentence that you may legally pass, but it can produce no deterrent effect on him, so long as he does not run the risk of losing the patronage of his employer.

We cannot in all conscience pass over the recent railway assault case without referring to the ignoble part that the Assistant Station Master, Mr. Carroll, played in it throughout. Not only is his conduct as a court witness deserving of severe condemnation for his evident endeavour to screen the accused, but he should be equally censured for the gross neglect of his duty to protect persons travelling by the railway. The most repugnant part of his conduct was to produce before the lady a harmless poor native as innocent of the crime as the Assistant Station Master himself and ascertain of her if he was the party that had molested her. What led the man to do so has yet to be explained, the statement made by the witness in this connection being far from satisfactory.

Complaint against the Postal Department.

9. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th June, says that the editor has received two envelopes which were addressed to one Saiyid Maftuh-ul Hasan, resident of village Bisauna (?), Post Office Pipalgaon, District Allahabad. These letters were posted at Pilibhit and Bareilly respectively, on the 16th and 18th May last; and though they reached Pipalgaon on the 19th and 20th May, they were both delivered to the addressee on the 3rd June, that is about a fortnight after they had reached the Post office from which they were to be delivered. Similarly one Saiyid Ibadat Husain, resident of the same place (village) received after great delay an official document addressed to him from Sahâranpur, in which he was offered a peshkarship (readership) and was required to join at once, and the result was that as he failed to do so the vacant post was given to another man. This state of things is surely intolerable, and the Postmaster-General should take efficient steps to remedy the evil.

SIPAHI,
27th June,
1905.

A London newspaper on Russian invasion of India.

1. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 27th June, states that the Reynold newspaper published in London says that the War Office in India has written to England that if Russia invades India, England will have to send 200,000 British soldiers for the defence of the country. It is to be regretted, remarks the London newspaper, that owing to misrule in India, England should have to suffer for it. If British rule in India were properly conducted and the people were loyal and contented the millions of the country, who are as brave as the Japanese, would be able to defend the country against all comers. But the difficulty is that 150 years' British rule has reduced the people to abject poverty and made them discontented and the War Office dares not increase the native army in consequence and calls upon England to keep 200,000 British soldiers in readiness for an emergency. Lacs of people are dying of plague in India. The Indian revenues are not spent in feeding the poor classes and improving the sanitary arrangements of the country, but are lavished on grand darbars and missions sent to other countries. The London newspaper has hit the nail on the head. The Indian Government has really been pursuing a faulty policy and will soon have to pay for its mistakes when a whole brigade of British soldiers surrender to the Russians, as was the case in the Boer war. Had the Japanese not been brave heroes but accustomed to surrender like the European soldiers, Kuropatkin would have found his way to Tokio and lorded it over the Japanese. No. commanders-in-chief in India have ever fought against the Russians. They have risen to their high rank by simply fighting against barbarous peoples. Lord Kitchener is the only commander-in-chief who has had some experience in the Boer war. But the Boers and the Russians differ from each other as the two poles asunder. The Indian Government is by no means justified in thinking that the British soldiers will be able to protect India from the Russians. It is the children of the soil who may be relied upon for the defence of India. The Indians have made great progress in education. It is the Indians who helped the Indian Government against the mutineers in 1857 and saved British rule. If they were kept happy and contented they could hold their own against the Russians.

ADVOCATE,
25th June, 1905.

The military control in India.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th June, says :—The Indian Budget debate in Parliament is the occasion for announcing many a decision, not necessarily connected with our finances. Sir Edmond Elles has succumbed in the fight for administrative control to Lord Kitchener. Henceforward the Commander-in-Chief will have full and complete powers in all administrative matters and be directly responsible to the Viceroy. The Military Member thus takes a back seat in the counsels of the Indian Empire when the military policy comes up for consideration; he shall have the supply affair alone under his control. The decision is quite in line with the policy that dictated the formation of the North-West Frontier Province. The Panjab Lieutenant-Governor used to have a hand in the making of the policy as to the treatment of the frontier tribes; it acted like a brake on the military in its not unoften wild run after a desire to hack and slaughter. This wholesome check having been removed, the people now know little of the progress of frontier affairs in these days. But raids have not grown rare; and blockades and counter-raids are the order of the day. And when one thinks of the plan of lining the frontier from the Persian Gulf to Chitral with regular troops, the spirit of aggression may any day be let loose. What is pastime and glory to the Army is death and desolation to the hilly tribes, and pauperisation and famine to Indians.

SIPAHI,
20th June,
1905.

Fear of Russian invasion of India.

3. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 20th June, observes that though Russia has sustained defeats, both on land and sea one after another at the hands of Japan, she does not yet appear very anxious to make peace. The Russo-Japanese war clearly shows that Russia has great resources, and that when she could arrange to send so many lakhs of soldiers to Manchuria to fight with the Japanese, she will have little difficulty in sending three or four lakhs of troops to the frontier of India whenever she is minded to do so. And there is little doubt that sooner or later Russia will invade India, believing as she does that it is England that has set Japan against her. But when Russia knocks at the door of India, the small army that England keeps in India cannot be expected to offer a successful resistance, especially as the Indian soldiers are not given as good training as British soldiers. The British Government should therefore be warned and make its Indian subjects in general fit for defending their country against a foreign invader. Let the British Government hand over the administration of India to Indians, just as it has done the British Colonies to British colonists, maintaining of course its suzerainty over them, and the writer is sure that Russia will never dare turn her attention towards India.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
22nd June, 1905.

Lord Curzon and the Indian visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

4. The Almora Akhbár (Almora), of the 22nd June, says that it would appear from an Anglo-Indian newspaper that His Excellency the Viceroy will be raised to the dignity of an Earl in honour of the Indian visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. But the honours and titles conferred by Government are only personal and last only so long as the recipient lives; while the titles bestowed by public are more lasting. Hence it would be better if Lord Curzon won the affections of the Indian public and made himself entitled to a suitable title at their hands.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th June, 1905.

The Indian Budget in Parliament and Mr. Brodrick's speech.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th June, says:—We are agreeably surprised that Mr. Balfour kept his promise to take the Indian Budget early before Parliament this year, and trust that the practice will not be departed from in future years by the Liberal or the Conservative party. It was a perfect scandal that the affairs of three hundred millions of souls who have no voice in the Government of their own country and who must look to Parliament alone for the redress of their just grievances, should have been taken up on the last but one day of the Parliamentary Session before an audience of half a dozen or a dozen uninfluential members and dismissed in a few hours. We note this year the attendance was less unsatisfactory and hope the so-called 'debate' was at any rate a more lively and useful one.

The speech of the Secretary of State himself in introducing the Budget, judging from the telegraphic summary, seems to have left everything to be desired. Mr. Brodrick entered the India Office with, we believe, the same 'colossal ignorance' of the affairs of this country as his sometime colleague, Mr. Wyndham lately confessed to, and he has given no evidence during the well nigh two years of his tenure that he has learnt anything. The present speech seems to show that he is also incapable of forgetting anything. He has placed himself under the tutelage of the Anglo-Indian fossils at the India Office who, charged with the responsible task of safeguarding India's financial interests, have a weakness to take care of their own class interests before those of the people who pay their liberal salaries. Mr. Brodrick's speech seems to have been simply over-burdened by the customary official fallacies, and at least one momentous announcement he has made, as regards India's Military administration, simply proves in our opinion that this old-world Tory has yet to grasp the very first principles of civilised and responsible rule.

If Mr. Brodrick's lament over the great mortality from plague in India came with ill grace from the supreme authority in the Government of India, who during his two years' tenure of office has done precious nothing to check its awful ravages and to introduce permanent remedial measures for the betterment of the people and the improvement of sanitation, his remark on the so-called 'indifference of the natives to precautions' is adding insult to injury. We challenge Mr. Brodrick to produce his evidence. To start by adopting measures of military rigour in insolent defiance of the most cherished feelings of the people and when they had to be abandoned by their compulsion as it were to swing to the opposite end of the pendulum and become all but absolutely indifferent to their welfare in dire circumstances; if this is Mr. Brodrick's conception of statesmanship and of the duty of the Government to the people, we have nothing to say. But let him at least avoid posing as an injured innocent and representing a non-existent indifference of the people as the real offending cause in respect of the spread of the plague.

The remark of this great authority on the economic condition of the people of India that 'he was convinced that the prosperity of India was now placed on a stable foundation' might be passed over as worth nothing. In sheer justification of the existence of their costly foreign rule they—we mean the Anglo-Indian officials and the heads of the Government here and in England—are obliged to repeat this fiction, and we wish them comfort of the exercise. Only we have to expose the unfounded character of such statements as often as they are reiterated to half-informed and credulous audiences. According to Mr. Brodrick, 'railways were at once adding wealth to the Government and prosperity to the people.' No doubt railways are now yielding a handsome profit to the Government, but how could it be said that they are adding to the wealth of the state unless all the past losses are made up and then they continue to yield more revenues? And as for their bringing prosperity to the people, we confess we are unable to divine the process of logic which led Mr. Brodrick to this egregious conclusion. If he will study the whole question of the influence exercised by the development of railway communication on the economic condition of the people, we venture to confidently predict that Mr. Brodrick will arrive at the opposite conclusion. But he would not be his own self if he paused to do anything of the kind. Worse still, here we have his opinion—which is the decision of course of his advisers at the India Office and which he has only repeated parrot-like—'that the time had come for a definite step forward in railway policy' and that 'he would like to double the present rate of construction!' Wonderful statesmanship, and marvellous regard for the interests of the people this!

ADVOCATE,

The Indian Budget in Parliament, and plague.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th June, says:—Many thanks to our friends in England both in and out of Parliament, who had succeeded in inducing the Ministers to agree to an early date for the discussion of our Financial Statement. It came off on Wednesday evening. The summary sent across the wire deals with our disasters, trade and the Kitchener-Elles controversy. When a responsible Minister does not forget to have a fling at the suffering people of India in the face of the failure on the part of the British Government itself to cope with the evil running amok these eight years in this country, the lot of Indians cannot but be considered sad, very sad indeed. The consciousness that the resources at the disposal of the medical science have miserably failed to affect the destructive career of the plague makes the fling all the more cruel, because quite undeserved. All the same, we cannot forget the lesson of the fact contrary to the theory of the Government and medical officers in India—that the plague broke out in some other countries immediately before or after securing a lodgment in India and was in a short time driven out of its new fields. Why in this country alone has it practically come to stay? Are Indians less cleanly than the people of Egypt? Are Egyptians more amenable to European methods of plague treatment? Is the climate of Egypt materially different from that of India? Not long ago a Bengal Sanitary Commissioner attributed the deaths due to fever in Bengal to less vitality in the people owing to insufficient food. Does not this theory hold equally good, if not better, in the case of the plague.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
25th June, 1905.

The stamp duty on bonds for smaller amounts and the court-fee in uncontested civil suits.

7. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 25th June, in a communication, says that under the former Stamp Act the stamp duty on a bond up to Rs. 25 was only two annas, while under the present Act the duty on a bond exceeding Rs. 10 is four annas. As bonds for Rs. 12 or so are generally executed by the agricultural or labouring classes, the mahajans make advances on the strength of the entries in their books or make use of the same stamp-paper several times in order to avoid the stamp duty. But when law suits arise, the accounts are found in a complicated state. The recurrent surpluses every year have induced Government to grant relief to the people in the matter of income-tax, salt duty, postal and telegraphic charges, and so forth. The cultivator and the labourer are involved in great poverty, and a single failure of crops reduces them to starvation. In these circumstances, Government would do well to grant relief to them in the matter of stamp duty. The rate of duty on a bond up to Rs. 12 should be one anna and up to Rs. 25, two annas. This would not only give relief to the agricultural and the labouring classes, but would also increase the Government revenue. The court-fee in suits decided ex parte is the same as in contested suits. This is not fair, inasmuch as the decision of an uncontested suit takes up much less time of the court than a contested one. It is believed that in the Small Cause Courts in Calcutta and Bombay the cost of litigation is much less in suits decided ex parte than incontested ones. It is highly desirable to extend the practice to other places, making a distinction between the two classes of suits.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 22nd June, 1905.

Police reform in India.

8. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd June, in continuation of his two previous articles, says:—The contention put forth in the last article was that it would be worse than useless to go on recruitinig police constables from the same class of men who are condemned by the Commission as corrupt. The fundamental reform at present needed is to entirely alter the character of that force. What all India wants at present is a police force which is fairly honest—a force in which corruption was rather the exception than the rule. Can it be reasonably asserted that this radical reform will be achieved by the proposals now put forward by the Commission and agreed to, with certain minor limitations, by the Government? To those who have carefully studied the entire problem in all its ramifications for years past, it must be plain that the proposals are destined rather to stereotype the present corruptible character of the Indian Police force than to alter it. And the mere increase of a rupee or two in the wages of the constables will not save the force from the unenviable reputation in which it is held by all classes of the community in the country—a reputation emphasised by the Commission itself! That authority has undoubtedly well diagnosed the disease from which the force is suffering; but it is a matter of regret that it should have failed to prescribe the true remedy for a radical cure. The palliative proposed is worse than useless. For it may be taken for granted that while the recruitment will continue from the same class of men, there will be an increase of over a crore of rupees in public expenditure without any material change in the morale of the force from the one prevailing at present. Practically, therefore, the situation will be this, that while the public will be burdened in future with an additional expense of 1·40 crores of rupees per annum, it will find no compensation for this great sacrifice in point of better morale. So that the last state of the police will be worse than the first.

In support of the arguments herein urged, the reader should bear in mind the one crucial fact in regard to the existing force, viz., that fully fifty per cent. are illiterate, that is, unable to read and write. Thus half the force of the constables is simply made up of the ordinary coolie class. Even the other half, which is supposed to be literate, can scarcely be said to be educated beyond the first or second rudimentary primer. Is it possible that with such a force, so woefully deficient in education, any idea as to elementary ethics and the responsibilities and functions required of them could ever be entertained by them? It is no exaggeration to say that the police constable, be he in capital cities or towns or villages, is no better than the ordinary coolie, ignorant and illiterate, plying for labour in the field or the market, at railways, docks and other public works or at industrial and manufacturing centres. There may be a slight difference of degree, but there is none of kind. Of course, we cannot blame them, for, after all, they are the product of their own environments, which certainly are not the environments demanded for the responsible duties which they are called upon to discharge. It has been said before, and it may be said again, that we cannot hope or look for an ideal policeman. But, if we are to have a fairly honest police force in the future—a police force free from corruption, a police force which is intelligent, and, withal, possessing some moral fibre needed for the peculiar functions it has to discharge, then it stands to reason that the recruitment should take place from altogether a different set of men. We shall come to this point presently. Meanwhile let us show how far even this force of 114,000 or 120,000 constables is situated. We have already pointed out that they are neither better nor worse than the coolies of a variety of character—ignorant and illiterate— who earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brow. But it is a most curious circumstance that this small police force needs to be annually recruited to the extent of one-seventh or one-eighth! It seems that the number of persons annually enlisted during the five years ending 1902 was as under :—

1899	15,279
1900	15,027
1901	15,095
1902	16,518
Average per annum	15,453

This against an average strength of 116,474, signifies 16 per cent. We deem this to be unusual. But the anomaly becomes perfectly intelligible when the following further statistics are borne in mind.

Annual average for the five years ending 1902 :—

Constables under 1 year's service and ten years, 73,582.

Constables of ten years' service and upwards, 61,850.

It seems that fully 63 per cent. of the force is under ten years' service and 53 above ten. The statistics, so far as they go, are not at all satisfactory. If we had before us the number of policemen in service for each year, say from one to fifteen years, we should say they would be found to be worse still. The police force is a fluctuating one. More, it dislikes the service, for otherwise so many would not be constantly leaving. According to the enlistment figures themselves, it is clear that almost the whole force undergoes a change of men every thirteen years! In other words, just when the unit ripens and has acquired experience, that is to say, is growing into a veteran, he departs. That very few stay all through to earn their pensions is proved by the further statistics available under this head, though it is a pity that the official compiler of the tables does not separate gratuities from pensions. The number who leave the service on pensions and gratuities averaged 2,259 per annum during the five years ending 1902. But here is a further fact which greatly emphasises the constantly fluctuating character of the force. Fully 5,054 persons on an average left the service (annually) by reason of resignation, without pension or gratuity. Next the average of dismissals per annum comes to 2,451, while those " discharged otherwise " come to 1,563. Practically, therefore, fully 11,327 persons leave the service beyond those who desert or die. Of those who desert the average is 500 ; and of those who pay the debt of nature the average comes to 2,563. To summarise, the force of the constabulary in all India undergoes an annual change as follows :—

(1) For Gratuities and Pensions	2,259
(2) On account of Resignation	5,054
(3) Discharged for some reason	1,563
(4) Dismissed	2,451
(5) Desertion	500
Total ...	11,827

In other words, nearly 14 per cent. of the force leave it annually for one reason or another. It is evident, therefore, from the official statistics referred to above, that the police service is far from popular. It may be really interesting to know what may be the number of persons on the pension roll and the number who have been regularly in the service for a period of fifteen, twenty, and twenty-five years in each province. Those statistics, if forthcoming, would be a complete telltale, and would go considerably, we venture to say, towards the corroboration of the inferences we have attempted to deduce here on the basis of the statistics available. Apart from the crimes detected by the police and the number of convictions obtained—points which will need separate treatment—it might be reasonably asserted from the facts already adduced that not only are the police constables almost wholly illiterate but fifty per cent. of the literate (who?) may be taken as having received the most rudimentary education of the lowest standard, are no better than the wholly uneducated, and, therefore, utterly unfit to discharge the responsible duties entrusted to them, and are unwilling themselves to serve out the entire pensionable period. Many leave early and thus the composition of this class of men is constantly changing, so much so that it is safe to assert that it is a new force almost every thirteen or fourteen years! The evils of having to draft new men every year to the extent of fourteen per cent. are obvious. They stand confessed. You seldom get a matured policeman of fifteen years' service and upwards. He is rather the exception than the rule. The recruitment, consequently, albeit on a slightly higher wage as now proposed, from the identical class of illiterates, innocent of elementary ethics, and, therefore, necessarily wanting in morale, must be condemned as in no way conducive to the purging of corruption with which the police stands tainted to-day, apart from the other fact that the men are never steady for the purposes of a lengthened and experienced service. So far the reform now contemplated is, we repeat, foredoomed to failure.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th June, 1905.

Police reform in India.

9. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th June, in continuation of the above article, says:—From what has already been urged, it would be obvious to the true reformer that there could be no radical reform of the police force till the recruitment of the ordinary constable, who is the unit, takes place from a better class of the community. Which should be that class? The same which sends hundreds of scholars annually to the University Entrance examination. On an average only a third are able to pass that examination. The rest, that is, those who fail to get through even after three or four trials, have necessarily to take to some minor walk of life. A part of these, no doubt, are sons of the rich and the well-to-do. They take to their parents' avocation or somehow find employment where they can advance their personal welfare. But another part, and that the major, belongs mostly to the poorest—the same class which seeks clerical employment in the lowest grades in offices, public or private. Being in every way better educated than the fifty per cent. of the literates now in the police service in every province, these "failed matriculates," as they are generally known, are just the material for drafting into the police. None will say that an education up to the seventh standard is at all unsatisfactory for the object in view. Again, it will not be gainsaid that the young men have infinitely better notions of morality—albeit rudimentary—than our present constables. They have imbibed lessons at school which they are not likely to forget in their active life. Again, it may be pretty fairly presumed that were they drafted into the police service they would be found intelligent enough in every way to be alive to the responsibilities of their duties. Such being the equipment of the "failed matriculates," sons of the poorer classes, we might fairly make a tentative experiment with them. Let a whole district in any province or presidency be recruited from this class; try and test them for at least three years and see if the experiment could not be extended to other districts as opportunities arise. As stated before, from fourteen to sixteen per cent. of the existing force of constables retire annually on an average, that is to say, fourteen per cent. of those whose service is either ten years or under ten. Here, then, is the field ready at hand, provided, of course, that the authorities who are entrusted with the recruitment conceive no prejudice against the material simply because it is "educated."

There is such an amount of aversion among the superior magistracy and police officers to anyone who is "educated," even if the education be of a low degree, that unless these threw off their irrational prejudice the experiment is bound to fail. Under such conditions the experiment should not be made at all. If prejudice or aversion of the character referred to is the failing of one set of police officers of the higher grades, conservatism is the defect of another set. These have such a deep-rooted dislike to change, however called for, however necessary, and however reasonable, that it is most difficult to bring them round to such a condition of mental attitude as to make them sink their personal dislike for the sake of the greater good which would follow the experiment. These are the apparent obstacles in the way of the proposed recruitment from the class suggested. It will never do to force on an unwilling set of men in authority what they dislike for one reason or another, for it has been found in other departments of the State that such a policy only results in damning a really beneficent experiment at the very initial stage. It never gets a fair trial.

To compare small things with great, take the instance of the Statutory Civil Service. No doubt, it was instituted from the best of motives by that good Secretary of State, Sir Stafford Northcote, afterwards the first Earl of Iddesleigh. There were not wanting a few of the most sagacious Indians at the time, Sir Pherozeshah M. Mehta among them, who foresaw what would eventually happen to the service. The system of recruitment was by nomination ; and it was pointed out at a very early stage of the institution, even before the rules were framed and persons appointed under them, that such a system was foredoomed to failure. Nomination by patronage had proved the bane of the Civil Service in the earlier days of British rule. It was argued by analogy that, therefore, that system in the case of the Statutory Civil Service would eventually prove more mischievous than beneficial to the Indian in his aspiration for employment in the higher offices of the State. But the warning went unheeded. The nominations were made, but within five years the cry was raised that the Statutory Civil Servants were a failure. Of course, they were. It was anticipated. But who wrought that failure ? The very class who made the rules and had from the first been deliberately averse to the institution of the Statutory Civil Service. The nomination system was bound to fail, for there was the abuse of patronage.

It is plain that unless the higher grades of Police Officers took kindly to the proposed recruitment of Police constables in future from the class already suggested, there is no chance of a fair trial. But given a fair field, there is every probability of this class of constables proving in every way more intelligent and honest than the present men. Bribery could be reduced, while the greater intelligence of the men must perforce make for efficiency. Of course, it cannot be expected that this superior class of constables would serve on the same wages as the present recruit. That is out of the question. They should be offered the same wages which they are able to get when employed in the lowest grades as clerks in public or private offices. The subject of higher wages demands a separate treatment, which will be given in a further article.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd June, 1905.

Comments on the new appointments of police inspectors in Bengal.

10. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd June, says :—In our last issue we published the indignant comment of the Bengalee on the appointment of 20 European and Eurasian and only four Indian inspectors of police by Sir Andrew Fraser's Government. The exact figures have since been stated to be 23 and 5 respectively. We will say frankly that we regard it as scandalous that race partiality should be shown in so unabashed a manner in the most progressive province of India even in respect of such minor appointments. Uncharitable critics can only characterize as hypocritical the official cry of greater efficiency in the police department if Europeans and Eurasians are pitchforked into offices which Indians are man for man admittedly more fitted to fill, for no greater reason than the desire to profit Europeans and their half-kinsmen at the expense of Indians. 'Confidence in our national good faith is the sheet-anchor of our rule in India,' said good Sir William Wedderburn. Lord Curzon and his enthusiastic admirer the present Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal are yet a long way from learning that lesson, and this accounts for their light-hearted departure from the principles laid down for their guidance in the Act of Parliament of 1833 and the Proclamation of 1858. We desire to tell them that they are following a ruinous policy. 'The principles of the new management,' the Spectator writes of the Japanese protectorate over Korea, 'appear to be identical with those upon which we act in Egypt, and are preferable to those adopted in India in that the natives are not so completely deprived of self-government and are employed wherever they are fit.' If those responsible for the good Government of India will not take a lesson from Marquis Ito and Earl Cromer, the Imperialists of to-day will only prove themselves to be the empire-wreckers of to-morrow.

HINDOSTHAN,
23rd June, 1905.

Police.

11. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 23rd June, says :—The unpopularity of police service is a notorious fact which is very unfortunate indeed ; but the police itself is to blame for this unhappy state of affairs ; while all the uproar and hubbub which has been and is being made, has served no good purpose, and things are just as they were before. Without the co-operation of the village head, as we have before pointed out, we can expect no improvement, and it is essential that the public should have some reliable authority to copy police proceedings. A magistrate holds his inquiry in public, and anybody can take a copy of it, but nobody can know anything about a police inquiry. It is therefore highly desirable that the village mukhiyás should be authorised to attend whenever a police inquiry is being held in the villages of the mukhiyás. To do this, it would be necessary to raise the status of the mukhiyas ; but it does not matter if, by doing so, the ends of justice are secured.

The British Government is noted for its even-handed justice, but, as far as the police is concerned, it surely does not sustain its traditional reputation. The London police are very upright and stalwart fellows, who will even condescend to stoop down and assist a boy, or a pigmy. They are ever ready to walk with one, and specially a foreigner, some distance and guide him on his way in London, and never ask for a pourboire or tip. But in this country the police are a terror, to whom any and everybody dare not speak. People will place themselves at a respectable distance from where a police inquiry is being held, because they are detained unnecessarily for days and weeks, whenever any cognisable offence takes place in the country. Of course, we have not had much experience of the town police ; but things must be almost as bad there too.

Our Hon'ble Member attributes this unpopularity to the unfair manner in which the police are written and spoken of by certain sections of their fellow countrymen. But we believe they are not much respected at the hands of English police officers either. He then goes on to say that misdemeanours, where they occur, must be exposed,—a sentiment we gladly echo, because people who expose them discharge a public duty ; for if the guardians of the peace shirk their duty, who is to protect the public and the commonwealth ?

We do not, however, understand what our Honourable Member means when he says : " But indiscriminate abuse only does harm." We are not aware of any one who indiscriminately abuses the police. Does the Hon'ble Member mean the Indian public ? If so, we must enter a protest. The Indian people have not the boldness to accuse them. If, however, the Hon'ble Member means the Press, we also fail to see the correctness of this statement ; because the people of the fourth estate are not impartially hard and down upon the police.

We see from the Government Resolution that the members of the Commission in their report have shown and explained many things against the police. Our Hon'ble Member says that " Government may offer better pay and better prospect ; but self-respecting men will not willingly enter a service if they continue to see and hear it denounced in the Press and in the courts as oppressive and corrupt."

We aye the statement ; but might point out that up to the present time, there are not many self-respecting men amongst Indians in this department, nor would the bad impression of days of old seem to be quite yet obliterated.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
25th June, 1905.

Misbehaviour of a police constable at Allahabad.

12. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 25th June, says that complaints have been made against several police constables attached to the police station at Badshahimandi in the Allahabad city. One constable keeps a woman of the chamár caste as a mistress. The matter was reported to the authorities and the constable was suspended for fifteen days. But matters have not got right yet. The police authorities should give their attention to this.

Need for the construction of water-works at Mirzapur.

13. The Khichri Samáchár (Mirzapur), of the 17th June, says that while the supply of water is scanty at Mirzapur during all seasons of the year, the scarcity of water becomes very severe during summer. Mr. Wyndham, the popular and sympathetic District Magistate, who has done much to improve the drainage of the town, would do well to construct water works also.

SIPAHI,
20th June, 1905.

Alleged neglect of the proper training of native soldiers.

14. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 20th June, complains that European officers themselves generally neglect to drill the native soldiers of their regiments, relegating the duty to the sardars (native officers) who themselves are not quite efficient in the art. European officers are, under the standing orders on the subject, required to know the language of the native soldiers of the regiments they command, but there are hardly any officers who do this, and are able to write the vernacular. Again, there is no reason why a vernacular edition of the drill-book should not, along with the English one, be issued for the benefit of native soldiers. The defence of India (when invaded by a foreign enemy) will depend mainly on the skill, power, &c. of the native army, but it is a great pity that they are not trained properly. The Government will reap the fruit of the inefficiency of its native army, when it has to confront it with a civilized nation.

ADVOCATE,
29th June, 1905.

The Bengalee on Lord Curzon's Indian administration.

15. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th June, says :—Now that Committees and Commissions do no more figure, so much in Government notifications and resolutions, the period has come to give effect to the recommendations of many. What has already been accomplished by Lord Curzon does not err on the side of modesty, both as to their number and the incalculable mischief done by the majority of those now fait accompli to Indians and their vital interests. A correspondent of the Bengalee has prepared the list that runs as under :—

1. Exemplary punishment held out to whites for crimes committed on natives.
2. Reduction of the salt-tax.
3. Reduction of the income-tax.
4. Universities Act.
5. Official Secrets Act.
6. Abolition of Provincial Civil Service.
7. Validation Act.
8. Tibet Mission.
9. Delhi Durbar.
10. Increase in the Military Expenditure.
11. Lord Curzon's ill-treatment of the non-official members of his Council.
12. His Excellency's casting aspersions and slur upon the Indians and the Eastern world.
13. His frequent calls on the purse of the zamíndárs, rájas, maharajas to subscribe to various projects.
14. Partition of Bengal.
15. His Excellency's refusal to accept from the hands of Sir Henry Cotton a copy of the Resolutions of the Congress of 1904—an insult to the people.
16. Destruction of municipal self-government.
17. His remission and suspension of collection of assessment.
18. His Excellency's taking away the Province of Berar from His Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad.
19. His Excellency's Indore policy.
20. His Excellency's Police Commission policy, in the execution of which, four Indians alone are given Police Inspector's places, while a hundred and odd are Eurasians or Europeans.

CITIZEN,
26th June, 1905.

Government instructions alleged to have been issued to the police to watch the movements of Government pensioners in India.

16. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 26th June, says :—Henceforward the movements of Government pensioners throughout the whole country are to be watched by the Police to whom, a contemporary understands, instructions for this purpose have already been issued. In order that this may be done, a complete list of them will be prepared and sent round the country. It is difficult to understand what could have induced Government to take the present step. Is it because Government are afraid that pensioners freed from the bonds of service might utilize their information and influence with the people in a way which would lay bare the doings of Government? Such a fear appears to be the outcome of a diseased imagination. Will not this sort of nervousness on the part of Government tell upon it in the end?

ADVOCATE,
29th June, 1905.

The Advocate on the Secretary of State's speech in Parliament on plague.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th June, says:—Mr. Brodrick, from his place in the House of Commons, while enunciating the truth of his belief that though the people are dying like fleas from plague, their material condition is growing prosperous, and while lamenting at the increase in the number of deaths from plague, tried to impress on the members of the House that the Government of India were doing all what it should and would have done to prevent the recrudescence of the plague and that it was the people who were apathetic and who, in their ignorance did not desire to co-operate with the Government so that the plague might be made to leave India. We do not desire to blame the Government; we do not recklessly charge it with being altogether indifferent to the fate of the people; but at the same time we must protest against the unjust accusations made against the people because we know for certain that they have done according to their lights to protect themselves from the dreadful epidemic, which has been playing so much havoc in their midst. It is true that they have not done all that they should have done. So has not the Government of India done all which it could have done. The people put up the excuse of ignorance and poverty; the Government even, in spite of surpluses had the excuse of poverty and indifference on the part of the people. Mr. Brodrick has in his despatch on Military Administration chid Lord Curzon that surpluses were not spent on military requirements as if they were given away to the people, but he had not a word to say why the Government of India did not spend more money on plague operations. If people are fatalistic and believe there is no escape from the plague, the Government is not; why should it resign itself to fate? why should it not spend as much money as it spends on the construction of railways in rebuilding model muhallas and model towns because these are the only known preventives that can prevent the outbreak of plague. We say that we do not desire to praise people or to persuade them to believe that nothing more is wanted from them or more was expected of them. If we say a word in their behalf, if we protest against remarks made at random like those of Mr. Brodrick, we do so to prevent the belief from taking deep root in the people's mind that even in their troubles, in their miseries, instead of sympathy they are to expect nothing but blame from the rulers. If famine occurs and the people die, they are told it is so because they are poor, the poverty being self-inflicted for spending away their earnings on marriages. If they die of plague, they are told they have brought the poison themselves. Even some critics are callous enough to say that the people deserved it. Such statements are reckless and more so when they are made by officials holding a responsible position. As to the people's indifference, we can say that in towns they are growing less and less apathetic and have ever shown willingness to co-operate with the authorities. We can speak of Lucknow from personal knowledge. We speak of Lucknow not because the people of Lucknow are more advanced than their neighbours, but because here the charge of apathy has been unjustly laid on the people year after year. Dr. Dawson was our first Health Officer; he made house-to-house visits. These were followed by giving instructions to carry out certain improvements in every house. These instructions were willingly carried out and thousands of rupees were spent by the people in improving the drains and latrines of their houses even before the outbreak of the plague. Health Officers wished that even in kutcha houses the privy should have a pucca floor. This improvement was willingly carried out. The old latrines were ordered to be changed. This was done. Then the people were asked to remove the cisterns or sewage water and connect their house drains with the Municipal drain. This was also done at an enormous cost. The Municipal Board before the advent of Sir James LaTouche was not in a position to undertake construction of drains in the Municipal bye-lanes, the citizens constructed thousands of feet of pucca drains at their own cost. Then orders were issued for white-washing of houses before the outbreak of the plague. This was done. People were suspicious about disinfection, but this is dying out; and wherever disinfection is not yet looked upon with favour, desiccation takes it place. In every big muhalla one finds desiccation at work; and wherever a desiccator is not found, firewood and cowdung are burnt to kill plague germs. Where disinfection is opposed, lime-washing is generally resorted to. In improving the general sanitation of the town the people had been rendering every help. As to the more intelligent classes, they without waiting for the Government to undertake to construct a model muhalla, if not for the people at least for its employés, applied for land to build a model muhalla; over thirty applications are awaiting disposal in the Nazul Department. Had the Local Government some money, had Mr. Brodrick ruled that a portion of the surplus should be given to the Local Governments to open out densely crowded streets, to extend cities, to acquire land and sell it at cheap rates, new cities would have arisen and the capital sunk would have paid interest. This would have been a greater object lesson than what people can get from the unsympathetic remarks of Mr. Brodrick. Plague has come to stay in India. It may be driven away by the combined efforts of officials and the people. Neither the impatience of the former nor want of confidence of the latter can keep it out of doors.

ADVOCATE,
2nd July, 1905.

The Anglo-Japanese alliance.

1. THE Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd July, says:—The presence in England of the Prince and Princess Arisugawas has given a new impetus to the discussion about strengthening the agreement existing between England and Japan. The Times has become the mouthpiece of the English nation. It is now felt the renewal should provide for an offensve and defensive alliance. Does it mean that Japan has to fight England's battles on the Indian frontiers anyhow, as she is doing China's in Manchuria? It looks as if England seems to have realized fully that in the new situation created by the rise of Japan, any Western Power, not on friendly terms with the Mikado, can now hardly expect to exercise any voice in Far Eastern politics.

The Secretary of State on the Kabul Mission.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th June, says:—Few, we suspect, will take Mr. Brodrick's apology for the abortive mission to Kabul seriously. Probably he himself does not attach any excessive importance to his own words. To admit failure is against the rules of the game, and this is the real explanation of the numerous self-congratulations of speakers and writers on the Government side on the results—or the absence of results, to be precise—of the Dane Mission. We write, of course, on the assumption that there were no secret clauses attached to the published Treaty. As for Mr. Brodrick's assurances of sympathy with the lot of the Indians in South Africa, they will be rated at their proper worth when they are coupled with the bare-faced statement that no Power on earth can compel the colonies to change their methods.

ADVOCATE,
6th July, 1905.

The case of Mr. Connel, District Engineer, Partabgarh, accused of killing his orderly.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th July, says:—The District Magistrate of Partabgarh has passed orders in the murder case in which Mr. Connel, District Engineer, stood charged with causing the death of his orderly by passing a knife into his body in a fit of rage. We do not know if the police could find any proofs for the stories prevalent in Partabgarh. The stories may be altogether groundless, but we have no hesitation in saying that the punishment inflicted on the accused is altogether inadequate and likely to cause dissatisfaction. We had a right to expect at least this much that Mr. Connel would be committed to the Sessions to take his trial. But the District Magistrate thought the crime was not of such a heinous nature that it was necessary to commit the prisoner to the High Court. May we ask what the Local Government is going to do for the young widow of the deceased and his children who are left without provision? Will they be allowed some compassionate allowance, or let alone to die of starvation? As to Mr. Connel when he comes out of jail, let us hope he will not be allowed to serve Government any more or be placed in a position where again his anger may cause some death. He has proved himself thoroughly unfit to be placed in charge of a department where large numbers of illiterate people have to be dealt with.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Police reform in India.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th June, publishes the following communication headed "Indian Police reform foredoomed to Failure":—The principal object of this series of papers, brought to a close to-day, is to demonstrate the eminent desirability of enlisting ordinary constables from a class of persons other than that from which the rank and file have been drawn these many years. Whatever may have been the reasons which originally led to recruitment from the coolie class, illiterate and worthless, circumstances have greatly altered since the mode was first adopted. No doubt education was at its lowest ebb even in 1860. But during the last half a century the country has taken great strides in educational matters. There is no dearth to-day of young active men, brought up to the seventh standard, who could be fittingly employed in the police force in place of the illiterate or semi-illiterate. In the last paper the capacity, qualifications, and moral culture of these was pointed out as in every way superior to that of the men now in the force all over the country. Where there is greater intelligence and a clearer grasp of moral responsibility, greater efficiency and integrity may be reasonably expected. These are just the two qualifications in which the present police is sadly wanting. To perpetuate and stereotype the antiquated mode of recruitment when all around circumstances and conditions have altered for the better, is to exemplify a stolid incapacity to apprehend the march of time and of the march of progress with it. It is absurd to expect that corruption would be greatly mitigated by a slight increase of pay, when, as a matter of fact, you want something besides increased wages to attain the desired object. To solve new problems, requiring an absolutely new treatment, by antiquated methods, condemned and utterly useless, is to beat about the bush. No radical reform can be expected under such treatment. A thorough reform obviously demands a thorough sweeping away of the old order of things, which have beyond doubt proved so extremely noxious and positively inefficient. But it is just here that the Commission, despite its assiduity, has failed.

We have suggested that recruitment should in future take place from the better educated classes of the community. We have pointed out that these may be found in thousands of the young men of the poorer classes, who have been brought up to the Matriculation standard of our Universities in every part of the country. These men are crowded out of employment. There could not be found a better field to show their educational capacity and moral worth for the task, than the police. We have shown that under present conditions the men do not stay long in the force. Fully fourteen per cent. of them are known to be under ten years' service. So that almost the whole police undergoes a complete change in its composition every eight or ten years. Those who earn their pensions are a microscopic minority. Many leave before they are three years in the service, and many are thankful to get out within ten years by accepting a gratuity. Under such circumstances, you never can expect a veteran corps of practical experience, much less a force which has the strength and efficiency necessary for the arduous duties required of it. In the first place, there should be men who would prove efficient and moral, that is above corruption. In the second place, to induce them to remain in the service so as to make it their own and be proud of it, they must be adequately remunerated.

Here, then, we come to the crucial point. What may be the minimum wage which might be reasonably considered as fairly remunerative? Young "matriculates" or "failed matriculates" go about begging for service on fifteen or twenty rupees per month. This large unemployed class might be easily drafted for the purpose after being subjected to tests of physical fitness required for the duty. Our idea is that the constables should begin on Rs. 15 per month and be raised by increments of Rs. 5 every five years, on report of good conduct and efficiency till the maximum wage of Rs. 30 is reached at the end of fifteen years. A class of sub-inspectors should be selected by way of promotion from the ranks of these fifteen years' service men—persons of proved probity and the highest efficiency. These sub-inspectors should begin with Rs. 40 and finish their careers at the end of thirty years (counting the first fifteen as constables) with Rs. 60. In this way the force would be manned by an infinitely superior and well paid class of men, who would not only be seasoned veterans but be at the same time proud of the service and be popular with the people—men who would show by their pluck and moral worth how far they are above the temptation of corruption, which is the canker in the police force at present.

But it will be said that, however admirable this mode of recruitment, it would be exceedingly costly. We say that what would seem costly at first would in the end prove not only economical but in every way satisfactory. If we are to have in this country a police of which both the Government and the people might remain proud, this extra sacrifice must be undergone. But we will go a step further and say that by a judicious reduction of the strength we could obtain both the greater efficiency that is wanted and reasonable economy. Further, we do not at all see the utility of the 6,000 men and more which the Government propose adding to the existing force at a cost of 19 lakhs of rupees for semi-military duty. In our opinion not only is it uncalled for but costly. But to proceed. We are convinced that, instead of a force of ignorant coolies or semi-ignorant ones, on wages of from seven to nine rupees per month, we would be well able, under the proposed scheme, to bring down the strength from nearly a lakh and a half to a lakh, if not seventy-four thousand. For it should be remembered that the new recruit would in every way be able to serve the purpose of two, if not three, constables engaged for a certain area to watch and ward at present. More; in this kind of economic estimate we should never forget the moral effect which might be produced. To abate corruption to a considerable extent would be a gain in itself the value of which cannot be commercially expressed. Secondly, efficiency must bring about a reduction of crime, and reduction of crime would signify a lesser jail population, which would in its turn signify a substantial reduction in rupees, annas and pies of annual expenditure on prisons. Furthermore, this very efficiency and morality will have its reflex influence on the mass of the population. Instead of being an object of aversion, the police would be an object of respect. People will consider the police as real guardians of life and property, and not the petty tyrants that they are and blackmailers besides. Bribery corrupts the person bribing as much as the person bribed. When bribery is reduced considerably, the morale of the people themselves would undergo a vast change for the better. The efficiency and good character of the police will not encourage bribe-giving. This in itself would be a vast gain. For these several reasons we repeat that a change in the system of recruitment of constables on the lines herein suggested is eminently desirable. The system should be tentatively introduced and fairly carried out, without foregone prejudice and without official or departmental obstruction. But, so far as the Commission's report under this important head is concerned, we have no hesitation in saying it will fail in achieving the result which is anticipated. There will, of course, be increased cost, but no increased efficiency. And, as to corruption, it would indeed be a miracle if it is abated even by a hair's breadth.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Sir Henry Fowler on the increase of the Military expenditure in India.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th June, says:—India's thanks are due to Sir Henry Fowler for raising his powerful voice against the enormous increase in the military expenditure. Sir Henry only gave expression to the general belief when he said that India was never less liable to a foreign invasion than now. This remark shows how much better a Secretary of State, even an Imperialist Liberal, makes than a Tory. Is it not conceivable that if Sir Henry Fowler were at the India Office at present instead of the hopeless Mr. Brodrick, the revolution in India's military administration, which for aught we know may be productive of disastrous consequences, would not have been effected? Is it not further probable that instead of an appalling rise we should have witnessed an appreciable reduction in military expenditure as a result of the Russo-Japanese War. Of course on other independent grounds we do not at all wish to see Sir Henry Fowler again at the India Office: our only point is, that even if he can be suffered, which cannot be said of George Hamiltons and Brodricks.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th June, 1905.

Lord George Hamilton's speech on the Indian Budget in Parliament.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th June, says:—From the meagre telegraphic report of his speech it is a little difficult to say what exactly Lord George Hamilton had in mind in pronouncing a blessing on the forward policy and in wishing to see the post of Commander-in-Chief for India abolished. It will be best to wait for the full text of the speech before remarking on the same. Mr. Haldane, who, to quote Lord Acton's words, applied to Mr. (now Lord) Goschen, is on the slippery road that leads away from Liberalism, took it upon himself to entirely approve of Lord Curzon's administration. We cannot but be sorry that a man of such profound intelligence and ability should have thought it consistent with his position and attainments to play the rôle of apologist of Lord Curzon's thoroughly reactionary policy on what could only have been insufficient and one-sided information.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
30th June, 1905.

Municipal affairs at Agra.

7. The Nasim-i-Agra (Agra), of the 30th June, says that when Mr. Morgan's special duty in connection with the Agra municipal affairs was over, it was rumoured that a man knowing both English and vernacular would be appointed Municipal Engineer and Secretary. Mr. Rogers was appointed to the post. But he does not know vernacular at all and has consequently been given an Assistant Secretary to help him in his vernacular work. Mr. Rogers is an old person, incapable of paying visits to the town. He is also incapable of performing his duties, and entirely depends on the reports of his subordinates. Traders who have frequent dealings with the Municipal Board are exposed to great difficulty and inconvenience owing to Mr. Rogers' non-attendance at the municipal office. When the Board is in debt it should curtail its expenditure by reducing the numerical strength of its establishment and by applying the pruning knife to their salaries. According to rumour Mr. Rogers will get an increase of Rs. 200 a month. More drains and standposts are wanted in the town, but they cannot be provided for want of funds. Thus, on the one hand, necessary works are postponed because the Board has no funds, while, on the other hand, the establishment is being strengthened with a free hand. If one man is unable to do the work of both Engineer and Secretary, two men should be appointed. Government had better enquire into the matter and see that the taxes collected by the municipal board at Agra are properly spent.

CITIZEN,
3rd July, 1905.

Posts of teachers in schools maintained by District Boards made pensionable.

8. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 3rd July, says:—As our readers may already have gathered from an extract that we published from the local Government Gazette, with the object of improving the position of masters in English schools maintained by district boards in the United Provinces, the Lieutenant-Governor has decided to permit district boards to make a permanent arrangement for contributing to the pensions of all masters in zila schools by paying to Government a contribution of one-tenth of their sanctioned salaries. The new rule comes into force with effect from 1st July, and it is suggested by Government that district boards might meet the cost of the contribution in the current year from the eight lakhs recently allotted to them. We owe Sir James LaTouche a debt immense of endless gratitude for the sympathy that he has shown to the schoolmaster. Such sympathy is calculated to cover many a sin of the Government, whether of omission or non-omission, crudity or complexity.

RAJPUT,
30th June, 1905.

Posts of teachers in English schools made pensionable.

9. The Rájput (Agra), of the 30th June, expresses great satisfaction that the teachers in English schools have been made eligible for pension, but does not understand why the privilege should be denied to the low paid vernacular teachers. The editor is glad to learn from the Advocate that the vernacular teachers whose pay is Rs. 10 or upwards a month will receive pensions. The privilege had better be extended to the lower paid ones also, inasmuch as they can hardly save anything, their small salaries covering their daily expenses with difficulty. In other official bureaus men, whose pay is only Rs. 4 a month, receive pensions. Government should be equally generous to the low paid vernacular teachers.

ADVOCATE,
6th July, 1905.

Indian public opinion and the Military reorganization.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th July, says :—The Pioneer has been struck with the unanimity with which the purely Indian section of the press has supported Lord Curzon throughout his controversy with and defeat at the hands of Lord Kitchener. The Pioneer is surprised to find even the Congress organs had to say a good word about Lord Curzon. What does this attitude prove? It proves simply this that the Indian Press is not perverse, the majority of it do not consist of unprincipled men who over-joyed at the prospect of Lord Curzon ceasing to be at the helm of the country, join in throwing dust on his head and thus add further to his embarrassment. The Indian Press, however unwilling it might be, strengthened the hands of Lord Curzon by supporting him against the Home Government, it could not be oblivous of its own interests which will be further injured if the Military become more powerful and the little check which even the Civilian element used to exercise is removed. From this standpoint the Indian Press has worked. Let what its opponents might say, it is alive to the country's interests and is unwilling to play with them. But it is also said that the interest of non-official India in this matter is not very deep, it touches only the surface. How can it be deep? Indians are only concerned with the question of paying the bill. They know that one result of the controversy will be that the military expenditure of India will increase. Whether Lord Kitchener wins or Lord Curzon loses, one result is certain, namely, that the reorganization will mean increased expenditure. Against this we are bound to protest. With the principles involved in the controversy Indians are little concerned. In fact, nobody thinks the Indian public opinion is worth anything. The Cantonments may be broken up and enlarged, the regiments of certain classes may be disbanded without consulting Indians. Indians feel quite unconcerned, because they have been so ostracised from the Military Service of the land, that the Army does not rouse any enthusiasm in the people. As publicists they here and there might discuss some problems, but such discussions are almost of academic interest. Our contemporary of the Mahratta, in whom the soldier's instinct is still to be found, has been writing a series of very learned and informing articles on the military situation of the country. The successes of Japan and the manner in which regiments after regiments are going up to take the place of those fallen in the field has roused the enthusiasm of our contemporary, and it is perhaps anxious to see the day when India, like Japan, if confronted by a large army, may fall back on its reserve force and mobilise its citizen-soldiers for the defence of the country. But these are mere dreams. The military spirit has been quite killed in the Indian; it finds no place in the reorganization scheme and hence Indians cannot feel much interested in the controversy. A telegram from Bankipur has appeared in the Calcutta papers, saying that there is great deal of excitement in Bankipur over the controversy and people feel much indignant at the decision of the Secretary of State and that they are thinking of holding a demonstration. Now we do not know if there is any special cause for excitement at Bankipur or if there is much difference between Bankipur society and society in other Indian towns. One thing is quite certain that the events of the last two weeks which have convulsed Anglo-Indian society throughout India and in a manner produced great stir in England have touched only a small fringe of Indian society. The people are quite indifferent as to the fate of Civil control over military affairs. This is due to the fact that all interest in the military administration of India has been killed and people find that the military organization for the defence of the country and the principles on which it is carried on are no concern of theirs. Is the consummation to be wished for—that questions involving great principles of administration may arise and be solved without the people feeling any interest in them or that at best the interest of their spokesmen should be confined to academic discussions? This is a problem which deserves the consideration of the responsible rulers of the land.

CITIZEN,
3rd July, 1905.

The Secretary of State on the difference between the Government of India and the Commander-in-Chief.

11. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 3rd July, says :—The self-love of His Excellency the present Viceroy must have received a rude shock from the edict of the Secretary of State putting a period to the friction between what is known as the Military Department of the Government of India and the Army Headquarters under Lord Kitchener. Who could have believed that a man of the type of Mr. Brodrick, of whose mediocral capacity for administration the world has surely been no great an admirer, was capable of a performance which would seemingly reduce that high and mighty personage, the noble Lord Curzon of Keddleston, higher and mightier at least in his own estimation than all others of women born, to the status of but an Arithmetical zero? Who, we venture to ask, could have persuaded himself to believe that it was of all men given to the present Secretary of State to hurl from Whitehall a mandate which to most of us in India would appear to fall like a thunderbolt from the clear sky? Popular opinion in India has systematically received such contemptuous regard at the hands of Lord Curzon, the citizens of the empire have for the last six or seven years been made to feel such rude political shocks, if His Excellency has had to experience that after all he is but a demigod liable like other mortals to be carried away by a flood which the deities may in their wisdom cause to burst over the political horizon with almost a dramatic suddenness, we realise that it is only Nemesis that is at work, watching the actions of a Government as well as those of an individual. Elsewhere we publish the decision given by Mr. Brodrick in the case between the Government of India and His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. As our readers may well conjecture the decision when it reached the Government of India, as also its tone and spirit, filled His Excellency Lord Curzon with such dismay and resentment that on Monday last it was all but settled that His Excellency was going to throw up his appointment.

That there was a great storm brewing for some time past is an open secret, and if the Anglo-Indian press did not in the interest of the Government of India, long before the fiat went forth, raise a hue and cry, protesting against what it professes to regard as an upheaval of constitutional principles, it was partly due to the reticence imposed on it by that precious legislation of the present Government, the Official Secrets Act, and mainly to the circumstance that the war carried on was between two of the most important members of the Government of India, in fact, the Governor-General and the Commander-in-Chief. That the minutest detail of the entire difference was full well known in England is evident from the various phases of the controversy that the English papers published from time to time and from their accurate knowledge of the circumstance that a compromise had been effected at the last moment calculated to determine every point and to leave nothing unsettled.

Signal has been the defeat of Lord Curzon, and if he do not retire at once, considering the motives that his Lordship imputed to the Commander-in-Chief while submitting his proposals to the Secretary of State it will be very painful, if not altogether impossible, for the two personages to work any longer in harmony. Much guarded as the language of the Viceroy's minute has been, in reviewing Lord Kitchener's proposals to remodel the military organization, he has here and there given way to his almost irrepressible desire to raise a humorous laugh at the expense of his antagonist, which, we are afraid, is ill-calculated to mend matters. According to Lord Curzon, Lord Kitchener's complaint is based upon a complete misconception of the constitution of the Government of India. As a matter of constitutional law, the Governer-General in Council, in whom the superintendence, direction and control of the whole civil and military Government is invested, is surely superior to the Commander-in-Chief of India. But were the Governor-General in exercise of his superiority to reject proposals emanating from the Commander-in-Chief and substitute schemes of his own, he would not only subverge the military authority of the Government of India as a whole, but would by creating an autocracy in his own person seem to ignore the very constitution of English Government. The British Sovereign is by constitution superior to every one in the land, but does his superiority consist in rejecting proposals that responsible ministers may submit? Then, Lord Curzon has declared himself as one having considerable faith in experts. Is not the soldier at present in command of the Army in India a most distinguished one available in the Empire? Or, Lord Curzon poses as a military man whose views in connection with the army are to be preferred to those of the Commander-in-Chief?

The Secretary of State's decision announcing the proposed changes will be far-reaching in its effect, not the least being that a certain high personage will find himself a wiser and sadder man, detecting in it the hand of retributive justice.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd July, 1905.

Lord Curzon and Lord Kitchener.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd July, says:—It has been stated authoritatively that Lords Curzon and Kitchener have been able to arrive at a sort of compromise on the question of India's Military administration and that the Secretary of State has been informed that the acceptance of the changes now proposed will make Lord Curzon's resignation unnecessary. The Secretary of State's interest in the subject being more or less limited to the settlement of the personal controversy between the two heroes of Simla, it may be taken for granted that the changes will be accepted by him. Mr. Brodrick's concern apparently is not what will best serve India's interest: it is that nothing he may do or leave undone should lead to the resignation of Lord Kitchener, in which event Mr. Balfour's Government will suffer in popularity. If Lord Kitchener had declined to agree to Lord Curzon's suggested changes, they would not be accepted. Then His Majesty's Government would not hesitate to throw the Governor-General to the wolves. But fortunately he has accepted them, and consequently Lord Curzon will have the consolation that he may stay in India till April next. This is the situation so far as His Excellency is concerned.

As for the interest of the people of India in the personal aspect of the controversy, while it is undoubtedly true that they almost to a man are with Lord Curzon in his view of the matter and appreciate the gallant stand he has made for a vital constitutional principle which goes to the root of good government, it would be idle to pretend that they would not welcome his resignation howsoever brought about. He has rendered himself so thoroughly unpopular by injuring their interests in almost all matters that they prize that it will take very long indeed and very exceptional exertions for him to win back some of his lost popularity. One point in respect of his resignation in which we are interested is that if possible his successor should be nominated by a Liberal Government. Of this, however, there seems to be little chance as Mr. Balfour has no intention of resigning unless he will actually be driven from office or until mere efflux of time will put an end to his administration. We assume of course that he will not move for the repeal of the Septennial Act.

By the time it will be necessary to appoint Lord Curzon's successor, Mr. Balfour will still be in office, and will probably make one of those cynical appointments which amuse those unconcerned and scandalise those directly interested. Who knows if Lord Milner will not succeed Lord Curzon? But if Lord Curzon goes now, there is just a chance of our getting a good Viceroy like Lord Dudley, the Home Ruler-Unionist Viceroy of Ireland, who has governed the Emerald Isle with such consummate ability and unexampled sympathy. By making this appointment Mr. Balfour will be killing two birds with one stone. He will win back the confidence of the Ulster Unionists, who are clamouring for Lord Dudley's head along with that of Sir Antony MacDonnell, and he will succeed in removing Lord Dudley from a position which is causing endless discomfort to Mr. Balfour by, as it were, kicking him upstairs—by promoting him to a more important and exalted office. At the same time the people of India will sincerely rejoice to welcome him as their Viceroy. But if Lord Curzon will stay on till April, there will be no sufficient inducement for Mr. Balfour to appoint him. Then likelier than not we may have to tolerate Lord Milner as Viceroy—a tragic misfortune indeed.

Reverting to the subject of India's military administration, we invite attention to the cogent and able article in which the Advocate of India strongly criticises Mr. Brodrick's despatch. Every honest and intelligent man we venture to say must agree with our contemporary that a veritable revolution has been effected by that unhappy document. Already the Indian tax-payer is groaning under the weight of oppressive military burdens, and his spokesmen have been urging such a change in the constitution of the Government of India as will reduce the predominance of the military element in it and will make for more economy. Far from heeding this cry which has been kept up for years by the Indian National Congress and which has been echoed by its British Committee in England, and not even leaving the status quo to remain, the unworthy Government of the cynical Mr. Balfour, with an unstatesmanlike politician who is almost a disregarded nobody in England as their Secretary of State for India, have actually made matters infinitely worse by handing over India to the tender mercies of a military despotism. We agree with the Advocate of India that the situation undoubtedly calls for a national protest—a protest in which Anglo-Indians and Indians can and should join—such a protest as cannot be disregarded—a protest that will strengthen the hands of the next Liberal Government in reversing the impossible situation.

Yes; the situation is impossible. It is indeed so extraordinary that we fully go with the Advocate of India in thinking that we are not called upon in the discharge of our duty as loyal subjects to accept it as an accomplished fact which it would be wrong to question. On the contrary the peril to the commonwealth is so menacing that it becomes the duty of every citizen who takes this view of the matter to leave no stone unturned to get the present decision reversed. All constitutional means must be exhausted in fighting the battle of civilised and responsible rule against a medieval military despotism. We sincerely trust that the Liberal leaders will move a vote of censure in the House of Commons, and that when they will come into power they will make no delay in reversing the decision. In India our provincial political associations must lose no time in sending up remonstrances against it. They must organize public meetings at which to record the nation's protest against the singularly irresponsible manner in which India's affairs are managed by the Government here and in England.

To our mind other vital questions are opened up, or rather emphasized, by Mr. Brodrick's decision. Is it conceivable that such a momentous issue, fraught with the most far-reaching consequences, could have been decided in secret, without the public either of England or of India knowing aught about it before the actual decision was published when public criticism became mere post facto criticism and consequently a futile exercise, if India was not governed in a thoroughly irresponsible manner? Would not Parliament have had an opportunity of discussing the subject while it was yet pending, if the salary of the Secretary of State had been placed on the estimates as recommended by Lord Welbey's Commission? Would it have been passed over in silence or with mere academic expression of opinion in the recent debate on the Indian Budget if India had direct representation in Parliament? Would the Secretary of State's Council have meekly yielded to the decision of the Balfour Government if there had been a couple of Indian gentlemen on the Council? And the change for the worse having been actually effected, is it not imperative that there should be one or two Indians on the Viceroy's Executive Council to safeguard the interests of the Indian taxpayer under the altered circumstances, and also that the members of the Supreme Legislative Council should have the power of moving amendments to, and dividing the Council on the Financial Statement?

INDIAN PEOPLE,
6th July, 1905.

The anti-Indian agitation in the Transvaal.

1. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th July, says:—As British subjects we are ashamed to be told that the anti-Indian agitation in the Transvaal is gaining in volume and strength every day. We read that every man who wishes to succeed in the elections that will shortly be held under the new constitution will have to pledge himself to support a drastic measure against the Asiatics. The Transvaal will stand practically as one man on this question. One has only to study the newspapers from the Cape to the Zambesi to see how correct was Lord Milner's description of the attitude of the Europeans to the Indians, when he employed the expression "intense hostility." Indignation meetings, plans for boycotts, demands for legislative action, deputations to high officials, these are the things which are the main topics in the small towns where Indian competition is most felt.

This is the case of the very moderate position taken up by the Indian settlers in the colony. They ask for no political power. They admit the British race should be the dominant race in South Africa. They admit the principle of restricting the influx of cheap labour, no matter from what source it may come. All they ask for is freedom for those who are now settled, and those who may be allowed to come in future, to trade, to move about, and to hold landed property without any hindrance save the ordinary legal requirements. No claim can be more reasonable, modest or moderate, and yet the only reply vouchsafed to such representation, the only reward of their agreeing to be less than just to themselves, is that severer measures of persecution are being adopted every day. And the Imperial Government pleads inability to come to their rescue even to secure the above elementary rights for them. Such is Empire as understood by the Imperialists.

CITIZEN,
10th July, 1905.

The late Mission to Kabul.

2. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 10th July, says:—Our position with Afghanistan has throughout been most anomalous. Notwithstanding the friendly relation that is said to exist between the British Government and the Amir of Kabul, no European, no Englishman, and, indeed, not even an Indian is allowed inside the country. Any British subject discovered on the wrong side of the frontier runs the risk of being invariably shot down. To all intents and purposes Afghanistan has been to us a sealed land.

Not that the same restriction is in return imposed by us on the Afghans. O, no. The stalwart Afghans enjoy full and unrestrained liberty to enter India and to trade and to establish a reign of terror wherever they go. The Indian Police with all their artfulness and capacity for bullying can hold no candle to these emissaries from our so-called friendly and protected state. They seem to possess a license to cheat, to browbeat and to chastise the harmless Indian peasant. Their one mission evidently is to extort, and that being fulfilled, they return content to their home, sweet home, not of course without the design to come back the next year, at the usual hour, and be welcomed by us as heralds of winter. The social relation of the people of India with the Kabulese is thus at once as humiliating as may be conceived.

And not less humiliating is the political relation between the Amir and the Government of India. As that of his subjects, the sole aim of His Highness appears to us to extort—to receive money from us, to count implicitly on assistance from the British Government, and then practically to claim to be the despotic head of an independent nation. It is only from the British Government in India and in England we learn that Afghanistan is a protected state. We need not tell our readers that this statement is altogether a fiction, the stern truth being that the Afghanese are not only an independent, but an adverse, power.

With what object Mr. (now Sir) Dane was despatched to Afghanistan, we do not pretend to know. We have been given to understand that the engagement made with the late Amir, Abdul Rahman, was a personal one; and that at his death the agreement was null and void. On this account, it is asserted, payment of subsidy was stopped, as also the importation of arms by the Amir.

If we may be prepared to accept the statement of the authorities as gospel truth, that the object of the Dane Mission was merely to secure a renewal of the old agreement, the object has been gained with a vengeance. For not only has the mission agreed to pay an increased subsidy of £120,000, but also the arrears amounting to £400,000 ; not only is the importation of arms to continue as before, but, for these various favours that the Amir is to confer on us, he is to be acknowledged as the absolute and independent king of his territory and to be henceforth styled His Majesty. The assumption of the title of King by the Amir is not without precedent. For when the Indian Government concluded its treaty in 1809 with the ruler of Afghanistan, the latter was in the documents relating to it styled as His Majesty the King of Durannis. And then in two other treaties which followed that of 1809, the Amir was described as "His Majesty Shah Suja-ul-Mulk" and "His Majesty Shah Kamran of Herat." It was Lord Dalhousie, who would brook no such presumption, that lowered the style and dignity and in the treaty concluded by him the reigning Amir came for the first time to be described as simply His Highness. Anyhow, we are of opinion that if Habib-ullah desired to have himself called a King and addressed as His Majesty, it would have been impolitic to make it a matter of contention. What we heartily regret is that the treaty should have been one of one-sided benefit, and it is this which causes us to pronounce the mission as a decided failure. After all the labour and expense of a journey through bleak hills, dangerous passes and yet more dangerous men, we have granted to the Amir all that he eagerly coveted—the title of king, subsidy, release of arrears and permission to import arms, and received from him in return a condensed three-paragraph convention. The mountain laboured with the result that there has been an abortion !

It is evident that the renewal of the old agreement was not the sole purpose that took Mr. Dane to Afghanistan. He of course gave Reuter's representative to understand that "the startling proposals with which the mission was credited never found a place in his instructions." But he further said that so far as the Amir was concerned he was quite ready to confirm the old arrangement. Well, if the Amir was prepared to confirm, with whom did the objection lie ? Did Mr. Dane want an extension of the old arrangement? Why does he not plainly tell us of the exact nature of the demand he ventured to make ? The circumstance of the mission being credited with "startling proposals" is surely due to the Russian bogey. So long as the alarmists would refuse to see any check to the forward movement of Russia in her paralysed activity, they would not be content till the Amir gave his consent to the construction of strategic railways within Afghan territories. They fail, however, to realise that Russia advances or recedes—this becomes altogether immaterial to them, when another foreign power proposes to obtain a right to make railways in Afghanistan and to maintain a British resident at Kabul. The Afghanese every one of them, are known so well to resent such proposals, the ruling chief of the state would for his own sake rather abdicate than have a Resident and all the blessings of modern civilisation.

The Dane Mission made a mistake, if notwithstanding its denial, it made to the Amir such startling and impossible proposals. It was not, in fact, in such proposals that a remedy lay of the state of things we have described above. The only way, in our opinion, to establish a friendly relation between the governments of the two countries is to establish a free and open intercourse between the peoples of the two countries. Our Government should, if possible, persuade the Amir to grant the Indian people free access to Afghanistan and to trade unmolested. When our social and commercial relations improve, the political situation will cease to assume its present gloomy aspect.

Going of the Indian National Congress deputation to England at the time of General Election.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th July, says :—If the General Election will be held next year and not this year, it is a question whether the Congress deputation should at all proceed to England this year. If we could afford to send another deputation next year, of course nothing could be better. The need really is for at least a couple of Indians to proceed to England every year for purposes of political agitation there. But if this cannot be arranged just at present, if our political organization is not in a sufficiently developed stage to permit of annual deputations to England, it will surely be far better that the deputation that has been already arranged for specially with a view to the General Election should be in England at the time and not return before. Perhaps a fairly satisfactory solution will be for half of the deputation to go this year and the other next year. Lala Lajpat Rai is already in England, and the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale is expected to go in September. Pandit Bishan Narayan Dar, Babu Surendranath Banerjea and the Hon'ble Mr. Krishnan Nair may go next year.

4. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 9th July, says :—

We hail thee, Fatherland !
And singing forth thy praises,
We all united stand.

Report of the last Bombay Indian National Congress.

Thus sang in chorus the choir of ladies at Bombay the Congress Anthem to open the proceedings of the twentieth session of the Indian National Congress. Memory of a sweet and patriotic occasion cannot but leap up in the heart of every Indian who witnessed the scene last December in the Crescent on the Back Bay, no less of every reader of the account of that glorious event. Busy Bombay has been business-like throughout. Before the memory of the grand national festival could be laid under the dust of a half-year's incidents—the memory of a great man lives but six months, the same might be said of great events—his report has come out in a neat and nice-looking dress to revive the recollection of a very sweet occasion and give us another opportunity to read at leisure the full and authorised proceedings before we are in the thick of another session. We of the United Provinces, have specially to be thankful for the early publication of the Congress Report as it will be of immense help in making the arrangements for the next session at Benares. The proceedings of the Industrial and Agricultural Exhibition held in connection with the Congress have also been included in the Report as Appendix B. These will be specially helpful to the Exhibition Committee at holy Kashi, where pilgrims will come in December next, not only for attaining spiritual beatitude, but also for paving the way to secure political regeneration, social elevation and industrial advancement of the entire Indian people. From the religious point of view Kashi is holy to the Hindu and from the national its holiness will have in December an extended meaning and a truly Indian national aspect.

* * * * * * * *

Congress means a fight between the righteousness of the British dispensation of Providence in this country and the worldliness of the instruments chosen by England to fulfil her mission in India, and it is a fight for the supremacy of the former. The repressive and reactionary policy of Lord Curzon has been the result of the temptings of "the seductive spirit of worldliness." We hope the Viceroy will not complete the round of his repressive measures in order to turn British Rule in India into a curse which God meant for, and the great and far-seeing statesmen who consolidated the British Empire tried to make, a blessing. The best way to make Pax Britannica anything but palatable is for the ruling race to do all the thinking for India themselves and turn the people into nothing but "hewers of wood and drawers of water." A state of perpetual tutelage is the worst thing that can happen to a nation. The present day rulers mean to keep Indians there; on the other hand educated Indians and the righteous among the ruling race aim at making India attain national majority. The function of the Congress to bring about this blessed state and the session to be held at Benares is to celebrate the formal majority attaining of the Indian National Congress itself. This would be one great step towards helping the nation to be an assemblage of thinking men and women and not to remain dumb-driven cattle in human shape. Our motto should be—

Onward Congress soldiers ?
Leaders of the Land,
Cheer the heart of India,
And united we stand.—Amen

ARYA MITRA, 8th July, 1905.

The Secretary of States's speech at the introduction of the Indian Budget into Parliament.

5. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th July, says that a man not possessing a square inch of land is sometimes called Pirthwináth, i. e., the Lord of the Earth. This native proverb is quite applicable to India. While introducing the Indian Budget into Parliament the Secretary of State declared that India was growing more and more prosperous every day, that the Indian treasury was always full, that the English exports to India during the preceding year exceeded those to Canada, Australia and Africa put together, &c. The Secretary of State is like the poor man who somehow or other obtained a hundred rupees and then used to say that the whole world was rich, there being not a single man who did not own a hundred rupees. Finding the Indian treasury to be full the Secretary of State imagines that the people in India are happy and prosperous. He does not know that there are millions of men in India who are unable to keep the wolf from the door. The Indians are a very loyal and faithful people. But it is improper to infer the prosperity of the people from the prosperous condition of the Indian treasury. Mr. Brodrick would be warranted in saying that the Indian Government was rich and prosperous. As regards the large consumption of English goods the European population in India has largely increased, and it is the Anglo-Indians for whom the English goods have to be imported. For instance, the liquor imported during the preceding year amounted to 7 crores and 66 lakhs. Evidently, the drink was consumed by Anglo-Indians and not by natives. Those of them who are in Government service are liberally paid and do not know how to make use of their money. Others who are not in Government service have also good incomes. Thus the increase in the drink traffic is no sign of the prosperity of the country. English goods have also to be largely imported for navigation and railway purposes. Thus it is as great a misnomer to call poverty-stricken India a properous and rich country as to name a man who does not possess an inch of land Pirthwináth, the Lord of the Earth. The natives should congratulate themselves that the Indian Budget which was usually introduced at the fag-end of Parliament was laid before Parliament on the 20th June this year. Mr. M. M. Bhownaggree and others made good proposals, but none of them were accepted. A proposal was made for making natives members of Parliament with a view to checking the rapid growth of the Indian Military expenditure and the extension of Indian Railways but in vain. Although there is now no fear of Russian invasion of India yet 15 crores of rupees will be devoted to the purchase of new guns and to the military reorganization.

Increase of pay to low-paid teachers in schools by Sir James Digges LaTouche.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th July, says:—An inspired paragraph in our Lucknow contemporary states that 'one of the orders which has not yet found publication and which perhaps is of more far-reaching effect, raises the pay of all teachers in the lower ranks' in these provinces. It understands that the Local Government has declared that in future no teacher in an Anglo-Vernacular school is to get less than Rs. 20 a month. The pay of those who get less than this sum at present will be at once raised to Rs. 20, while Rs. 5 will be added to the pay of those getting Rs. 20 a month. One need not use superlatives of pre-eminence in praise of Sir James LaTouche for this simple concession, but we are sure all will congratulate the Lieutenant-Governor on taking a wise step in the direction of improving the position of our low-paid teachers.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th July, 1905.

Formation of a new province in Bengal.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th July, says :—The Secretary of State has made the momentous announcement in Parliament that he had already accepted the proposals of Lord Curzon's Government in respect of the partition of Bengal. As for the exact scheme that will be carried out, the Pioneer has told us that, it will probably be found that instead of 'Assam absorbing some districts of Eastern Bengal, it will itself be absorbed in Eastern and Northern Bengal, and that a new province of considerable size, and with a population of over 30,000,000, is to be formed. The 'North-Eastern Province,' or whatever it may be called, our semi-official contemporary says, will be far more populous than the Punjab or Bombay and Sind combined. Probably Dacca will be the capital of the province, and it is likely that it will have its own Legislative Council and Board of Revenue. It would appear that the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court will be maintained till such time as the new province will be given a Chief Court of its own.

It is not difficult to imagine with what feeling our brethren of Bengal will receive the above to them mournful intelligence. They have all but exhausted every resource of constitutional agitation in fighting against proposals which they abhor; but to no purpose. Under a Viceroy more amenable to reason and less of a despot than Lord Curzon, the nobleman who becomes breathless at the thought of India being governed by a military autocracy, it is inconceivable that the supreme and unmitigated folly of the exhibition of such sovereign contempt for public opinion would have been perpetrated. We cannot imagine a Ripon or a Dufferin or even a Lansdowne doing it, much less is it conceivable that a Secretary of State of the statesmanly calibre of the Duke of Devonshire or Lord Randolph Churchill or even the Earl of Kimberley would have sanctioned it. But India has fallen on evil days, the old sense of British justice and British respect for public opinion seems to have vanquished in these days of Balfours, Brodricks and Curzons, and until the Tories will be swept out of power and office there is absolutely no hope for this sorrowing and suffering land and her ill-judged and unlucky sons.

In the grave misfortune that has overtaken them our brethren of Bengal may be sure they have the genuine sympathy of their countrymen of all other provinces. We at any rate do not look upon the dismemberment of Bengal as an isolated act of mere provincial importance. It is only one incident in the long chapter of reactionary administration which has afflicted the country now for over a decade, and particularly during Lord Curzon's sinister Viceroyalty. As such we non-Bengalis really regard the partition of Bengal as a measure of imperial importance, as a political act perpetrated with the deliberate intention of cutting the great Bengali race in two so that their progress may be arrested, their political influence checked. We are not hopeful that any step our Bengali brethren may hereafter take will aught avail them to avert the catastrophe. But if they can have one consolation in their distress, it should be that by dint of their powerful intellect and strenuous exertion they may so assert themselves in both the old Bengal and the new North-East Province that instead of in one province the Bengalis may make themselves the leaders of public opinion in two provinces. What else can any section of the Indian people do but to make the best of a bad situation when the all-powerful rulers make up their minds to thwart their endeavours, to crush their spirit at every turn?

The partition of Bengal.

ADVOCATE,
13th July, 1905.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 13th July, says :—The partition of Bengal has been sanctioned and the intended blow on united Bengal has fallen. The news has been received by the entire province with feelings of dissatisfaction and discontent bordering on, we may say, almost disaffection. Bengal had been agitated over many questions but it was never so much agitated as it was on the question of the partition. This was of course due to the view that partition was not needed, but was pressed forward with ulterior motives. Such a feeling is due to the great distrust which exists about the motives of the bureaucracy and those of none more than Lord Curzon. The Government of India held that partition was necessary on the ground of the unwieldiness of the present charge of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. It proposed partition because after Sir Rivers Thompson every Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal found it impossible to govern the entire Province. The people did not then and do not even now believe in these excuses. They say that if such was the case the solution of the difficulty lay in raising the status of the Lieutenant-Governor to that of a Governor by giving him an Executive Council. Partition has been sanctioned because it was thought necessary to divide the people and to lessen the influence which Calcutta has on the entire Province. Division of races and diminution of influence over public opinion led the Government to devise such a scheme and it could not do anything else but to take away a large area from the centre of influence. This is the popular view of the case. This want of confidence in the motives of the rulers may be a painful thing, but it does exist and it will be strengthened because Lord Curzon has carried out the scheme of partition in a manner most distasteful to the people. Indians are dissatisfied because they have been divided against their wishes, the non-official Anglo-Indian is dissatisfied because the object of the scheme to lessen the influence of the Bengali will not be carried out. The Pioneer does not conceal its fears on this head. It gives expression to its feeling of apprehension in the following significant words : "If on the other hand, it is as a matter of sentiment that the change is resisted in Calcutta, the Bengalis of the metropolis must find consolation in the reflection pointed out to them by Lord Curzon that the Bengal element will now preponderate in two Provinces. It is in fact Assam that might well be excused for looking on the union in its new shape with reluctance. While the scheme was confined to the two districts of Dacca and Mymensingh and the peculiar territory of Chittagong she might have calculated upon holding her own. Now that she is called upon to absorb so large a piece of Bengal, it is she herself who will be absorbed. As the Bengalis have carried it over the large Masulman majority in Eastern Bengal, so they will infallibly predominate over the backward races of Assam. The two people cannot amalgamate any more than can oil and vinegar. In a generation the public service, the tone, the influence of the new Province will be entirely Bengali. It is this consideration that, politically speaking, constitutes the strongest objection to the settlement that has been decided on by the Government of India." But we must say that we do not agree with those who think that the agitation against Lord Curzon's scheme has failed. There are two ways of looking at the result of the great agitation which Bengal has witnessed. One way of looking at it is that widespread and thoroughly genuine as the agitation against the partition proposals was, it affected the decision of the Government in a manner which is rare at present, considering the fact that the public spirit of Indians is only of recent growth. The Government of India has never been known to respect it; measure after measure has been passed in the face of strong agitation ; retrograde measures have been passed in spite of Indian emphatic protests ; though the relations of the Government of India with the people have been embittered, the legislative machine turns in its own way. Is it a success of a mean order that instead of getting only a Chief Commissionership for the new province the people get a Lieutenant-Governorship, instead of having the capital at Chittagong, a town where European influence would have preponderance, the old historic town of Dacca gets once more into eminence ? Who could ever foresee at this time last year that the new province would have its own Board of Revenue, its own Legislative Council and that instead of being relegated to the position of a non-regulated province, it would become a well regulated province with all those rights and privileges which the people of Bengal enjoy ? In course of time, let us hope, that in the capital of the new province will arise leisured classes who will take as much interest in the politics and other affairs of the country as the Calcutta leaders do. We are not the best judges to say how the people of Eastern Bengal will fare under the new administration. The loss to them of the support of the Metropolitan public opinion will not be felt for some time, as they will be under the protection of the Calcutta High Court. The success of the agitation of the past two years carried on with a uniform perseverance worthy of all praise will impress on the people of the new province the advantages of keeping a constant watch over their interests. While fully sympathising with the disappointment caused to Bengal because the success which the opposition deserved has not been attained, we feel constrained to congratulate it on its partial success and express a hope that out of evil will come good and that Dacca in the course of the next few years will become a centre of enlightenment and public spirit; and that administrative division will not succeed in dividing a people united in sentiments. We do hope and trust the worst fears of the Pioneer will be realised and that the guidance of the leaders of public opinion in Calcutta and Dacca will continue to strengthen the bond of that unity in Bengalis, which is the fruit of the growth of national feeling. The signs of this patriotism are observable in Bengal and these alone seem to have frightened the rulers there. Hence, while fully sympathising with the calamity which has befallen Bengal, we will only pray that though administratively divided, the people may become more and more united.

RAHBAR,
14th July, 1905.

The Nawab of Rampur.

1. THE Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th July, publishes a communication from a correspondent who calls himself a representative of the distressed Rampur people. Addressing His Excellency the Viceroy, the writer says that the Muhammadan State of Rampur is not considered inferior to Bhurtpore. No doubt the latter surpasses the former in area, population and revenues, but Rampur has always been held in higher respect by Government than Bhurtpore, inasmuch as Rampur has always been loyal and faithful to Government. In 1900 the Mahárája was deposed owing to his extravagance and intemperance and for shooting down a servant of his under provocation. For a long time similar complaints have been made against the Nawab of Rampur. A charge of murder was laid at the door of His Highness in 1900, but for reasons best known to Government no inquiry has been made into the charge so far. Let by-gones be by-gones. The writer will refer here to some of the recent misdeeds of the Nawab. His Highness pays lakhs of rupees a year to dancing girls or prostitutes, which is manifestly clear from the simple fact that during the collection of the land-revenue, the State treasury is full and the State officials regularly receive their pay every month. But six months have hardly passed when pay begins to be distributed after two months or so, which necessarily causes great hardship and misery to low paid clerks. The news of His Excellency's visit to Rampur excited high hopes in the minds of the people. They hoped that an enquiry would be made into their grievances and the Nawab would be required to mend his ways. But the misdeeds of His Highness committed in broad daylight remained a sealed book to the Viceroy or His Excellency himself overlooked them. The writer begs to be excused by the Viceroy if any improper words have escaped his lips regarding His Excellency in describing the distress of the people. The news of the Viceroy's visit raised high hopes, and even after His Excellency's departure people cherished for some time the hope that His Excellency would issue suitable orders, but all to no purpose. For some years the Nawab has held his court in September. During the year the Viceroy paid a visit to the State, His Highness commenced holding his court earlier, but subsequently the old practice has again been followed. If there is a delay, not of one or two years but of seven, or eight years in the dispensation of justice, the people cannot possibly live in peace and happiness. The Nawab's tyranny knows no bounds. For the fault of one man as many as 25 men are punished. Only the other day when the Nawab was enjoying himself in the rooms provided with electric fans and khas tattis, the kahár happened to work the thermantidote a little too fast and the luxurious Nawab felt a little cold. His Highness lost his temper and the kahár and also his 31 comrades who were at their houses and had committed no fault were sent for and beaten so severely that they must have taken months to recover from the effects of their hurts. Such arbitrary proceedings are of every day occurrence in Rampur and have rendered residence in the State intolerable.

NAIYAR AZAM,
19th July, 1905.

Younger brother of the Nawab of Rampur in England.

2. The Naiyar Ázam (Moradabad), of the 19th July, says that Násir Ali Khan, the younger brother of the Nawab of Rampur was sent to England when he was still in his minority. The Nawab has fixed his pay to meet his expenses, but sometimes the Nawab delays the remittance of the money. His Highness is heartily opposed to his return to Rampur. To say nothing of his return, if any persons are found to correspond with his brother they incur serious displeasure of the Nawab who makes a point of ruining them. The question is what the young prince is doing in England. The Nawab sent two or three men to England but with what object is not known. What harm has the prince done to the Nawab that His Highness wishes that his life should come to a speedy end in England. Is he being properly dealt with by the Nawab? What fault has he committed that he is obliged to pine away in a foreign country beyond the seas, far away from his friends and relatives. The Viceroy and His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor should give their prompt attention to the matter before the secret object with which His Highness has sent him to England transpires and fixes another dark stain on the Nawab's fame.

ZAMINDAR-WA-KASHTKAR,
June, 1905.

Collection of the famine cess in the United Provinces.

3. The Zamindár-wa-Káshtkár (Bijnor), for June, says that clear announcements were made in the Supreme and the Provincial Legislative Councils for the remission of the famine cess in the United Provinces. Although the remission was to take effect from the spring harvest of 1312 Fasli, it has been collected along with the revenue assessments in these districts, evidently because the district officers have not yet received orders from Government regarding the remission. If revised detailed revenue statements could not be prepared in time the Collectors should have been told to remit the famine cess. At all events the Collectors must have known the wishes of Government from the proceedings of the Councils. Had any landholder made unauthorized collections, he would at once have been convicted and punished. A refund may subsequently be sanctioned by Government. But it is well known that refunds cannot easily be obtained from the Government treasury. If a set-off is allowed to be made at future collections, the difficulty is that much land will change hands in the meantime. Many landholders must have incurred debts to pay the cess. Thus the measure has been a source of great loss and inconvenience to landholders.

ARYA MITRA,
26th July, 1905.

Dismissal by the High Court of the appeal in the Qurani Itra case.

4. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 26th July, says that the criminal case re the Qurání Itra, i. e., the substance of the Qurán has been disposed of by the High Court. Hari Singh, the accused, who was sentenced to a month's rigorous imprisonment appealed to the High Court, but the appeal has been dismissed and the sentence upheld. No court has decided the case on its merits, ulterior motives playing an important part in the disposal of the case. Government has established a series of appellate courts with a view to ensuring even-handed justice to the people. If a man fails to obtain justice even from the Supreme tribunal he must nolens volens acquiesce in its decisions and blame his luck. The judgments in the case are very queer. The Magistrate of Agra convicted the accused because he considered the book to be obscene. The Judge of the High Court did not consider the words used in the book to be obscene. However, he regarded them as obscene, inasmuch as he supposed that the book was written to cause provocation to some persons! The editor has never come across such a definition of obscene words. Formerly the professors of the Vaidik religion had to endure very severe punishments. Compared with these punishments, the punishment awarded to Hari Singh in the case under review is nothing. The Indian Government plumes itself on its religious toleration, but its fair fame cannot escape a dark stain when it itself institutes prosecutions against the members of a sect.

AL BASHIR,
18th July, 1905.

Butchers' strike in Saharanpur.

5. Al Bashîr (Etáwah), of the 18th July, regrets to say that the butchers strike in Sahâranpur has not yet come to an end and that the Musalmans are consequently exposed to great inconvenience. The editor has more than once declared that the dispute is between the butchers and the members of the Municipal Board. There can be no denying the fact that the Muhammadan residents of Sahâranpur are entirely free from blame. Even if it were admitted that the Municipal Board is innocent and that the obstinacy of the butchers is responsible for all the difficulties, the Municipal Board cannot but be held responsible for the hardships of the Muhammadan community. There is no reason why the Muhammadans should be deprived of their lawful rights for the sake of the Municipal Board. The wonder is that Government does not interfere and allows the prejudiced and wilful members of the Board to have things their own way.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th July, 1905.

Appointment of a Civilian as Director of Public Instruction in Bengal.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 20th July, says :—In Bengal they are going to have a Civilian Director of Public Instruction. Apart from the merits of the particular individual who will be the happy successor of Mr. Pedler, a principle is involved in the appointment. Lord Dufferin when Viceroy laid down the rule that the Directorship must be filled up from the Educational Service, and he was so convinced of the correctness of this rule that he said that failing an eligible man in the service of the particular province where the vacancy occurs, a competent educational officer of another province must be appointed but by no means a Civilian. Questioned in the Legislative Council, the Bengal Government denied that it was their duty to act on Lord Dufferin's minute. The Bengali Press, as might have been expected, disapproves of the innovation as being in the wrong direction altogether, but the Anglo-Indian Press of Calcutta does not approve of it either. The Englishman has expressed itself unmistakably in this sense. The Statesman sees in it a further step 'to bind the educational organization more closely to the Governmental machine,' and does not regard the outlook as at all hopeful. Our esteemed contemporary reminds 'the Government that the reserving of such a post for the Civil Service would rightly be interpreted as a most serious indication that the Supreme Government is bent upon the extension of a policy which has met with the strongest criticism on all hands.' It is unnecessary to say that we entirely endorse this view.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th July, 1905.

Praise of Lord Curzon by the Times of India.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th July, says :—The Times of India seems to have but one mission in these days, and that is the not particularly creditable one of singing external hallelujahs to Lord Curzon. We admire the vigour with which it is waging a fight against the military despotism established in India, but we confess its articles would have better served the purpose of the country if there was less desire to run down Lord Kitchener on the part of our contemporary. We do not remember that it was prone to detect imperfections in him before the recent despatches were published. On the contrary, so recently as when Mr. Angus Hamilton's alarmist letters about an impending Russian invasion were published in its appropriate columns, it pleaded for a free hand being given to him. We shared neither our contemporary's fear nor its views. But it is distinctly amusing to see that now the Times of India has made it its persistent duty to lay bare to the world his many defects. The motive seems to us to be clear. The cause is so impregnable that personal attacks on Lord Kitchener are absolutely unnecessary to express one's differences with him. But as he has not exactly suited our contemporary's special object which is worship, of the Viceregal sun, it seems to take a childish delight in attempting to prove that he is a very ordinary man indeed.

We have no particular reason to quarrel with it for what he has chosen to do. We ourselves have never thought that Lord Kitchener is a superhuman soldier or personality. On the other hand we distinctly said he is not of the class of soldier-statesmen of a past generation both to acquire and to maintain an empire. We have referred to the subject only with a view to pointing out to the Times of India the advisability of its turning its search-light for once on Lord Curzon. Why does it persist in its blind and abject adulation of him? Why has it so hopelessly lost all sense of proportion in its eulogiums of Lord Curzon? Even in the course of the present controversy, has it not been expressing its tender solicitude lest Lord Curzon resign? Why does it seek to produce the belief that the present Viceroy is an indispensable man? Far from his being this, it has really become indispensable in the interests of India and the Empire alike that his perverse, obstinate and unsympathetic lordship should resign at the earliest moment. Neither Lord Curzon nor Lord Kitchener is our idol, and neither is indispensable. We are convinced that it will be all for the best if neither will continue in office in India. But if either of them were indispensable, should not our contemporary with its professions of alarm at a possible Russian invasion of India rather believe that Lord Kitchener is the really indispensable man? And did it not say as much in effect not so very long ago? Half the sensible things written by some of our Anglo-Indian contemporaries really lose their value by their invincible inconsistency. In this connection we may express the hope that the Times of India will profit by vigorous home-thrusts of our contemporary the Kaiser-i-Hind?

ADVOCATE,
16th July, 1905.

Resolution of the Government of India on arboriculture.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th July, says:—The Government of India have issued a Resolution about arboriculture in which it has laid down certain very wise principles for the protection of trees on roadsides and their maintenance in future. The Government lays down that in future "the authority responsible for the construction and upkeep of bridges and roads upon which the provision of shade is required for the comfort of wayfarers should consider it almost as much its duty to maintain along the road a line of shade-giving trees to keep the roadway and bridges in proper order. It should allot its funds accordingly, and should not derive any net profit from the avenues formed until all the needs of the road under its charge in the matter of trees have been supplied." The Government disapprove the idea of the Local Government making any profit from these trees till such time as trees injured by famine and other ravages are not replaced. The Governor General in Council trusts that the ravages caused by neglect and famine amongst roadside trees will be gradually but surely repaired, and that the advantages which the present generation has reaped in the matter from the energy and foresight of its predecessors, will be continued in ever fuller measures to posterity. We trust that the question of planting fruit trees along the railway lines next to this in importance will attract the attention of the Government and that it will issue orders that the land lying on each side of railway lines be used for the purpose of arboriculture.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th July, 1905.

The Engineer of Partabgarh accused of killing his Muhammadan servant.

9. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th July, on the authority of the Urdu Akhbár, states that the Eurasian Engineer of Partábgarh in Oudh has murdered his Muhammadan servant. The Engineer pleads that the man was guilty of disobedience and that under provocation he threw a knife which lay close by at him, which happened to cut the throat of the man who fell on the ground and died in a few minutes. The Engineer has been released on bail. The widow of the deceased has sent a telegram bringing the matter to the notice of His Excellency the Viceroy in the hope that His Excellency may order an inquiry to be made into the murder. The case has created sensation and the friends of the Engineer are trying hard to hush up the case with a view to saving him from punishment. The Engineer is willing to pay some money to the widow. But she and her friends are determined to bring the murderer to justice. It is to be hoped that the Government of the United Provinces will take up the case and try to do justice to the widow. Such cases are largely on the increase. If examples were made of murderers in one or two cases, the evil will be greatly checked.

HINDOSTHAN,
19th July, 1905.

Indian Military expenditure.

10. The English Hindosthán (Kalákánkar), of the 19th July, says:—For years past we have been told by one War Minister after another that we have no army: we are paying for an army and are paying highly but apparently get nothing worthy of the name in return. Each Secretary of State has in turn assured us that we have no soldiers and no guns and each official has in turn assured us that we have only to listen to him and we shall have both.

Apparently the only permanent element in our military system has been extravagance. Surely there comes a time when in India at least we may ask when economy is to be kept sight of for the costliness of the army here must sooner or later weigh heavily on the people and this in a time of peace is apt to prove irksome.

That India is in partnership so to speak with England on the question of the army goes without saying, but it should be remembered that the one partner is rich and the other poor and an expenditure in reason to the one may prove abnormal to the other.

The Indian army should be organised and administered with due regard to the interests of the people of India and not for the purpose of supplying defects in the home system, and above all it should not be made the means of obtaining at the cost of India advantages for the army at home which do not entirely affect the interests of this country.

And the same remarks almost apply to the European forces in India. We should like to see all fairness of treatment and due regard to the fact that they are strangers, as it were, and therefore to some extent to be liberally dealt with, but with the present hill stations and comfort of living that has made so great strides in this country, there is less need for extravagance in pay than formerly, and we trust our reformers will keep this in view.

The cost to India for increase rates of pay to the British service in India amount to a large sum annually, and the charge is greatly enhanced by the burden of the payment of the non-effective services.

We offer no apology for bringing these views to notice; there is the cry in England going on for, if not retrenchment, at least for economy, we Indians likewise join in it.

HINDOSTHAN,
19th July, 1905.

The partition of Bengal.

11. The English Hindosthán (Kalákánkar), of the 19th July, says:—We are right glad to see that the long-talked of partition of Bengal is coming shortly to pass. We advise our Bengal people to keep quiet, as it is an Imperial policy and has nothing to do with the public. Surely, it does not matter to us whether India is ruled by one Viceroy or divided into heptarchy and governed by seven Governors. On the other hand there is no democracy in India, there is no Parliament in this country, nor have we any share in the Government of the country. We ought to be thankful to our benign Government for having given us the municipal boards, the district boards and so many seats in the Provincial and Supreme Councils. The Government of India also encourages us by listening to the reasonable prayers of our various societies, associations and congresses, and there is not a particle of doubt that if we act loyally and constitutionally we will sooner or later get our rights and privileges. But it is disloyal and unconstitutional for the leading Bengali newspaper or papers to say in their comments upon the partition of Bengal that "If the Secretary of State will not reconsider the matter we must appeal to Parliament. We are within measurable distance of the time when the present ministry will be expelled from office, and when the measures and the policy of the present Viceroy will cease to command the confidence of the Government in England."

It is very well for the people of Bengal to brag and boast of the power of the House of Commons, to threaten and frighten the British Ministry into granting concessions to the people of this country. But up to this time we have not been able to create any sympathy in the hearts of English people or to get help by extorting concessions from the English ministry. We even would be content to see a public opinion created in this country and see all the nationalities speaking with one voice before the Indian Government. But it is a folly and shame talking of coercing the Head of the India office through the force of the Members of the House of Commons when they are so indifferent as not to pay attention to the cries and complaints of our benefactors, forsooth! Messrs. Hume, Dadabhai Nowrojee, W. C. Bonnerjee, &c., &c., who went to live and die in England under the subterfuge of liberating India, from the tyranny and oppression of the English Ráj.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 20th July, 1905.

Maintenance of the Ecclesiastical Department in India.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 20th July, says :—'Nothing is more indicative of the liberal outlook of the Indian Government than the fact that it spends money for the support of religions other than that of the State.' Thus self-complacently writes the Englishman, and the occasion for this supremely self-comforting and self-laudatory reflection is that 'a recent notification in Indian Army Orders draws attention to the fact that religious instruction is provided at Government expense to Muhammadan, Hindu and Sikh regiments.' As if the money that the Indian Government spends on the above object is not the money contributed in taxes by the very people who belong to these persuasions! as if it were merely an indication of the 'liberal outlook' of the Indian Government that it spends a comparatively large sum of money belonging to its non-Christian subjects on the maintenance of a Christian Ecclesiastical establishment, departing in this act from the principle of religious neutrality so emphatically laid down in the Queen's Proclamation! Not to speak of its 'liberal outlook' the real truth is that the Government of India is not at all acting as a faithful steward of the Indian people's revenues in so freely disbursing them on Christian chapels and padris. Let the Englishman first get this wrong righted, and it will be time enough for it to congratulate itself on the 'liberal outlook' of the Government of its countrymen.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 16th July, 1905.

Native druggists in Meerut.

13. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 16th July, says that some ignorant and poor persons have opened druggists' shops for the sale of English medicines and are cheating the public in various ways. They have a small number of medicines in their shops, but dispense all prescriptions never acknowledging that they have not got any particular medicines. This is not all. Of course they do not hesitate to dispense wrong medicines. They also pretend to be doctors and treat patients, sometimes levying high fees. To the editor's knowledge a man borrowed Rs. 80 and set up as a druggist. These druggists are ready to take up most complicated cases, representing themselves to be very able and experienced doctors. They are really killing patients. A druggist entered into a contract with a sick mahajan to cure him for Rs. 150. He has taken half the amount in advance. Even the Civil Surgeon cannot expect to receive such heavy fees. A syce who has a wound in his foot has been cheated by a druggist of Rs. 5. The druggist has treated him for the last three months, but the man has not yet been cured. A respectable person's daughter was burnt by kerosine oil. A druggist told him that he had recently received a good medicine from England, which would cure the girl in two days, but that the medicine was worth Rs. 12. The girl's father at once paid him the amount. The druggist put a little lime into a small quantity of oil and gave it to the gentleman. There are many good doctors in Meerut, such as the Civil Surgeon, Dr. Shankar Das, Assistant Surgeon, and Dr. Sulemán Khan and several retired Assistant Surgeons, such as Dr. Tilok Nath, and Dr. Rahim-ullah, &c. But they have been thrown into the shade by the druggists who are freely robbing and killing the people. The District Magistrate and the Civil Surgeon should summon all the druggists and require them to execute bonds binding themselves only to dispense medicines and never to treat patients. Their shops should also be inspected once or twice a month with a view to checking their medicines.

NAJM-I-BAZIGH,
10th July, 1905.

Hostile attitude of certain Moradabad newspapers towards the Nawab of Rampur.

1. THE Najm-i-Bázigh (Moradabad), of the 10th July, says that according to the Jám-i-Jamshed (Moradabad) of the 2nd July, its editor, Qázi Jamshed Ali was to issue, along with his paper, a weekly leaflet entitled the "Rad-wa-kad-i-Mulázamat Riásat Rampur" (examination or criticism of the State service in Rampur) from next week. In this leaflet the Qázi will publish by instalment an account of his own and that of other Moradabad editors' connection with Rampur. This account should be very interesting indeed. As regards the Qázi, he himself declares in his notice regarding the leaflet, that having proved a failure in legal practice, he endeavoured to obtain a post in the state service, but he did not succeed in this also; and what was worse still his importunities led to the discontinuance of the annual subsidy which he had long been receiving from the Darbar for his paper. This is evidently the cause of the hostile attitude of the Qázi towards the Nawab of Rampur. It would be well if the editors of other Moradabad newspapers, hostile to the Nawab, similarly gave out the reasons of their hostility towards His Highness. In the next article the editor says that most of the Moradabad newspapers are full of hostile matters to the Nawab of Rampur the reason for which is not far to seek. They discontinued attacking the Nawab for some time, in the fond hope of getting some reward from him, but now finding that they get nothing for their reticence, they have again commenced vilifying the state. But they do nothing more than repeating the old stories regarding the assassination of General Ázamuddin Khan, and about one Jangi Khan, which can hardly excite any fresh interest among the public or the Government authorities. If the newspapers desire to succeed in their endeavours (to extort money from Rampur), they should tackle some new affair damaging to the Nawab's administration. But the Nawab and his Minister have (lately) been administering the state so excellently that hardly any holes can be picked in their administration. The very fact that the designing newspapers are simply bringing the old affairs to the notice of the public again, evidently shows that they have got no new trump cards in their hands to play.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th July, 1905.

The Nawab of Rampur and one Munshi Jamil-ud-din.

2. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 26th July, says that one Munshi Jamil-ud-din was lately the karinda or manager of the estate of the Begam of Ali Asghar Khan (at Moradabad). The Begam was a rich lady and the Nawab of Rampur was anxious to obtain her estate. She transferred the estate to her mama, a maid servant of hers. The Nawab got the mama married to a respectable officer of his and then asked him to request his wife to transfer her estate to him (to her husband). At the instance of the Nawab the officer told Jamil-ud-din that the Begam was ready to transfer her estate to him and asked him to purchase the required stamp-paper. But Jamil-ud-din desired to ask the Begam before making the purchase and went to Rampur about a month ago for the purpose. When he was taking his food at a friend's house in Rampur the Nawab's servant went and told him that the Nawab desired to see him. He went to the Nawab but has not yet returned. Nothing is known for certain what has become of him. According to one rumour the Nawab has had him murdered, while according to another rumour he is still alive but kept under restraint by the Nawab and will not be released until the mama has effected the transfer of the estate to her husband. Various rumours have prevailed regarding Jamil-ud-din's fate for a month and his relatives are in great doubt and anxiety.

SHRI BHARAT BHUSHAN,
25th July,
1905.

A dispensary situated to the east of the head octroi office in the Allahabad city.

3. The Shri Bhárat Bhushan (Allahabad), of the 25th July, says that to the east of the head octroi office in the Allahabad city, there is a dispensary where women and children who have simple complaints are treated. A number of poor people live to the north and west of the dispensary and a small piece of land lies to the east. The owners of the dispensary desire to occupy this piece and also the land on which a number of the poor have built their huts and have lived for years past. The owners of the dispensary tried to get this land but did not. Now the rumour is that at the instance of the owners of the dispensary the Municipal Board will purchase the huts from the poor people and then make over the land to the owners of the dispensary. Such an act on the part of the Municipal Board would be against the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, and the Municipal Board would expose itself to the charge of causing hardship to the poor instead of rendering any help to them in their troubles. Where will the poor people, who will be turned out of their houses, get other land to build new houses? They and their children will become homeless. The members of the Municipal Board make solemn promises to promote the public welfare at the time of the Municipal elections, but this is the way in which they subsequently misbehave themselves. It is to be hoped that the local authorities will interfere and prevent the Municipal Board from adopting such an unjustifiable course in the matter.

RASTGO,
June, 1905.

Lord Curzon versus Lord Kitchener.

4. The Rástgo (Allahabad), for June, in an article headed "the Curzonian Defeat," calling Lords Curzon and Kitchener two athletes wrestling in the arena of the Indian administration for the last six months, observes that Mr. Brodrick has, after such a protracted contest, given his final award, in favour of Lord Kitchener. This administrative defeat of Lord Curzon has caused the Indians to send up a cry that his Lordship's egotism of whose repeated display they had grown sick, has at last sustained a check. It must have opened the eyes of Lord Curzon to the fact that there is some one above him also, whose orders he must carry out, whether willingly or unwillingly, just as the helpless people of India have been compelled by him to carry out his own orders, quite against their own will, during the last six years. He should now be able to realize how very galling it is to have to do a thing against one's own wish or conscience. Though His Lordship met before with failure in several other matters, such as the late Tibet, Persian and Kabul Missions, yet he did not admit it; nor did he make much of the protest meetings (held against his Convocation speech) either. But when he was compelled to yield to Lord Kitchener by the decision of Mr. Brodrick re the army reorganization scheme, he threatened to resign rather than carry out the latter's orders in the matter; for he evidently felt that service was after all nothing better than servitude whether it be as Viceroy of India or as peon in England. The Indians have, at any rate, been mouthing among themselves that his Lordship's hauteur must now be (somewhat) reduced. Had his Lordship ruled sympathetically over the Indians, and remembering the advice of the Persian poet Saadi steered clear of pride which always goes before a fall, he would not have now been the object of taunts from everybody. But there is no instance on record in which a Viceroy of India had had to go to the wall before a Commander-in-Chief, a subordinate of his ! And that is the reason why the writer and others would strongly advise him to resign office.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 23rd July, 1905.

Lord Curzon and the Viceroyalty of India.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd July, says:—If Lord Curzon wanted to remain in office for the few surviving months of his tenure, whatever rebuffs he might meet with at the hands of his official superiors in England recking not for the traditional dignity of his exalted office, it would almost have been better for him to have said so plainly and candidly than to put forward in all seriousness four puerile suggestions which had been characterised as momentous changes and when they had been partly accepted as a matter of course, to have come out with another of the pompous Curzonic deliverances in Council calling all and sundry to witness the mighty feats performed by the modern Agamemnon. In reality the new form of military administration sanctioned by Mr. Brodrick at the bidding of Lord Kitchener is not altered at all, or if at all, altered slightly for the worse, by the tinkering that has been effected at the request of his Viceregal Lordship to enable him to remain in office. Lord Curzon's love of the Viceroyalty seems to be not a whit less than Mr. Balfour's anxiety to remain Prime Minister. And that he has accepted the situation in spite of all the rhetorical heroics about military autocracy, etc., fairly raises a suspicion whether his Excellency's attitude on the subject was not prompted less by love of constitutional government for India than by the not altogether disinterested desire not to surrender more authority into the hands of a masterful Commander during his own tenure of office. In other words, whether it was not merely a Curzon-Kitchener controversy instead of being a sober consideration of matters of the greatest moment to the State from the impersonal standpoint of public interest.

CITIZEN, 24th July, 1905.

Lord Curzon and the Secretary of State.

6. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 24th July, says:—His Excellency the noble Lord Curzon of Keddleston has deigned to awe us and edify with the sublime show—in his own person—of what that paragon of virtue and morality, the European diplomate, is capable of, when goaded to desperation. Reduced to such straits, His Excellency has represented the biter as the one bit, and himself, the vanquished, as the victor. His Lordship professes to have been simply charmed with the modified views of Mr. Brodrick as to military reorganization, but no one is more painfully conscious than His Excellency that they are

> Like to the apples on the Dead Sea's shore,
> All ashes to the taste.

We laymen cannot of course pretend to offer an opinion on matters military, but at least this much seems to us to be certain that the concessions made by Mr. Brodrick with the exception of probably one—that as to the organisation of the mobilisation committee—are no concessions at all. Mr. Brodrick himself says that they do not contravene the provisions of his previous despatch, and if Lord Curzon appears to make much of his achievements it is to hide from the world the shame of his discomfiture. So greatly ruffled has, indeed, been the equanimity of Lord Curzon's temper that in announcing the same concessions to the Governor-General's Council the other day, the noble Lord altogether forgot himself and commented on the despatch of the Secretary of State in a language at once offensive and undignified. The English press and the Home Government cannot but take serious notice of the speech, and it may result, we are afraid, in his departure from the land in a hurry and in disgrace.

CITIZEN, 24th July, 1905.

The partition of Bengal.

7. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 24th July, says:—We doubt not that the other provinces of India—the United Provinces, the Punjab, Bombay and Madras—will with one accord send forth their deep-felt sympathy to Bengal in the national calamity that has just befallen her. As we announced before, the partition of Bengal had been decided upon. The original scheme has been considerably modified and the modification makes it worse than it was before in certain respects. Ever since the proposal of the dismemberment of Bengal has been put forward, it has excited the strongest and most sincere opposition from not only the educated community as the official world professes to believe, but also from the vast body of the uneducated who have intelligence enough to understand and realize what evils the separation of the province involves. In fact the illiterate masses in East Bengal are most violently opposed to Lord Curzon's ill-advised plan to form a separate province out of Bengal. The peasants and labourers in the villages in East Bengal held meetings in hundreds of villages and not a single meeting was attended by less than five hundred persons. In the history of the political agitation of Bengal, we do not know of any other occasion when the feeling of indignation against a political scheme was so widespread and so deeply felt alike by the educated and the uneducated. Lord Curzon pooh-poohed the agitation as being got up by wirepullers. Certainly educated men circulated the news of the Government's intention to divide Bengal but they did nothing more. This is not wirepulling. In every civilized country where constitutional agitation is an element of political life, there are organizations to circulate the news of Government's proposals and designs. In England this is the case. But where is the English statesman who has the impudence to slight an agitation on this ground? Lord Curzon was grievously mistaken in his estimate of the agitation against the partition measure.

By the new and modified scheme, Lord Curzon has met some of the objections of the protesters by arranging that the new province will have a Lieutenant-Governor, a Legislative Council, and a Board of Revenue, and that the jurisdiction of the High Court over the present area will continue. But the objections that are obviated by these provisions were not the principal and main objections to the measure. Their chief objection was against the partition itself, for even if the partitioned portion joined to Assam retains all the administrative advantages which it now enjoys, the evils which the very circumstance of separation will involve will be of such a formidable character as to constitute a perfectly reasonable and strong ground for opposition to the scheme. The evils complained of will chiefly be of a social and moral nature. It was after strenuous efforts that slowly but surely a deep spirit of brotherhood was being generated between the people of East and West Bengal, and this healthy and hopeful factor of a strongly united Bengal for all purposes of reform, progress and advancement will now be done away with by the partition of East Bengal. The forced division of Bengal by the Government is looked upon in the light of a forced separation of two loving brothers, who have been living in amity, and working together for each other's welfare and prosperity. There are now eighty millions in the whole of Bengal, but after the partition the Eastern Bengal to be joined to Assam will take off fifty-five (sic) millions and only forty-five (sic) millions will remain in West Bengal. This will be dismemberment indeed with a vengeance. Both east Bengal and west Bengal will after the separation be each comparable to a man whose right hand has been cut off. The Bengali nation will feel absolutely emasculated after the partition measure has been carried into effect.

Lord Curzon's principal plea to separate the province is that the Lieutenant-Governor is over-worked, and consequently there can be no efficient administration. The representative men of Bengal admitted the plea just to please Lord Curzon and met it by the proposition that Bengal should be put under a Governor brought from England, and that he should be given an executive council with a specially large staff of Secretaries to aid him in the work of a more efficient administration. It was pointed out to His Lordship that if inefficiency of administration was the only reason for the proposed partition, many other plans might readily suggest themselves to a genius like him, which would not include the objectionable remedy of the dismemberment of the province. But Lord Curzon's real object was not to improve the administration; so he did not listen to the very reasonable proposals of the people. We think it advisable to say that throughout Bengal it is believed that it is a purely political motive that has prompted the measure. As the prancing Pro-Consul of the modern world, Lord Curzon has a mind imbued with the old Roman imperial principle of "divide and rule," and it is to bring about a permanent division in the Bengali nation that east Bengal is to be partitioned from west Bengal. The Bengalis are eighty millions and they are fast bringing about a union among all their branches and ramifications! Oh, it is formidable, some day they may grow into a danger to the State, nay, they will, for it is they who, above all Indian races, cry and strive for political amelioration. They must, therefore, be so dealt with that they cease to be the cause of any anxiety. They must be divided so that they may soon degenerate into two little petty races. Such must have been the train of thought which gradually led Lord Curzon to formulate his partition scheme. Even the Englishman of Calcutta suspects that the Government has been led by secret motives in augurating this revolutionary change. Our contemporary thinks that the partition scheme has, among other objects, the weakening of the Indian Judiciary, to wit, the High Court of Judicature in Calcutta. It says that a Chief Court will have to be created in Dacca eventually; and when that is done, the Calcutta High Court too will be reduced into a Chief Court.

The present mental attitude of the Bengalis towards the Government of Lord Curzon is one of indignation and resentment. The more excitable among the population of northern Bengal and east Bengal are almost mad with rage and they do not know how to avert the calamity. They are, we hear, arranging a big plan of vengeance. They will organize a practical and persistent agitation of a unique character. As its result, no Bengali will act as Commissioner of a Municipalty, as member of a District Board, or as Honorary Magistrate. They will boycott entirely all articles of English manufacture; they will not use even Liverpool salt, and will rather use salt-less curries, for when the very salt of their lives has been wrested away they can manage without the ordinary salt. They will not contribute any sums to any funds which have been started and are promoted by the Government or Government officials. And in short, they will leave nothing undone, which may mark their just resentment.

We hope and trust that Lord Curzon will yet have the wisdom to reconsider the matter and that he will come to the decision of withdrawing the proposal or at any rate postponing its accomplishment, not only for the welfare of the Bengali nation, but also for saving the Government of India from much future trouble, and the British rule in India from a serious decline in its popularity.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
23rd July, 1905.

The Resolution on the partition of Bengal.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd July, says:—The Government of India's Resolution on the Bengal Partition Scheme will do nothing to allay the strong public feeling that has been aroused on the subject in the sister province. If anything, it is admirably calculated to strengthen that feeling on account of its very inconclusiveness and of the feeling irresistibly produced on the mind on a perusal of its text that it must have been reasons other than those set forth in it that must have been responsible for the dismemberment of a hitherto united province and race. A rapid examination of the main points in the Resolution will show that what we have stated is the case.

It is officially admitted—for the first time if we mistake not—that it was not only the well-meaning desire to reduce 'the excessive and intolerable burden imposed upon the Bengal Government by a charge too great for any one administration', but 'the importance of rendering Assam a self-contained and independent administration with a service of its own, and of providing for its future commercial and industrial expansion,' that was responsible for the production of the particular scheme put forward. This is what the public have been saying from the outset. If some such consideration as the above was not present in the mind of Government, we might be sure that the proposal would have taken a less objectionable and more logical shape. The proposal was resisted no sooner than it was published, and Lord Curzon went down to Dacca and Mymensingh to conciliate public feeling by the power of his position as well as of his tongue. How completely he failed in that 'pacific mission'—as completely as that other pacific mission which was sent across the high mountains about the same time to argue the people of Tibet into willing subjection to the British Government—is now matter of history. It is notorious how strongly he increased the public feeling against his scheme by the very acid tone of his orations. Curiously enough, we are invited to believe in this as it were post-facto official pronouncement that the discussion elicited by the publication of Mr. Risley's famous letter indicated, not that the proposal to partition Bengal was unacceptable to the people in any shape or form—which it actually did—but that large as were the proposals of Government, 'they were not large enough if satisfaction were to be given to the feelings of those who were alarmed, &c. It seems that these feelings attracted the earnest attention of the Government of India—a nebulous quantity in the time of Lord Curzon—and that the Viceroy addressed himself to their removal in his speeches at Chittagong, Dacca and Mymensingh. This is we suppose how history is manufactured. From the date of the Viceroy's tour, we are next told, the efforts of Government were principally directed to a discussion of the areas that could most advantageously be assigned to the new province, &c. It speaks volumes of the sincerity of Lord Curzon's constantly advertised (we mean self-advertised) anxiety to take the public into the confidence of his Government to the actual date of the issue of the Resolution under notice, not a shred of evidence was forthcoming from Government as to the direction in which its mind was moving, that all the discussion was carried on in secret between the Supreme and the Provincial Governments concerned, and the public themselves were treated as only a corpore vile fit to be experimented upon at the sweet will and pleasure of officialdom and nothing else. For the first time do the public now learn that in the course of the official discussion 'a scheme was submitted by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal for amalgamating with Assam, Chittagong and Dacca, the division and districts of Patna, Bogra and Rangpur.' Were the public of those districts afforded an opportunity of expressing their opinions on this proposal of the Bengal Government? At any rate it is not a little curious that it should have been proposed to amalgamate Patna with Assam! This proposal 'did not seem to the Government of India to be proportionate to the scope of the important administration which it was now contemplated to create, nor would it have given to Bengal—whose population would still have exceeded 59 millions the permanent relief that ought to ensue from an adequate reduction of its existing area and responsibilities.' As if even after a larger reduction of the population of Bengal, it would not again increase! But the self-contradictory portions of the Government Resolution are decidedly the most interesting as showing how little the Government really cared for acting upon any definite and intelligible principle. As in the Risley circular, the Government speak in the Resolution under notice also of the desirability of being guided by geographical, ethnological, social and linguistic considerations, and of concentrating like populations in a single province. To the former considerations they paid due heed by leaving Beharis and Uriyas along with a section of Bengalis in one province, and by joining another section of Bengalis with the Assamese in another province; by keeping together a portion of Bengal and Behar, Orissa and Chota Nagpur, and amalgamating the other portion of Bengal with Assam. This is how we are invited to believe due heed has been paid to geographical, social, ethnological and linguistic considerations. Next the Government express tender solicitude to bring together 'the typical Muhammadan population of Bengal, for whom Dacca would furnish a natural capital.' According to the Government's own showing, what of the Muhammadans of West Bengal? But really, is it not mischievous thus to seek to divide Bengali Hindus and Muhammadans who are now living as good friends and companions? Is this not the first time in British Indian history when it is sought to have a Muhammadan province or a Hindu province? Divide et Impera has ever been the policy of bureaucratic administrators, and as Lord Curzon easily takes rank as the foremost of them, it is but in the fitness of things that he should go a step farther in the wrong direction than any of his predecessors. The Government further say that by the adoption of their new scheme 'the whole of the tea industry (with the exception of the Darjeeling gardens) and the greater part of the jute tracts would thus be brought under a single Government.' As if these were more important considerations than the feelings of an entire community from prince to peasant! As if the jute tracts are not even now under one administration, the Government of Bengal, and as if it were more important that the greater part of the jute tracts should be in one province than that the whole of them should be in one! Now it is distinctly interesting to note that the Darjeeling tea gardens will be left alone and not taken into the same province as the rest of the tea area. And what is the reason for this? It is this; 'Darjeeling will remain with Bengal in order to maintain associations which are highly valued in both areas'!! Surely not more than in the case of the other of the districts going to be removed from the province of Bengal. And the associations are not older or more dear than those of those other districts. It is outrageous that this should be said of Darjeeling by the self-same Government that did not care a brass button for the united voice of the entire Bengali race. The truth is this is only summoning the aid of rhetoric to conceal the real reason, which is that the Government of Bengal wants a summer headquarters. The last argument in favour of the new scheme is 'that the long established divisional areas would thereby remain undisturbed.' But what of the disturbance of provincial areas which is something more important?

If the arguments that we have examined above were the only ones in favour of the creation of the new province, a child would hesitate to put them forward seriously as it would be laughed at. And it may be assumed that the Government of India have slightly more wisdom than that innocent being. More feeble arguments have never been so confidently advanced in support of a grave act, and we cannot recall another important State document so over-weighted with mutual contradictions, flimsy pretexts, and clumsy attempts at making the worse appear the better reason. We are driven, therefore, to the conclusion that the real motive of the partition is something else than what has been given out. What that motive is has been more than hinted at during the course of the controversy not only by Indian speakers and writers, but by such Anglo-Indian papers as the Statesman. Having effected such a revolutionary change against the wishes of the people for reasons not at all satisfactorily explained, much less conclusively established, the Government of India almost add insult to the injury inflicted upon the population immediately affected by disavowing all desire 'to undervalue the sentiments upon which it (the opposition) has been based.' This additional pain may have been spared. The people will require very strong proof indeed that they can expect any sympathy from the present Government of India. The Government Resolution also indulges in the careless, unproved and unprovable assertion that the scheme actually adopted is better than all available alternatives. What reasons have been advanced or can be advanced against the establishment of a different form of administration by the appointment of a Governor and Executive Council, and what against the separation of Behar or of Orissa? The Government of India wanted to undermine the political influence of Bengalis by dividing them, and it has achieved its object. That is all.

ADVOCATE,
27th July, 1905.

Government of India's resolution on the partition of Bengal.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 27th July, says:—Consistency is the bugbear of fools must be the only answer of Government to all criticism directed against the arguments on which the partition scheme has been based. Throughout the controversy from the start of the proposal in its crudest form in December 1903 to its end in the finished style as given in last week's Resolution, there has been a regular jumbling of facts and figures, a veritable hash of arguments and conclusions, too much reasoning here and an extra dose of begging the question there. Every argument used to support partition in one part of the area affected has been like a water-tight compartment; it has never been used all round. For instance, linguistic considerations have caused the Hindi-speaking territory near Palamau to go to the Central Provinces, but Behar remains with Bengal proper, though the two provinces have not only different languages but also different characters for the tongues. Ethnologically Assam should be a part of Burma, the races inhabiting the two countries being Mongoloid in origin and features, but no, the Assamese must brush their shoulders with the Bengalis who are anything but Mongoloid. At the same time Bengalis, a compact race ethnologically, must be severed in twain for no earthly reasons based on geographical, social or ethnological grounds. The only reason for the partition as decided upon lies in the domain of high politics—diplomacy or statesmanship, if you choose to name it; it is the old but most successful policy of governing and keeping in subjection a subject nation—divide et impera.

This policy will, it seems, be worked in a manner that may go counter to a noble conduct of official life hitherto characteristic of all State measures—the observance of religious neutrality. In the Indian Army Lord Robert introduced the class system by disbanding the mixed regiments where Sikhs fought side by side with Musalman sepoys, the late great Queen's battle, where all Indian sepoys felt the sense of comradeship in the field as in the barrack ; and re-arranged them into regiments each composed entirely of Rajputs, Sikhs or Jats, and so on. This division was based on religious considerations. What Lord Roberts did as far back as 1883 in the Army, Lord Curzon to-day means to effect among the civil population and in one of the most advanced communities. "In short the territories now composing Bengal and Assam will be divided into two compact and self-contained provinces by far the largest constituents of each of which will be homogeneous in character and be equipped with the complete resources of an advanced administration." The explanation of the words italicised by us lies in another line of the Resolution, namely, "... they (additions of Rajshahi, Dinajpur, Jalpaiguri, Malda and the State of Cooch Behar) would concentrate in a single province the typical Mahomedan population of Bengal for whom Dacca would furnish a natural capital ..." It were well if the chief characteristics of the typical Mahomedans of Bengal were dilated upon in order to see if it would be possible to induce Mahomedans of other provinces possessing those traits to migrate to Eastern Bengal and Assam, and on the other hand to persuade Hindus there to cross the Brahmaputra and the Ganges and settle on this side of both rivers so as to make Bengal proper truly a Hindu province and the new not only typically but in its entirety a Mahomedan.

At the same time, Anglo-Indian supremacy is the watch-word everywhere. Political considerations alone are at the root of all this hubbub in State dovecotes and hence the excitement among the people of Bengal which may seem to an outsider a bit hysterical. Consternation is writ large on the face of every Bengali whether of East and North Bengal or of West and Central Bengal. That Lord Curzon's sop of so many advantages to be enjoyed by the people in the new province does not seem to have 'caught on' the bangals is simply because they are fully satisfied there is more behind the screen and all arguments so far trotted out—and found wanting on examination—are a mere ruse to put the people on the wrong scent. So much use of language has been made only to hide the real thought. If divide the races and rule them is with regard to the people, tighten the grasp of the Anglo-Indian upon them in every province, both in the old and the new, is the corner-stone of every move towards partition or conglomeration, concentration or decentralisation. Apparently commercial considerations keep Chota Nagpur to Bengal and agricultural—more definitely tea and jute—take jute districts to the new Province ; and in all the three industries—tea, jute and mining—Anglo-Indian planters, traders and mining companies hold sway over the respective fields.

So lightening the burden of one ruler is but a plausible argument while rendering Assam into a compact and self-contained administration is the real motif. In spite of all tall talk about personal rule, the system of Government under the British in vogue in India is anything but personal ; it is not only impersonal but even devoid of heart. Administration goes on by rules and regluations, laws of Indian Councils and Statutes of Parliament. One headstrong ruler may make his influence felt in working the system little lively or a weak-kneed governor may look more to the letter but kill the spirit of the law ; but, in reality, it is the system that is at fault. Eastern Bengal and Assam shall have an area of 106,540 square miles and will thus be less than Bombay, Madras or Burma in dimensions, but greater than the Punjab or the Central Provinces, and almost equal to the United Provinces. With a population of 31 millions of souls, the New Province will exceed those of Bombay, Burma, the Central Provinces or the Punjab, but fall short of those of Madras or the United Provinces. As personal rule is no characteristic feature of British over-lordship in India, the burden theory is no good.

Lord Curzon's usual and growing disregard of public opinion comes out pointedly in this controversy. When his speeches in East Bengal failed to allay public agitation and his baits of a Lieutenant-Governorship with a Legislative Council and a Revenue Board did not catch, he began to work in the dark. The larger scheme that has just been sanctioned was never placed before the public nor were the people of the districts newly added to the list of those that were to be transferred under the original scheme given a hearing. This is bad in all conscience and cannot be excused in the case of a Viceroy who always prides himself as being always ready to hear public opinion on every subject of public interest. But His Lordship seems now to be in any but the proper frame of mind. The military controversy ending practically in his defeat, more properly defeat of a very high principle of administration—in which light the Indian public has been a consistent supporter of the Viceroy—has brought about some indisposition by which his Lordship has been confined to bed. This is surely the effect of the strain on His Excellency in these days. But before he became indisposed, Mahárája Sir Jotindramohan Tagore, as the result of a conference held at his Prasal in Calcutta, sent a message to His Excellency with a request to receive a deputation to discuss the wider scheme sanctioned, but which was never placed before the public for consideration. A similar message went to England to Mr. Brodrick. The Viceroy wired back to say that he was unable to accede to the request as the Secretary of State had already passed orders on the proposal and then fell ill and had since been confined to bed. Perhaps recovery may bring about a more calm and sensible frame of mind. And then His Lordship may feel the justice of the request and comply with it.

A proposal to establish a Medical College in the United Provinces to commemorate the Prince of Wales' visit.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 27th July, says:—In connection with the forthcoming visit of His Royal Highness to these provinces, no question is receiving more keen attention of all classes of the people than the one as to how best to commemorate the event. Those who can mark their sense of loyalty by paying substantial subscriptions are anxious to decide how best to spend their money or more properly—we might say—are desirous to know how the funds which they are asked to contribute are to be spent. The middle classes, we mean the poorer section, which cannot contribute but whose loyalty is as genuine as that of the richer classes, are desirous to know how funds contributed by their wealthier countrymen are to be spent in honouring the Prince. This curiosity is natural as the event has roused and will in these Provinces rouse the greatest enthusiasm in all classes of people, and everybody will be interested in knowing what form the memorial in the Prince's honour will take. Such being the state of the public mind, the news will be heard with much delight that a number of leading Taluqdárs met in the Government House here on Friday last and expressed a desire to commemorate the visit by founding a medical college. The decision to which the gentlemen assembled on Friday last have arrived is wise and we can say will meet with general approval throughout these provinces. We do not think there is a single form of memorial which is likely to be received with greater enthusiasm than the one which has been proposed, and it will be everybody's desire to see that the proposal is carried out. Much need hardly be said to prove the urgent necessity of a fully equipped medical college. Long before the question of finding out openings for the products of our University had become keen, the Maharaja of Vizianagram had come forward with Rs. 2,00,000 for founding a Medical College. Sir William Muir had very strongly recommended that the offer should be accepted, but the Government of India then could not accept it for financial reasons. But the people constantly kept on asking for a medical college these thirty years. In the Legislative Council and in the columns of newspapers the people had been expressing the desire that the United Provinces should have their own medical college. Nobody could have expressed the need more forcibly than the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals who in his remarks in the last report spoke of the inadequacy of the arrangements for medical education of the people. The need of a medical college is one which has been admitted by all classes of people and no more suitable opportunity can there be to found one than the present in connection with the forthcoming visit of the Prince of Wales. With what better memorial can we connect his name than that of a medical college in our midst? We know the project will be after His Royal Highness' inmost wish; we know what great interest he takes in all philanthropic movements, in all movements intended for the relief of suffering humanity. This is one of the traits which His Royal Highness has inherited from his Imperial father. We know the interest shown by the King-Emperor in the construction of a hospital to treat patients suffering from tropical diseases; we know full well how generously he turned the gift of some forty lakhs, placed at his disposal by a wealthy trader, for the construction of a hospital for the treatment of consumptive patients. These are a noble record from which the people of the United Provinces may be quite sure that if after all we are so fortunate as to have a memorial in the form of a medical college it will appeal strongly to his Imperial Majesty's mind, no less than to that of our guest.

We know we have no millionaires to give away the entire amount needed by one stroke of the pen. Perhaps it will not be possible to raise sufficient funds as to properly endow the proposed college. It may be impossible to get together twenty lakhs of rupees. But in this matter we can look upon Sir James LaTouche's Government for sympathy to the fullest degree. His Government has done so much for the education of the people that we are sure that for this crowning act of his educational policy he will anyhow find means which would be required to maintain an efficient staff. He is believed to be in full sympathy with the movement. If the college be located in Lucknow and get the Balrampur and the Dufferin Hospital attached to it, the cost will be less. In that case we are told the buildings and apparatus will not cost more than six lakhs and this sum is surely not very large for these provinces to collect without difficulty. The Maharaja of Balrampur has already set the ball rolling by his munificent gift. We may expect a substantial contribution from him to raise the Balrampur Hospital to the highest status and to raise its capacity for receiving more in-door patients; for the rest we can look upon rich Zamindarí houses of Oudh and the province of Agra. Five or six lakhs to build a few boarding houses and erect the necessary college buildings are nothing for these provinces possessing so many territorial magnates. Only a little heart has to be put in it. The middle classes are poor, but Government servants in the subordinate service and the members of the Bar who can afford to contribute will give their mite. We are sanguine if the official and non-official classes join together the required amount will be forthcoming before 26th December next. We trust a representative committee will soon be formed and the matter taken up in right earnest.

Whims and caprices of district officers.

11. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 10th July, says that it would appear that the District Magistrate of Allahabad has lately prohibited traders from taking their seats by the road side in the streets and exposing their merchandize for sale. The editor does not wish to say anything against the propriety or impropriety of the prohibition. But it will be observed that the local officials and the Municipal authorities are interfering with old practices and depriving people of privileges which they have long enjoyed, though such privileges do not interfere with public convenience. Section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code empowers district magistrates to order the removal of public nuisances and similar powers are given to municipalities by the Municipalities Act. But public nuisances are not defined in the Acts and thus the interpretation of the term public nuisances is left to the discretion of the officials themselves. Some time ago a District and Sessions Judge reported some men who lived in his neighbourhood and who sang in their houses at night at a festival and the District Magistrate at once fined them for being a public nuisance. On appeal the High Court remitted the fines, not accepting the District Magistrate's interpretation of the term public nuisance. The native members of the Legislative Councils should see that such terms are properly defined in the Acts with a view to preventing magistrates from interpreting such terms in their own whimsical ways. The law has given great discretionary powers to district magistrates. When there is a change of the district magistrate all classes of people in the district on the arrival of the new magistrate make a point of winning his good will by appealing to his weak points. All district officers, police, civil and criminal, have their own whims and caprices and the law cannot force them to pursue a uniform policy.

ADVOCATE,
23rd July, 1905.

Outrages on females in railway carriages.

12. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd July, says:—Three cases of outrage on females have been tried in less than as many months; the victims, all females, were a European in one case and Indians in the rest. The trial in the first resulted in the conviction and punishment of the accused, himself a European, to the utmost limits of the law; in the other the defendants, one European and the other Eurasian, got off without any stain on their character. The moral is easy enough to draw. But we do not stop contented here. The skin of the outraged lady in the Aligarh case might or might not have helped her, but the black page in the life-history of ex-fireman Davies did justly prejudice the Judge against him. Not only this. A European lady used to mixing freely in society, is likely to keep cool under provocation, even of an embarrassing nature; to identify easily people of her own race and to stand the fire of cross-examination manfully—better to say, with the true fortitude of a woman. Her Indian sisters, always living, behind the parda, feel out of element even in the midst of their own relations of the sterner sex. And when it is a case of owning the shame of outrage on modesty, identifying a European or Eurasian accused and submitting to searching enquiries in cross-examination, the collapse is inevitable. To the mild Indian woman, white faces are a lot of the same cut and hue, not easily distinguishable from one another.

In the Saran case the identification was pretty complete. Yet the District Magistrate disbelieved the case for the prosecution, and not only refused to commit the accused to the Sessions for trial, but himself cancelled the charge and discharged him. A Muhammadan woman was a passenger in a third class compartment of a night train reserved for women, going to her husband. In the carriage there were three other elderly Hindu women. While the train was in motion, a European checked the former's ticket and went away. Presently he returned and in the presence of the other three forcibly outraged the modesty of Mussamat Habiban. At the next station they cried out, but none heeded their cries; at the second the Assistant Station Master learnt it and wired to the next station; at Bhatni, the third, a Railway Police Sub-Inspector, heard the whole affair. He took it up, took the complainant and her witnesses to all the carriages as well as the engine where Driver G. H. Isaac was identified by all of them. Medical examination corroborated the evidence about rape having been committed. On the most flimsy ground Isaac was discharged, but not before the Magistrate had practically admitted that the offence had really been committed and had while declaring Isaac innocent tried to fasten it upon Guard Davidson, who was a passenger by the night train from Sonepur to Gorakhpur but whom nobody saw at the intermediate station of Bhatni, the place of first formal complaint and identification. This man has since that night been missing and even a warrant has not yet been able to get him out of his hiding place.

The Kharagpur case is more like a repetition of the notorious Assansol outrage case that created a regular panic in the Indian travelling public. A widow under the care of her godson was travelling from Howrah to Jalesore by the Madras Mail. They were unable to buy tickets at the starting station owing to rush of passengers. The train arrived after midnight at Kharagpur where a ticket collector on duty, Carroll by name, made them leave the train which afterwards left without them. Carroll then brought his cap low, took hold of the widow, dragged her past all the offices, waiting and refreshment rooms, the police station, across the over-bridge—so far followed by Upendra, her companion, who on being threatened, stayed there—then below the bridge and forcibly outraged her. The culprit leaving her, she complained of pain and violence, washed herself in a stream and joined Upendra. Both then went and complained to the head Ticket Collector who made an entry in his book and referred them to the Assistant Station Master, and this officer in turn to the head of the station staff. In cross-examination the case for the prosecution practically broke down and the accused was discharged.

The end of these cases bodes certain evil to those who have to make use of the female compartments in railway trains. The remissness of duty on the part of the police in taking up cases of assault and outrage promptly, the aversion of the station staff to render every help in the prosecution of the guilty, the ignorance of the trying judicial officers of the customs and habits, the fears and prejudices, of Indian society when the womankind is concerned, are some of the factors that make bringing the offenders to book a pretty difficult task. We are glad the Saran case has not been without some effect on the people. Immediately on the discharge of Isaac Mr. R. Ghosh, the local barrister, took steps to move the people. He called a public meeting at his place. In the notice issued by him we read:—

"The females of this country, high or low, except those who can afford to travel in 1st and 2nd class carriages, and who are therefore accompanied by their relatives, always travel in the female carriages. This occurrence affects the whole community, Hindus and Muhammadans, and points strongly to the necessity of some measures being adopted by Government and the railway company for the protection of these female passengers. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal is expected by the 29th of this month, and I suggest that a memorial be presented to His Honour by the people of this district, as the occurrence took place in this district, for the Government to adopt such safeguards as His Honour thinks proper to prevent in future such dastardly outrage. I therefore propose that a public meeting be called to take some step to present such a memorial."

We do not know what proposals have been made by the Saran meeting which must have been attended by a very large number of people. That in the majority of cases Eurasians and Europeans, and in all cases railway people are the aggressors makes the carrying out of even the best suggestion a practical impossibility. European and Eurasian Guards and Drivers and Ticket Collectors have been practically weighed in the balance and found wanting. That in some Railway Administrations this view holds good is plain from the rising number of Indian ticket collectors in important stations, particularly where long waits have to be made and transhipments are necessary and numerous. The easiest course that will cost nothing is to place the carriage for Indian ladies between two carriages, one marked intermediate and the other third. In each of these two, the compartment nearest the female carriage should be reserved for those who have their womankind in the female carriage. This would be mounting double guard upon all possible intruders. Travelling ticket-checkers should be peremptorily ordered not to walk on the foot-boards of the female carriage unless in case of some danger or accident.

Another course is to make it somebody's duty to look after the safety of the passengers in the female carriage. When Drivers and Guards, generally Eurasian or European, are out of question, the party next best to be entrusted with the duty is, in mail trains at least, the sorters in the mail van. They cannot take up this duty not being servants of the Railway in the Traffic Department, but they may be asked to keep an eye upon the female carriage which should then be attached to the mail van. With a little extra cost and transfer of powers from one person to another, a very good arrangement may be made. With every train practically there are two guards, one known as the Guard and the other as the Brakesman or Second Guard. The latter is paid low, too low for an Indian of some education what to say of a European, to take it up. The pay of this post may be raised and Indians with some educational qualifications and of robust physique be taken in and entrusted with the duty to look after the female carriage who should be in sole charge of this work. It is useless to think of asking watermen and icemen, poor illiterate people, to keep an eye upon intruders into female compartments. The best course, if possible, is to put a lady guard in every train in the female carriage well acquainted with railway rules and regulations. There should be some means to draw the attention of the Guard as they do in E. B. S. R. trains and the lady-guard made thoroughly acquainted with the working of it. The different compartments in the female carriage should also be turned practically into a bogey carriage so that all the passengers may help one another. These are some of the suggestions that may easily be carried out to save the honour of Indian womankind while travelling in trains.

HINDOSTHAN,
24th July, 1905.

Misconduct of British soldiers towards natives in first and second class railway carriages, and the plunder of fruit and sweetmeat exposed for sale at the Partabgarh railway station by British soldiers on the 20th July.

13. The English Hindosthán (Kalákánkar), of the 24th July, publishes the following paragraph contributed by a correspondent at Allahabad :—The relation between Indian and European, first and second class travellers is not a very happy one, and if there are soldiers, it is often unsafe for an Indian, if not dressed European fashion, to enter the carriages which are so occupied. We have heard many instances on good authority that military officers and Indian gentlemen travelling together have come to loggerheads, and the matter being referred to the higher military authorities, the officials were found aggressive. This has unjustly compelled some of the first and second class Indian travellers to travel in reserved compartments and carriages, and others who cannot afford it, to have recourse to the third class. This latter causes a loss to the railway companies, but the companies seemingly pay no attention to this complaint. We heard the other day of a very lawless action from one of our correspondents at the Partabgarh Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway station that a special train of English soldiers arrived at the station in the afternoon of the 20th instant, and many of the soldiers alighted and began to plunder the fruit and sweetmeat vendors, in such a manner that the vendors thought well to take to their heels. These irregularities surely interfere very much with the well-being of the railways and require the interference of the Railway Board.

The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sarda Churn Mitter's suggestion for a uniform vernacular script for the whole of India.

14. Al Bashir (Etáwah), of the 25th July, says that if Lord Curzon's scheme for the partition of Bengal was intended to weaken the national power of the Bengalis and thus had a political object in view, why should not the suggestion of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sarda Churn Mitter, a Judge of the Calcutta High Court, for a uniform vernacular script for the whole of India be considered to smack of politics? If His Excellency aimed at splitting up the Bengalis, the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sarda Churn Mitter, seeks to unite the Hindus of all India, which is a serious political question, and no Government servant can take part in political agitation. Under these circumstances why should not the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sarda Churn Mitter be required to explain why he is creating political agitation.

AL BASHIR,
1st August, 1905.

A suggestion to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales for visiting the Aligarh College.

1. The Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 1st August, says that as all the (Muhammadan) Urdu newspapers were unanimously of opinion that the authorities of the Muhammadan College at Aligarh should invite the Prince of Wales to visit that college during his coming Indian tour, a request to that effect was made to the Government of India, but that it is much to be regretted that the request has been refused on the ground that it was received after His Highness' programme of tour had been settled. Granting that the invitation was somewhat late, the editor could see no difficulty if His Royal Highness' programme were slightly altered to enable him to visit the Aligarh College, and thereby earn the gratitude, and increase the loyalty of the sixty millions of the Indian Muhammadan subjects of His Majesty the King-Emperor. By paying a visit to a native chief in his state, His Royal Highness will simply oblige that chief; but by visiting the Aligarh College, he would make himself popular with the whole of the Muhammadan community in India. In European countries the visit paid by a sovereign or his heir-apparent to an institution is not considered to be an event of such political importance, as it is in Asia. The editor does not desire the Prince of Wales to visit the college, so that it may be pecuniarily benefited thereby, but because a royal visit is long remembered with feelings of loyalty and affection by the people of Asia, even their womenfolk recalling, at times, the event with pride and exultation. Surely Lord Curzon, who is better acquainted with the feelings and sentiments of Asiatics, would do well to move the Home Government to so arrange matters that the Prince of Wales might be able to visit the Aligarh College. If it was considered expedient to spend a vast amount of money on the late Delhi Darbár to make a good political impression on the minds of the frontier jirgas and foreign Consuls, it is equally desirable that the programme of the Prince of Wales' tour should be so modified as will enable him to spare a few hours to win the hearts of the six crores of Indian Musalmans by visiting their college at Aligarh.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
30th July, 1905.

The Government Resolution on the report of the administration of the Police Department in the United Provinces during 1904.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th July, says :—The Government Resolution on the report of the administration of the Police Department in the United Provinces in the year 1904 was published in the Gazette of the 22nd instant and forms an interesting reading as usual. It cannot be said that the discriminating public will agree with all the views embodied in the Resolution, but there is nothing to be surprised at in this. When have the Government and the leaders of educated Indian thought seen eye to eye on important public questions ? At any rate the occasions have been rare. Nor is the reason far to seek. The educated Indian is ostracised from all such posts in the administration as will enable him to come in direct contact with the head of the Government and to represent to him his countrymen's point of view and general opinion. The Secretaries to Government are without exception all Europeans, and so are their Under-Secretaries. The members of the Board of Revenue, all the Commissioners of Divisions, nearly all the District Officers, and the heads of all departments are Europeans. It is strange that it should have never suggested itself to any Viceroy, Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Chief Commissioner that in addition to his Private Secretary it might be useful to have an educated Indian gentleman of character, ability and experience as an additional or assistant Private Secretary. The administration is reduced almost to a rule-of-three and the machine goes on in its ordered routine manner. The feelings and the grievances of the people affected by the working of the machinery may be what they are; the administrators are not in touch with them and they conduct their official duties on the assumption that everyone but the wearer knows where the shoe pinches. There is no department of Government that touches the bulk of the people at more points in their daily lives than the Police. Yet from the higher branches of this service Indians are rigidly excluded. One should have thought that the Inspector-General of Police could not be at ease so long as he has no Indian by his side who could advise him on how the working of the department is affecting the people and what measures should be adopted every now and then when evils come to the surface to rectify them and to make the Police what it must have been intended to be—the servant and protector of the people and not the tormentor of those who pay for its maintenance. No; this is never thought of, and Indians are, as a rule, confined to the lowest grades of the service. Even there it is the ill-educated and uneducated section of our countrymen that mostly find employment. This is a double evil. The inefficiency and corruption that are rampant among these are used as a weapon against our countrymen when they complain of police imperfections, their eligibility to fill more responsible offices is called in question, and the people themselves are perpetually victimised by these underlings. Again, the combination of magisterial and police functions in the district executive is a powerful engine of oppression in the hands of the Police, and adds to popular misery and discontent. These facts are not recognised by those in authority who have it in their hands to make life a blessing or a curse to the ignorant and poor millions of India, and they either play the rôle of apologists of the police, or when they attempt reforms go about their business in a manner which can often provoke only laughter and amusement in those not concerned and add to the hardships of those immediately affected. These in our judgment are the broad facts of the situation. And so long as (1) the combination of magisterial and police duties remains, (2) educated Indians are ostracised from the superior branches of the service, and (3) the recruitment of the lower and lowest grades of the department will take place according to the present methods, it is impossible to believe that we shall have a satisfactory police and to be satisfied with glowing official panegyrics of what is, whether they proceed from Lieutenant-Governors or Members of Council.

Approaching the subject as we do from such a standpoint we cannot of course pretend to be satisfied that the Lieutenant-Governor's eulogium of the Police force of these Provinces is thoroughly deserved. At all events we do not make much doubt that it is exaggerated a good deal. And we must positively decline to follow him when he takes exception to punishment of erring subordinates unless for grave and exceptional reasons. Remarking that the punishment roll though somewhat lighter than in the previous year is still heavy, Sir James LaTouche proceeds to observe that 'cases which come before the Local Government indicate that some officers are unduly prone to suspect their subordinates and to look on suspicion as equivalent to proof justifying condemnation and punishment.' The Lieutenant-Governor's solicitude for the erring subordinates of the department is so tender that he follows up the above by the suggestion that 'incidents which are explicable on the ground of honest error or imperfect understanding are, without any regard to apparent absence of motive, attributed to sinister designs.' If His Honour was a little less one-sided in his sympathies he would have had, we venture to think, not much difficulty in knowing that it is very rarely that all the complaints that may be made against the police underlings by the victims of their high-handedness are allowed to reach the ears of a superior authority, and that it is by no means easy to produce evidence and proof of a policeman's guilt which would satisfy a legal tribunal. If all complaints where the guilt of a policeman is established only as a moral certainty are to be thrown out as either not proved or as due to nothing more serious than 'honest error or imperfect understanding,' then the policeman's little finger will be more powerful for oppression than even at present. And to make it the established policy of Government that tenderness and generosity and not strict even-handed justice should be dealt out to an erring policeman, we are afraid the outlook for the people is very gloomy indeed, spite of all police 'reforms' to the contrary. The Resolution of Sir James LaTouche's Government does not stop here either. 'A fruitful cause of injustice' we are asked to believe, 'is the standing rule that dismissal or reduction is the only possible punishment for the falsification of diaries.' We should have thought that this rule was a very proper one, considering the reputation for character the police enjoy. It was only last year that a learned Civilian Judge of the Madras High Court declined in a police case to place any credence in police diaries on account of their habitual unveracity, and we do not know that the state of affairs is any the better in these happy Provinces. Such a rule as the above, we are told, 'may have been necessary in the past.' Is it suggested that there has of late years been a material change for the better? Let Sir Andrew Fraser and his colleagues of the Police Commission answer. While the Lieutenant-Governor says, very rightly, that 'at any time deliberate and dishonest falsification of diaries must be severely punished,' it was wrong that on the strength of this rule 'mistaken entries in, or trivial corrections of diaries have been punished with dismissal.' Is the Lieutenant-Governor satisfied that the fact as stated by him is true, that corrections in police diaries are at least as often 'trivial' things as their 'deliberate and dishonest falsification?' But why should there have been any 'mistaken entries' or 'trivial corrections' at all when the day's work is reported the same day? Unless there be 'cooking' of the diaries, we cannot divine why these so-called mistakes should arise at all. We cannot but think that Sir James LaTouche has taken an unwarrantedly charitable view of this, and in abrogating the aforesaid wholesome and necessary rule as he has done, His Honour has incurred a grave responsibility. We at any rate shall not be surprised if as the result of the repeated admonitions of Government against the punishment of erring subordinates and the abrogation of the rule as regards tampering with diaries, discipline in the lower ranks of the police force will grow more lax and we shall hear more of falsified diaries. His Honour's well-known kindliness of disposition has, we are afraid, led him to choose very wrong objects indeed for its display. As in previous reports again this year the Government deprecate general complaints of their subordinates on the part of some officers. Are these general complaints well-founded or not? Could complaints and criticisms invariably be directed or confined to specific points? Are general inferences as regards the calibre of the police force not pertinent and useful? Is it the case that the police are such an immaculate body of men that it is impossible to make well sustained general complaints against them? None we should fancy will easily answer any of these questions in favour of the police? Why then such tender solicitude for the feelings of habitual wrong-doers?

INDIAN PEOPLE,
27th July, 1905.

Recommendations of the Industrial Schools Committee.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 27th July, says:—Let us now cast a glance at some of the recommendations themselves with a view to see whether they were after all so very ambitious and costly as to be dismissed as beyond the pale of practical politics? The first recommendation was 'that an officer be appointed to be Director of Industries and Industrial Instruction under the Government of India.' The second recommendation was 'that a Survey of Indian Industries be made.' The third was 'that six Institutes of Industrial Experiment and Instruction be opened under the direction of the Director of Industries, at an approximate capital and annual cost of Rs. 3,30,000 and Rs. 1,87,000 respectively.' The tenth recommendation was 'that private individuals be encouraged to start New Industries, which have been proved in the Institutes of Industrial Experiment to be financially suitable to local circumstances, by the guarantee, for a limited period, of interest on the capital they invest in the industry.' The eleventh recommendation was 'that the Manager of such Institutes should receive a monetary reward whenever a new manufacture is initiated through his exertions.' There are other modest but not less valuable recommendations. But all have been impartially ignored. There has been any amount of mischievous and harmful activity during the present Viceroyalty of 'Missions, Commissions, and Omissions,' but no progressive domestic reform of a beneficial character has been attempted.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 27th July, 1905.

Delay of the Government of India in giving effect to the recommendations of the Industrial Schools Committee.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 27th July, says:—We are curious to know why the recommendations of the Industrial Schools Committee have not yet been carried out by the Government of India. The Committee was appointed by Lord Curzon of his own free accord, and its composition was a guarantee that no unduly liberal or impracticable recommendations were made. It was innocent of a single Indian member, three of its four members being officials and one a missionary gentleman of these provinces. The report was signed on the 27th February 1902; it was printed in 1903; it was published along with a critical Government Resolution early in 1904. Dilatory enough these methods one should have thought, but in July 1905 the recommendations have to be carried out yet! As we have said they are very modest in their character and yet we see no sign of their being carried out. Is the cause of this surprising inaction to be sought in want of time for Lord Curzon to attend to the matter, or in want of funds in these unhappy days of yawning deficits? Or, may it be, as a Calcultta contemporary suggested the other day in connection with the State technical scholarships, that these things were thought of in a weak moment?

INDIAN PEOPLE, 3rd August, 1905.

Proposal for the establishment of a medical college in the United Provinces.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd August, says:—Of course we have, we can have, nothing but sympathy with the proposal to establish a medical college in these Provinces in commemoration of the visit of the Prince of Wales. A medical college is a long felt need and everybody must rejoice at the prospect of its being supplied at last. At the same time it is permissible to doubt the propriety and reasonableness of asking the Taluqdars and other wealthy men of the province to contribute the cost of the institution. We hold it to be the duty of the Government to establish a medical college. There are State maintained medical colleges at Calcutta, Bombay, Madras and Lahore, and the Universities Commission recommended the foundation of one in this province. Such an institution here will serve not only the United Provinces, but the Central Provinces, Central India and parts of Rájputána as well. Its need was admitted in emphatic language by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor himself in a recent excellent Government Resolution which we noticed in these columns with much genuine satisfaction.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 3rd August, 1905.

Protest against the raising of subscriptions from Taluqdars and others for the establishment of a medical college.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd August, says:—Such being the circumstances, what is the justice of passing on to the shoulders of the Taluqdars and others the burden which ought to be borne by the Government? If private philanthropy is to be exhausted in meeting the calls made on it by the Government, directly or indirectly, will not the springs of charity be dried up where the many other objects of public utility which do not legitimately fall within the sphere of the State but which are not on that account the less important, are concerned? Here for instance are the no light demands made by the new Act on the private colleges. Unless they are to court disaffiliation, many improvements will have to be effected in them. But all these cost money, and the money has to be found by the same noblemen and others who cannot easily say nay to the demands made on their purses by officialdom. We are unable to agree in the equity of the arrangement by which the public will pay for the projected medical college, and hope the matter will yet be reconsidered.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
3rd August, 1905.

The location of the proposed medical college in Allahabad.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd August, says:—The location of the medical college is another point on which we have a word to say. An inspired statement appears in the Pioneer that it is believed in well-informed circles that Lucknow is the centre chosen for it. We earnestly trust no such decision has been arrived at as yet. The college should be located either at Agra or Allahabad: at Agra because there is already a medical school there which may be expanded into a college; at Allahabad because it is the principal educational centre of these provinces with its finely equipped physical and chemical laboratories attached to the Muir Central College. Lucknow possesses no such advantages. Agra seems to be out of question, however, as the Lieutenant-Governor gave his opinion against the development of the medical school there into a college. His Honour said in his last Budget speech that the college must be established independently of the Agra School. If so, we suggest that Allahabad is the place for the institution, and we hope that representations will be made to the authorities in support of the location of the college here.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
3rd August, 1905.

Promotion of Sanskrit learning.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd August, says:—We trust some early action will be the result of the deputation that waited on His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor the other day at Benares in respect of the promotion of Sanskrit learning. His Highness the Maharajah of Benares and the Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal, the two premier citizens of Benares, have made the princely donations of Rs. 30,000 and 25,000 respectively towards the enlargement of the present Sanskrit College, and doubtless, other generous patrons of Sanskrit learning will not be slow to follow with their own offers. Of course we fully sympathise with the object and join in the thanks offered to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor for the earnest interest he is evincing in the matter. At the same time we cannot but demur to the suggestion that was made by the deputation and readily accepted by the Lieutenant-Governor that a European Professor's services should be obtained. The proper thing would have been a request for the appointment of a competent Professor. If an eligible Indian Professor could not be had, an European Professor could be sent for. Not otherwise should the post go to an European.

Public feeling in Bengal against the partition scheme.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th July, says:—It is but a truism to say that the people in the affected districts had been stunned by the shock given by the decision of Government. With the regaining of their senses they have begun to stir up another agitation to place their protest on record, if not to influence the adamantine heart of Government. Protest meetings are being held in every district where the people flock in thousands and are no less enthusiastic than what they were when Lord Curzon had entered the list and challenged them to a wordy fight. Unlike the aristocracy in other provinces that of Bengal has also been moved by the (Partition) Resolution. While the people meet and pass resolutions, the landed gentry take to a more modest but no less effective and at the same time more personal interest in the agitation. The heads of big Zamindaris in Natore, Dinajpur, Kakina, Dighapatia, Dimla and Bogra have already, some jointly and many severally, wired their regret at, and protest against the scheme. The people of Rajshahi Division having been condemned unheard, the landholders, and the professionals, the traders and the tillers feel the blow more keenly. Hence they are the first to be in the field. Those of other districts are to follow suit.

ADVOCATE,
30th July, 1905.

A protest meeting at Calcutta against the Bengal partition scheme.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th July, says:—Monday week a monster meeting will be held in Calcutta to record a formal provincial protest against the scheme of partition sanctioned for Bengal. There is no doubt that every district to be affected or not affected will be represented, and the proposed demonstration will be as strong in argument as moderate in language and as respectful in the attitude of the protesters. In taking the lead to protest against the aspersions thrown on Indian character by Lord Curzon's last Convocation speech, Bengal has vindicated her power to act nobly and with statesmanlike soberness under provocation. The traditions so well established may be hoped to be maintained. The sorry plight in which Lord Curzon is now situated should take away the personal element from the controversy and make the pronouncement of Bengal's regret and resentment even more dignified than what it was at the protest meeting held under the chairmanship of Dr. Rashbehari Ghosh.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
30th July, 1905.

A monster demonstration to be held at the Calcutta Town Hall on the 7th August against the partition of Bengal.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th July, says:—The agitation against the partition of Bengal is gaining in volume and force. A monster demonstration representative of the entire province of Bengal has been arranged to be held in the Calcutta Town Hall on the 7th August, and in anticipation of that grand function nearly every district in the Divisions affected is recording its objections once more in resolutions passed at public meetings. Meanwhile petitions signed by tens of thousands of people and telegrams are being sent in quick succession to the Secretary of State. 'If our rulers imagine', the Bengalee adds, 'that the country will without demur accept their scheme of partition, they will soon be disillusioned.'

INDIAN PEOPLE,
30th July, 1905.

Calamities that have lately befallen India.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th July says:—The trite saying that misfortunes come not singly but in battalions, has never been more true than of India at the present moment. It would almost seem as if God and man had conspired to plunge this doomed land in ever increasing misery. The political evils which have afflicted us since the installation of the Tory Government ten years ago, and especially since the advent of Lord Curzon, are well-known enough, and the people have been waging an unequal combat with the forces of darkness and reaction. During this same period, which we might call the dark decade, natural calamities in breathless succession have been the lot of our unhappy countrymen. Two severe and prolonged famines over a vast stretch of territory, a plague epidemic which has now lasted for very nearly a decade and which threatens to be even worse in the future than in the past, two earthquakes of unprecedented magnitude, floods in some part or other of the country almost every year inflicting serious damage on life and property—these are only a portion of the evils which our people have had calmly and silently to endure. Following quickly on the earthquake which has desolated and ruined the Kangra valley came the storm in Natal from which the poor Indian settlers have been the principal sufferers. Over five hundred of our countrymen there perished absolutely and the surviving find themselves cast adrift on the charity of the world, hopeless and helpless, all their earthly belongings gone.

ARYA MITRA,
1st August, 1905.

India threatened by a famine.

13. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st August, regrets to say that, in spite of the noble efforts made by Government to improve the condition of the people, it continues to get worse and worse. Before the cries ot the sufferers from the earthquake in the Kangra valley have died out a famine looks the people in the face. The heavy wheat exports from Karachi are calculated to intensify the scarcity of grain. If better counsels prevailed with the Government of India and the Government checked the wheat exports, a dire famine might be averted, and the Government spared the humiliation of appealing to foreign countries for aid.

The higher postal authorities can have no difficulty in getting the withdrawal forms printed in Hindi and Urdu also, as they have already got their money order forms, and the writer hopes they will soon take steps to do so.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
10th August, 1905.

Despatch of a Congress deputation to England.

1. THE Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th August, says:—The Bombay Congress leaders' meeting under the presidency of the Hon'ble Sir Pherozeshah Mehta have resolved to depute the Hon'ble Mr. G. K. Gokhale and Mr. Mahomed Ali Jina to England in October next if a General Election will be held in that month, and the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale alone if no General Election will take place then, as Sir William Wedderburn urgently wants Mr. Gokhale's help. In the latter event, the deputation will be expected to sail in February 1906 and Mr. Gokhale will go again. Thus the Bombay Presidency will not only meet the cost of two delegates when the Deputation will go, but find the funds for Mr. Gokhale going twice over. Unless we are mistaken as to their plan of campaign, there is a general expectation that the Bengali leaders will decide on deputing Babu Surendranath Banerjee at an early date to agitate on the partition question whenever the Congress deputation may leave. If this anticipation will turn out true, Babu Surendranath Banerjee and the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale should sail for England in the autumn. This is as it should be.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
10th August, 1905.

Question of the establishment of a Medical College in the United Provinces.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th August, says:—According to the Pioneer the proposal to commemorate the Royal visit to these Provinces by the establishment of a medical college originally emanated from the Taluqdárs of Oudh. We take leave to doubt whether really it was so, though formally and publicly it might have been the fact. But if the Pioneer stated the accurate fact, we think the local Government might have told them that it should supply this urgent provincial need out of State funds as was done by the other Provincial Governments and as recommended by the Universities Commission, and that the Taluqadárs and the general public should think of another means of commemorating the historic event. We are not aware of the general outburst of enthusiasm that the proposal has evoked, which the Pioneer has detected. Of course the Taluqdárs and other wealthy folk will contribute their thousands and tens of thousands to the project. What project that is countenanced by the officials ever has to suffer for want of funds.

And the donors will also put the best face they can over the affair making a virtue of necessity. But we are convinced—and we know it for a fact that we represent independent public opinion in what we state—that a wrong is done to this poor and backward province with its many unsatisfied needs when private philanthropy is drawn upon for objects which it is the obvious duty of the State to supply as in the case of the other provinces.

CITIZEN,
7th August, 1905.

Question of the establishment of a Medical College in the United Provinces.

3. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 7th August, says:—The proposal of starting a medical college under the auspices of the University of Allahabad has for a long time been on the tapis. No scheme as to its constitution has, however, been put forward. The question of ways and means has to be faced, and as the financial condition of the University did not permit the drawing up of a definite scheme, the public has had to accept, with thankfulness, the vague promises which from time to time dropped from the cloud land of official red-tapeism. From signs and symbols it is, however, manifest that the scheme is about to emerge from that mysterious region of uncertainties with something like a shape and form. The medical college would have been a reality long ere this, if His Honour the Chancellor had the necessary capital at his command. The grant made by the Imperial Government had to be spent upon items of more pressing necessity, and he could not solve the monetary problem, without which the scheme of a medical college could never succeed. There is a widespread rumour that His Highness the Maharaja of Benares has promised a large contribution and that some of the Taluqdars of Oudh have held out hopes of being able to follow his generous example. These contributions, however, will hardly be quite ample and sufficient for the foundation of the medical college, and funds will have to be provided chiefly by the Government. A faculty of medicine in the University of Allahabad is by no means such a grand and imposing spectacle as the Delhi Darbar, but the usefulness of such an institution could not be questioned even by Lord Curzon with his lofty notions of Imperialism. We sincerely trust His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor will be able to secure a substantial sum from the Government of India for the realization of this object.

CITIZEN,
7th August, 1905.

Question of the location of the proposed Medical College.

4. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 7th August, says:—It is rumoured that a suggestion has been made by an influential officer of the local Government that the Medical College should be founded not at Allahabad which is the seat and centre of the University, but at Lucknow. We are not prepared to believe it. What could be the raison d'être for this innovation? We have been told again and again that whatever changes might happen about the seat of Government, of the High Court, or the Accountant-General's office, Allahabad is safe as regards the University. If there be any exceptional advantage by opening the Medical College at Lucknow, an advantage which Allahabad cannot command by reason of its climate, its geographical situation or the like, let the institution be founded at Lucknow by all means. But if it be merely to offer tribute to the vanity of the Oudh Taluqdars or to burn incense at the shrine of a particular official, we would strongly protest against the introduction of the lancet into a very important limb of the Allahabad University. It is in the fitness of things that the seat of the University should be the seat of the Medical College. The various branches of learning act and react upon one another. We cannot forget that the motto of the University is Quot rami tot arbores. At Allahabad, we have the singular advantage of possessing a very grand laboratory. Let us hope the rumour is baseless and will before long be officially contradicted.

HINDI PRADIP,
August, 1905.

Mr. Brodrick and Lord Curzon.

5. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for August, says that Mr. Brodrick is the real arbiter of the destinies of India at present, Lord Curzon being only one of his lieutenants. Lord Curzon's fame lately assumed undue proportions and bade fair to throw everyone into the shade. But Mr. Brodrick rose to the occasion and checked the spread of Lord Curzon's reputation. As for instance, in the controversy between the Viceroy and Lord Kitchener, Mr. Brodrick sided with the latter. Again, the Indian Government held that natives were not appointed to posts of trust and responsibility, inasmuch as they were not found fit to hold such posts. With reference to the Opium Department the Secretary of State, considering such excuses to be useless, made a clear declaration that natives would not be given more than 10 per cent. of the appointments in that Department and thus in a way set fire to the Queen's proclamation of 1858 which declared that no subject of Her Majesty was disqualified by his creed or colour to hold any post under Government.

ADVOCATE,
6th August, 1905.

The Times on the Bengal Partition Resolution.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th August, in an article headed "the Partition Resolution," says:—The apology for Lord Curzon's this sad achievement published in the Times has been a tame affair. The "sinister motive" suggested by too curt a telegram and ascribed by the Indian press has not of course been disclosed anywhere in the papers published; it cannot be. All the same, the explanation attempted has not only fallen short of the mark, but clearly helped the public in forming the opinion that something has been concealed and concealed in a very clumsy fashion. The fear of this motive placed the writer of the Times article at a disadvantage, and he could not indulge in the praise of his late chief and, perhaps, present ideal, with the usual abandon that he does when some thing about Lord Curzon has to be dilated upon. The weakness of the cause is writ large on the Resolution itself. Even the Pioneer's attempt at conjuring up a grand scene to be presented by Dacca when she becomes the mistress of a fully equipped and highly developed administration will not succeed in convincing the people to be affected of the justness, much less goodness, of the step taken. Dacca may in time become the "Athens in the East," but for the present she becomes the sword to cut the Bengali race in twain.

RAHBAR,
7th August, 1905.

Distinction made between European and native overseers.

7. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th August, says that the overseer class in the Thomason Engineering College at Rurki is open to Europeans, British soldiers and natives. As the candidates pass out of the college, British soldiers are appointed first class overseers on Rs. 100, other Europeans second class overseers on Rs. 80, and natives third class overseers on Rs. 60, irrespective of the marks they obtained at the examination. In a few years the soldier overseers are promoted to the post of supervisors and native overseers are placed under them, even though the natives might have acquitted themselves better than these soldier supervisors, simply because they are natives. Is this invidious distinction in accordance with fairness and justice which the Government expects the people to show? The people would have no want for admission into Government service if they knew how to help themselves independently of Government. They themselves are to blame, inasmuch as they look to Government for everything they want.

AL AZIZ,
7th August, 1905.

An ancient royal building at Agra.

8. Al Aziz (Agra), of the 7th August, says that Mariam-uz-Zamáni, the queen of King Akbar, laid out a large garden in Sinkandra near Agra. On her death she was buried in that garden and a large tomb was built over her grave. Before the mutiny when the High Court was at Agra, the Government Press was situated in the mausoleum and the Native Christian school and Orphanage occupied a portion of the garden. Since the transfer of the Government Press to Allahabad the whole of the mausoleum and the garden have passed into the hands of the Native Christians who have put up a number of partition walls inside the mausoleum and established their factories there. They have enclosed the mausoleum by a wall and thus prevented the public from entering and seeing the mausoleum. It is to be regretted that this building has escaped the notice even of Lord Curzon who is a great lover of ancient buildings and has established a separate department for the preservation of such buildings. The editor is glad to hear that on the occasion of his late visit to Sikandra on the 4th August Sir James Digges LaTouche paid a visit to Mariam-uz-Zamáni's mausoleum and asked the Collector to submit a report showing when and on what conditions the building was made over to Native Christians. If the above rumour is well founded, there is reason to hope that Government will recover the mausoleum and the garden from the Native Christians and throw them open to the public.

CITIZEN,
14th August, 1905.

Lord Curzon's administrative policy in India.

1. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 14th August, says:—Lord Curzon has been our Viceroy and ruler for almost seven years, and it is now clear as crystal that his Indian policy has been one of deliberate retrogression and repression. At the very outset he betrayed himself, but so simple and credulous the Indians are, and so persevering in hoping against hope that even to a recent date they have hoped and believed that Lord Curzon would yet prove their friend and grant to the Indian people some such boon as might cause the millennium to approach. Only a week before the Secretary of State's sanction to the Bengal partition scheme was wired to us by Reuter, a Bengal contemporary had written quite hopefully about Lord Curzon's future intentions towards India. This trait of sanguineness in us in political matters is far from being one that is to be commended or encouraged. If we analyse it correctly, we shall see that it has its birth in want of force of character in the ingrained habit of inveterate supineness and in a general attitude of indifference to whatever may happen to us as a people. It is a matter for congratulation that whatever hopes lingered up to a recent date in the minds of the more sanguine among our countrymen about the benefits to accrue from Lord Curzon's connection with India for the next seven months, have been swept away by Lord Curzon's Resolution to divide Bengal in twain, and to-day Lord Curzon stands confessed our worst enemy. In the midst of a career of repressive imperialism when he felt that the hopes he had excited in the Indian people at the commencement of his rule were being dissipated, Lord Curzon proclaimed in the clearest terms that he loved the Indian people devotedly and that he was here in India only to work in their best interests. That was a bait which caught, and His Excellency rejoiced at the Indian's simplicity and went on his way with a bold heart attempting to carry out in full his favourite scheme of Russianization. What has not Lord Curzon done for the political degeneration of India? In the first place, he has destroyed our Magna Charta by an erroneous interpretation of it. Even the most retrogressive of the other Viceroys had only sometimes acted against the spirit of the Proclamation of 1858, but never had any of them the audacity to publicly nullify it. This was a feat reserved for the best and truest friend of India. Lord Curzon may think that his public repudiation of the Proclamation is a courageous deed for which he will ever be honoured by his countrymen. But little does he know that by this most unpolitic act of his he has dealt a deadly blow at the foundation of Indian loyalty. The Indian people have always considered British rule in India a blessing chiefly on the ground that it introduced a system of education which the rulers were pledged to improve and modify till it was perfected according to the people's ideas. Lord Curzon has now so transformed the educational system that it is tantamount to the denial of the blessing to the largest number of the population. The British Government, as we have said, pledged itself to bring high education within the reach of the high and the low and it was a pledge which was taken as a proof of its sincere desire that the people of India should steadily advance in the path of progress. But Lord Curzon has, by the Universities Act, wantonly broken that pledge. Now the people have fully realized that the British Government is no longer animated by its originally professed desire to help Indians to advance in the path of progress, but that it wants to keep the people in ignorance so that the grip of Britain on the neck of this poor, oppressed country may never be slackened. Then there has been that measure for suppressing the publication of State secrets by the press which, according to Lord Curzon, is meant to help the administration of the country, but whose real object is to render coercion and repression possible without letting the world know of it. The fourth measure which is equally as illustrative of Lord Curzon's repressive policy as the others is the abolition of competition for admission into the public service. This innovation has been introduced to shut out Indians as far as possible from Government service. The principle of "a fair field and no favour" as regards admission into the public service which had hitherto been observed was inaugurated by the Proclamation of the late Queen Victoria and ever regarded as an element contributing materially to the strengthening of the foundations of British rule in India. The abolition of this just principle has dangerously weakened those foundations. And the last but not the least in the series of revolutionary measures introduced by the reigning Viceroy is the partition of Bengal. It is indeed the unkindest cut of all. It is meant to ruin all prospects of progress of the most progressive people in India. It will surely emasculate a race that has been striving to acquire the virility and attain to the status of a nation. It is an axe laid at the most flourishing branch of the tree of Indian life. But the Bengalese are not to be easily coerced. From the proceedings in connection with the agitation held on Monday last, we venture to say that they are resolved to avenge the grievous wrong done to them by means which will yet cause the authorities to re-consider and modify, if not recall, the orders that have been passed.

Need we after all that we have said above specify what the peril is of Curzonian policy? Well, the peril lies in the undermining of the people's faith in British rule, and in the weakening of their loyalty. It is during Lord Curzon's rule that for the first time in India a section of the people stayed away from a great meeting called to devise measures to accord reception to the future King-Emperor. And it is during the same Lord Curzon's rule that for the first time in this country, large and representative meetings have been held in the chief towns condemning Viceregal policy in toto, and praying the Sovereign and the British Parliament to recall such a dangerous Viceroy.

We cannot better conclude this article than by reproducing the following words of timely warning from one of the most loyal and calm-minded of exponents of Indian opinion, the Indian Mirror :—"A few more Viceroys like Lord Curzon, and the trodden worm will have turned and the worst come to the worst."

Let England take note of this warning.

8th August, 1905.

Complaint regarding the corruption of police officials in general.

2. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th August, says that there are certain Inspectors of Police who extort illegal gratification from their Sub-Inspectors. Some of these officials take so much a month per thana, some require the Sub-Inspectors to pay them regularly a fixed proportion of their incomes, while others again want their Sub-Inspectors to comply with their requisitions free. Such illegal exactions on the part of officers from their subordinates serve as passports to the latter for extorting what they themselves can, in turn, from the public. But if there happens to be an honest Sub-Inspector, an honourable exception to the rule, he cannot possibly satisfy such demands of his superiors, and the result is that endeavours are made to get him into hot water somehow, and have him turned out of the service. Such being the case, the higher authorities should not implicitly put faith in the reports of the immediate superiors of Sub-Inspectors, but should satisfy themselves, by independent enquiry, of their accuracy, before they take any action on them.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,

Suggestion for increasing the pay of the head and second maulvis in the Government High School, Moradabad.

3. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th August, says that when the Government lately increased the salaries of English teachers in the (Government) schools in the United Provinces, the editor pointed out that Arabic, Persian, Sanskrit and Hindi teachers should also receive increments in their pay. The Director of Public Instruction has recently raised the pay of the Head and Second pandits in the Government High School, Moradabad, from Rs. 30 to Rs. 40, and from Rs. 17 to Rs. 20 respectively, leaving out the Head and the Second maulvis. This must cause dissatisfaction to the maulvis in question, and the authorities would do well to increase their pay also, or at least deign to explain them the reason for giving them the cold shoulder.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
13th August, 1905.

The demonstration at Calcutta against the Bengal Partition Scheme.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 13th August, says:—We congratulate our countrymen of Bengal on the manly fight they are waging against tremendous odds against the unrighteous decision of Lord Curzon's Government to dismember their great province and to strike a blow at their growing unity as a community. Like men they have resolved not to take it 'lying down' at the hands of the curious personage who now governs India, but to do everything within the limits of the constitution that may possibly avert the impending catastrophe. The Town Hall demonstration of Monday last was a spectacle unique in its impressiveness and solemnity, and bespoke an agitated and agonizing heart on the part of the people. It was in last January that delegates from the entire province assembled at Calcutta under the presidency of Sir Henry Cotton to enter a most emphatic and uncompromising protest against any scheme of partition. There was a large muster for a second time at Mymensingh a few weeks ago at the annual Provincial Conference, and soon again—for a third time—so many as five hundred delegates from the mofussil were at their post of duty at Calcutta to voice forth their feeling of indignation and grief at the injustice that an unheeding and self-willed Viceroy—as the veteran Babu Norendro Nath Sen called him—has inflicted on them. It is not for nothing that hundreds of busy men, to whom agitation against Government is no pleasure but gives deep pain, sacrifice their work and proceed on a distant journey. It is only when they are summoned thither by an imperative sense of public duty that they go. The significance of the presence of five hundred mofussil delegates at the demonstration of Monday in the Calcutta Town Hall will be duly appreciated when it is remembered that no Provincial Conference of even lesser dimensions could be held even once a year in these large United Provinces thickly populated by an intelligent and increasingly educated people; that the enlightened and advanced Presidency of Bombay has suspended its annual session of the Provincial Conference for a couple of years; and more important, that it was not at many sessions of the Indian National Congress itself that this number was exceeded, equalled or even approached. The total audience at the Town Hall demonstration of Monday was variously estimated at between ten and twelve thousand. Will our readers be surprised to learn that there has so far been held but one session of the National Congress at which the attendance was so much as this—which was the last Bombay session. In yet another respect was the Calcutta demonstration a unique one. Where was the movement in India, directed against a decision of the Government, in which Maharajas, Rajas and Nawabs threw off their customary (and enforced) reserve, and boldly came forward to join forces with the middle class and the masses of their countrymen to defeat the ends of Government? The Maharaja of Cossimbazar, with his hereditary loyalty to the British Crown; the Maharaja of Mymensingh; the Maharaja of Nattore, the public-spirited descendant of the famous Rani Bhavani; Maharaja Bahadur Sir Jotendro Mohan Tagore; the Maharaja of Dighapatia—all were with the promoters of the demonstration in body or in spirit. Are these 'professional agitators,' to quote Sir Andrew Fraser's elegant phrase applied to Raja Peary Mohan Mukerji and Mr. A. Chaudhuri? Is the Hon'ble Babu Nolin Behari Sircar or Rai Sita Nath Roy Bahadur a professional agitator? Other notable features of the demonstration were the association of the Marwari merchants of Calcutta with the agitation, and the closing of the Indian shops of the city the whole of Monday afternoon in honour of the occasion. But by far the most impressive feature of it was the student procession.

CITIZEN,
14th August, 1905.

The Bengal Partition Scheme, and the proposal to send a deputation to England about it.

5. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 14th August, says:—It is to be regretted that the partition of Bengal has been decided upon at a time when the people are expected to give special evidence of loyalty owing to the visit to this country of the Prince and Princess of Wales. We Indians yield in loyalty to none, but it must be allowed we are human beings, and when our cherished feelings and sentiments are ruthlessly trampled upon by our rulers, we have ample justification for not being demonstratively loyal. Many of the inhabitants of the North and East Bengal have already declared that the blow that has been dealt them by Lord Curzon's Government has left in them no spirit or vitality to take part in the loyal demonstration in honour of the visit of their Royal Highnesses. They have avowed publicly that they are in mourning, and they must be excused if they cannot take part in joyful loyal demonstrations when they are immersed in grief. So over the visit of the future Emperor of India to Bengal, if not to any other part of the country, sighs will be heaved and tears shed. What should have been blessed by a people's rejoicing will be darkened by their cries and wailings. This is far from being auspicious; nor is it politically a desirable or right thing. That many in Bengal will have the courage to prove true to their present state of feelings, when the prince comes, has been already demonstrated by the fact that the great Town Hall meeting held under the Presidentship of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to consider the best means for according a reception to their Royal Highnesses, was unattended by a large number of men of position and respectability who stayed away from it as they were incapable of taking part in a demonstration of the kind. It is, we repeat, a great pity that the Prince's visit to the most important province of India should be marred by an absence of universal welcome.

There is a proposal in Bengal that a deputation of some fifty delegates should be sent to England to represent to the British public the wrong done to the people of Bengal, and for the reason of that to the whole of India, by the cruel dismemberment of that province. We shall be very glad to see this proposal being given effect to, and we beg to suggest that the fifty delegates must not be all Bengalese but should comprise competent men from all other provinces, so that the deputation may be thoroughly representative. We recommend this measure, for the whole of India is interested in the matter, and what is a disaster to the Bengali race is justly considered by the other Indian races to be a calamity to them as well. If Bengal can organize a deputation of the kind she proposes, we are sanguine it will be wondrously effective in convincing the authorities and the public in Britain that the empire is bowed down under the weight of the grief of a forced separation of a great united race. The zamíndárs of Bengal, particularly of Eastern and Northern Bengal, whose interests are most affected by the partition, are wealthy enough to defray the expenses of a deputation of the kind, and in the face of a disaster so grave, they must make up their minds to do all that the resources at their disposal may be expected to accomplish. As to delegates from other provinces to make up the deputation we hope men will be forthcoming for the object from Bombay, Madras, the Punjáb, and let us hope, the United Provinces too.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th August, 1905.

Grievances of Hospital Assistants.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th August, says:—The initial pay of the Hospital Assistants is not attractive enough and they are not treated courteously. Government has thought fit, and very properly too, to issue orders that Sub-Inspectors of Police should receive chairs and be addressed as "áp" and not "tum" by their departmental officers; but does Government know if the Hospital Assistants are treated courteously by the officers under whom they serve? Improve the conditions of the Hospital Assistants and a larger number of students will enter the Agra Medical School. The grievances of Hospital Assistants are very real and very hard, and it is nothing but bare justice that Government should improve their lot. We trust the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals will give his most earnest consideration to the memorial of the medical students.

OUDH AKHBAR,
25th August, 1905.

Lord Curzon's resignation.

1. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 25th August, in a long article, giving a brief summary of the various stages of the controversy between Lord Curzon and Lord Kitchener, re the Army administration reform, expresses regret that Lord Curzon should be obliged to tender his resignation of the Indian Viceroyalty, concerning a matter in which he sought to protect the interests of the poor tax-payers of this country. The Army reform scheme which Lord Kitchener framed, and has been sanctioned by Mr. Brodrick, is calculated to greatly increase the military expenditure of India, which must press hard on the people. Lord Curzon opposed this scheme; but the Secretary of State found that if he supported Lord Curzon, Lord Kitchener would resign, and that he would thereby lose the benefit of the valuable advice of so distinguished a soldier, and the result was that he ultimately accepted the Commander-in-Chief's main scheme, with slight modifications. Lord Curzon, however, soon after in a speech delivered at Simla, passed very free criticisms on the Army scheme as sanctioned by Mr. Brodrick, and this coupled with his insistence on General Barrow being appointed as the Military Supply Member under the new scheme, has finally led to his own sacrifice (resignation). But his present resignation of office, though late, demonstrates clearly enough that he is a self-respecting, and not a weak, Viceroy after all. The correspondence that has lately passed between the Secretary of State and the Viceroy regarding the appointment of General Barrow is no doubt interesting, but it evidently shows that Mr. Brodrick makes a very dangerous Secretary of State for India. In this correspondence Mr. Brodrick reminds Lord Curzon, in one place, that he has supported him in many matters, the Bengal Partition Scheme being one of them. It is surely opposed to official etiquette that a public officer should tell another that he has laid him under obligation in such and such a matter. The Secretary of State should not certainly have spoken of any support that he had given to the Viceroy, for he either most probably approved of the proposals of the Viceroy before he sanctioned them, or if he sanctioned them, even though he disapproved of them, he acted against his own convictions, which would imply that he is not fit to hold the high responsible post of the Secretary of State. However, owing to his retrograde administrative measures, Lord Curzon's resignation has given general satisfaction, though it was fondly hoped that he might do something for the benefit and well-being of India when the time for his departure from this country approached. He commenced his Viceroyalty in the first instance so excellently that the people thought he might prove a greater benefactor to them than even Lord Ripon. He made a bold stand against Mr. Brodrick's proposal to make India pay the expenses of a portion of the British army to be stationed in South Africa. He passed an Act against foreign bounty-fed sugars to protect the indigenous sugar industry. He gave a strong proof of his moral courage, and sense of justice and vigilance in the Rangoon (outrage) case. He adopted similar other measures which bade fair to make him a very popular Viceroy. But alas! his subsequent doings and acts—such as the disgrace to which the Native Princes were put at the Delhi Darbár; the extravagant expenditure (on the Darbár); the enactment of the Official Secrets Act; his speech at the Convocation of the Calcutta University; the Bengal Partition Scheme, &c., &c., have made him so unpopular and earned him such a bad name that every Indian has of late been anxiously waiting to greet the arrival of the (evil) day which has overtaken him.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th August, 1905.

Complaint against European soldiers shooting sacred animals on prohibited sacred grounds in Muttra.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 20th August, says:—The inhabitants of Kusum Sarovar and Radhakund have submitted a petition to the District Magistrate of Muttra, in which they complain that of late some European soldiers, presumably belonging to the Muttra Cantonment, have been, in spite of strict orders prohibiting such conduct, shooting sacred animals on sacred spots in the vicinity of those places. This has caused much annoyance to the orthodox Hindus living there. Besides the religious objection, the practice of shooting there is unsafe and perilous, because men and women of the poorer classes often walk in the forests to collect fuel and those religiously minded for the performance of their penance. Their life and limb will be endangered unless shooting is forbidden there. Nothing more is needed than the strict enforcement of the standing orders, and we appeal to the authorities concerned to take the necessary steps in the matter.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th August, 1905.

European outrages on Indian women.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 20th August, says:—'It is reported that a pointsman of the B. and N.-W. Railway has been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment for outraging a Brahman woman passenger at the Shahpur Patouri station.' This is as it should be. But where did this sense of justice go when the accused in the Chhapra and Khargpore cases were let off? We hope it was not the fact that the colour of their skin made all the difference. But can our countrymen be found fault with if they allow such an impression to be produced on their minds?

EXPRESS,
24th August, 1905.

The Bengal Partition Scheme.

4. The Express (Lucknow), of the 24th August, says:—The statement that Mr. Brodrick considers that ground for further enquiry as to the Partition Scheme has been made out, seems to be taken in Bengal as raising fresh hopes about this matter. In Simla, we are told, they do not read the debates in Parliament on this unpleasant subject, but as far as one can see the Home Government are preparing a fresh humiliation for His Excellency. Perhaps after all Mr. Roberts' suggestion of a Governor for the Province of Bengal may be entertained. This would meet the wishes of the non-official community who would prefer an English gentleman free from bureaucratic instincts and open to conviction. It would blast the hopes of aspirants to the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal, but that might be compensated for by the appointment of a member of the Service as Inspector-General of something or other on equal pay. The work would be light, and the pay magnificent, and everyone would be pleased.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th August, 1905.

Third class railway passengers.

5. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 19th August, concurs with a contemporary in thinking that since the Railway Board has been established, it has been anxious to promote the comfort and convenience of the third class railway passengers as far as possible, for which it is entitled to public gratitude. It is believed that in this connection the Board has proposed that, with a view to lessening the inconvenience of passengers in booking at railway stations, railway tickets should also be sold at post offices. But the writer is afraid that the measure will not be attended with much public convenience. Railway passengers are generally late in leaving their homes, and when they are late they can hardly be expected to go out of their way to get tickets at the post office. In the writer's opinion it would be much better if gate-keepers at the railway stations were also entrusted with the work of registering passengers. As soon as a passenger reaches the gate he can get a ticket from the gate-keeper who himself will at once admit him to the platform, and the passenger will take his seat in the carriage. Such an arrangement is said to be in force at some places in Egypt. Formerly it also prevailed on some lines in this country. It was stopped because it was suspected that the gate-keepers misappropriated railway money. But the suspicion was not well founded. The sale of tickets by gate-keepers would be a great public convenience. On no line there appears to be sufficient third class accommodation and the result is that third class carriages are always over-crowded. The railways should be required to provide more third class carriages. Again, the arrangements for the supply of drinking water to passengers are very unsatisfactory, and the Railway Board should give its attention to the matter.

AL BASHIR,
29th August, 1905.

England, Turkey and Musalmans.

1. THE Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 29th August, says that Mr. Beck declared on one occasion that Sir John Lawrence was of opinion that British rule in India could not be firm until the Muhammadans were reduced to the condition of agriculturists. It is not known where Mr. Beck came across this opinion of Sir John Lawrence, nor is the editor prepared to say that Government has been anxious to act upon Sir John Lawrence's advice. However, there can be no denying the fact that the Muhammadans have greatly declined during the last fifty years. There were hundreds of Muhammadans who were great supporters of the British Government and rendered important services to it, but their descendants are to be found in a very unsatisfactory condition. They find it difficult even to keep body and soul together. Setting aside the general question of the growing poverty of India, it will be admitted on all hands that the Muhammadans have been greatly impoverished for which they themselves are to blame to a large extent. Seeing the attitude of the Hindus who are aiming at the introduction of a uniform character and language throughout the length and breadth of India, freely indulging in political agitation and always ready to oppose Government and the Muhammadan community, their progress cannot be viewed with satisfaction. In these circumstances, it is highly desirable that there should be mutual sympathy and friendship between the Muhammadans and Englishmen. It has been alleged in some quarters that England desires the decline of the Sultan of Turkey and is always ready to help his enemies, the object being to gain possession of Mecca and Medina so that the Muhammadans may become her friends and supporters. But the editor does not accept this view, at least so far as the Indian Muhammadans are concerned. They have great sympathy with the Sultan, and the occupation of those holy places by a Christian Power would lead to a general rising in the Muhammadan world. The Indian Muhammadans are heartily desirous of the growth of friendship between England and Turkey and their loyalty receives a great impetus when they see any signs in this direction. Mr. Gladstone made a great mistake in adopting a policy which has led to the progress of German trade in Muhammadan countries. It is devoutly to be hoped that England will abandon Mr. Gladstone's policy so that British trade and influence may be re-established in the Muhammadan world.

ADVOCATE,
24th August, 1905.

Lord Curzon's resignation and the Bengal Partition Scheme.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th August, says :—From the papers published one learns with regret two things. There has been a regular passage of arms between the Cabinet on the one hand and Lord Curzon, single-handed, on the other. The former calls in question the Viceroy's loyalty to carry on the new system sanctioned much against his wishes in the celebrated Despatch of May 31st last ; Lord Curzon charges the Ministers with promising but at last failing to give him their whole-hearted support. To this Mr. Brodrick replies thus : "Throughout your administration, since your appointment as Governor-General in 1898, my colleagues and I endeavoured to give you constant support in the many measures of administrative reform which you have initiated, including the partition of Bengal upon which we recently adopted your proposals." The italics which are ours raise the suspicion that the sanction to the partition scheme, as we said just on the publication of the Resolution on the subject, was a sop to Lord Curzon, an application of cold cream to the blistered heart of the Viceroy, a concession to his wounded pride. It may now be presumed that but for his Lordship's sensitiveness the partition scheme might have been rejected. Will his resignation suspend the partition at least till such time as the Parliament has time to discuss the question?

ADVOCATE,
24th August, 1905.

The Advocate on Lord Curzon's resignation.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th August, says :—We regret the retirement of Lord Curzon with a slight tinge of disgrace. But to the military shibboleth, as embodied in Lord Kitchener, sound principles and economical measures are all sacrificed. Such is the hold military imperialism has still upon the British nation in general and the Cabinet in particular. The Indian press had given unstinted support to Lord Curzon in his endeavour for preventing the ascendancy of military autocracy in this country. That the press would have fully sympathised with him, and he would have made himself a martyr, had he resigned in June. But he chose to stay; he was so fond of power that he courted all the humiliation which has been his share. He is not now resigning for a principle. He is resigning because his behests have not been meekly carried out. The dual system of control did not, however, prevent Lord Kitchener having his own way and the military expenditure leaping up from sixteen to twenty-two millions of pounds sterling. So long as the military party holds the reins of Government, India cannot be rid of military autocracy, that is to say, to military considerations all interests must be subordinate.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
24th August, 1905.

The Indian People on Lord Curzon's resignation.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 24th August, says:—The severest critic of Lord Curzon cannot but sympathise with His Lordship in the circumstances which have brought about his resignation. It is an irony indeed that, as the Daily News says, it is not his mistakes but his exhibition of statesmanship that should have been censured by His Majesty's Government. The entire country was at one with His Excellency in the line he took on the fateful question of India's military administration, and the weak surrender of the Imperial Government to a popular soldier, the favoured child of fortune, was anything but creditable. That after all the compromises to which Lord Curzon agreed, the Cabinet should have declined even to appoint a nominee of the Governor-General to the post of Military Supply Member is in any event regrettable, and would be unpardonable but for the constitutional right of the Secretary of State to advise His Majesty on the question. That Lord Curzon was wrong and public opinion right on the nature of the modifications made in the new scheme at his instance is now made clear. His Excellency would have done much better if he had resigned so soon as the Secretary of State's despatch of May 31st was published, instead of waiting for all the subsequent unpleasantness.

PRAYAG SAMA-CHAR,
27th August, 1905.

The Prayág Samáchár on Lord Curzon's resignation.

5. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 27th August, referring to Lord Curzon's resignation of his Indian Viceroyalty, (ironically) observes that His Lordship being a paragon of Viceroys, every Indian must have felt sorry, more or less, at His Lordship's resignation. It is well-known what a benefactor he proved himself to India by his legislative and other administrative measures. The Indians are quite convinced of the beneficent nature of his measures in general. His Lordship has most materially furthered the cause of the interests of the Indians by passing the Universities Act, calling the Indians mendacious, devising the Bengal Partition Scheme, &c. A history of his Viceroyalty, when written, will prove a highly interesting record of remarkable deeds, no other Viceroy having performed or will perform hereafter such grand deeds as His Lordship has done. The Indians cannot but love him intensely for the various benefits he has conferred on them and must ever remain heartily grateful to him. The Indians earnestly wish that he may soon be appointed to some high post elsewhere, and give there the same proofs of his generosity and benevolence as he has given in India. His Lordship had, of late, made himself only too popular with the Indians, but it is a matter for much regret that, regardless of the interests of the Indians, he has tendered his resignation! "We heartily bless Lord Curzon that he may continue to set his heart on promoting the progress (of humanity), and pray that, considering his virtues, God may permit him to achieve an excellent reputation." It is a great misfortune for India that she is now going to lose so precious a jewel as Lord Curzon.

ADVOCATE,
27th August, 1905.

Indian Public opinion on Lord Curzon's resignation.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 27th August, says:—The Indian Press has spoken out its mind on the subject. Without taking into consideration the merits and demerits of Lord Curzon's administration, it may be said that outside Bengal, the press in Bombay and Madras, both Indian and Anglo-Indian, expresses its admiration for Lord Curzon's stand which he made against the military ascendency. The purely Indian section at the same time holds that as far as Indians are concerned, to them the difference between a military autocracy and civil autocracy has been very little. On the Bengal side the Indian press is jubilant, and it is natural that it should be. But we question the wisdom of holding demonstrations in the maidan, of having bonfires, illuminations and fireworks, because Lord Curzon's departure from India does not mean an end to the Bengali's troubles on the partition question. It is, however, difficult to understand the non-official Anglo-Indian public of Calcutta. If the Indian Daily News represents any class, then surely the non-official Anglo-Indian public opinion is bitter against Lord Curzon. But the telegrams from the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and the Trades Association which have conveyed their sense of regret at the Viceroy's resignation who has done so much for the development of British trade, go to show that non-official Anglo-Indian opinion is divided. As to Press opinion, the estimate of Lord Curzon's work made by the Pioneer is generally held to be fair and reflects public opinion to a great extent, as it rightly holds that Lord Curzon had not sufficient ground to resign on such a trifling excuse. The news has penetrated Indian society and we think that it can be said without hesitation, that Lord Curzon's departure from India at this moment will be looked upon with a sense of relief, not because a new Viceroy will come and at once adopt measures which will remove the feeling of distrust created, but because India will thus have a breathing time. People have either become indifferent to what happens around them by constant failure to persuade the rulers to look at things from their point of view, or become hopeless as to any justice being done to them when their interests clash with those of the Government.

ADVOCATE,
27th August, 1905.

Alleged untruthfulness of Mr. Brodrick regarding Lord Curzon's resignation in connection with Curzon-Kitchener controversy.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 27th August, says:—If Lord Curzon has suffered seriously in his reputation, Mr. Brodrick has no less been discredited in this connection. A series of contradictions and evasions have marked his part played in this ugly Curzon-Kitchener controversy. All his statements in Parliament about the resignation of both Sir Edmund Elles and Lord Curzon can hardly be tolerated in the light of the papers published; the greatest stretch to which the moral code may be put does not save his assertions from coming under what is termed unparliamentary language. In the papers first published the Military Member intimated his willingness to resign if that would pave the way to a new organisation. But as he had not sent in a formal resignation, Mr. Brodrick thought he could say nay to any question that meant resignation. But as to Lord Curzon, Mr. Brodrick's assertion was anything but truthful; it did not tally with facts. At the end of June Mr. Dalziel asked (1) Whether at any time the Viceroy had intimated his intention of resigning office in case of the powers of the Commander-in-Chief being largely increased; (2) Whether any communication expressing disapproval of the decisions arrived at by the Ministry had been received from Lord Curzon; (3) Whether he was in a position to give denial to the reports that the Viceroy's resignation is pending? Mr. Brodrick replied: "I have nothing to add to what has been published, except to say, in reply to the second question, that since the receipt of the recent despatch . . . . a communication has been received from the Viceroy suggesting certain modifications in the proposed arrangements which are now under the consideration of H. M.'s Government. The Viceroy has not tendered his resignation." This in spite of the assertion in the latest published telegrams, namely, "The position is in principle almost exactly where it was when I resigned in June, and the main conditions which caused me to resign on that occasion have again been called into being." The italics are ours and they in the most unmistakable language bring into relief the official untruthfulness of the highest ruler and administrator, law-giver and law-interpreter of India. The controversy has been undignified and unedifying to all parties concerned; the end has been equally destructive of the reputation of more than one person that came into the fray and, what is more, most disastrous to India—poverty-stricken and army-ridden India of Indians.

CITIZEN,
28th August, 1905.

The Citizen on Lord Curzon's resignation.

8. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 28th August, says:—The last few weeks His Excellency the Viceroy was by no means in a satisfactory state of health, and with a view to aiding his digestion by a gentle exercise placed his august self on a see-saw with a vertical movement, alternately going up and down like a doll hung on an India-rubber string. The public, both Indian and British, have watched the awe-inspiring spectacle, sometimes in solemn stillness and sometimes with lusty cheers.

The Viceroy was pleased to touch the partition scheme with his foot, and up he went at once. Presently, however, Lord Kitchener's redistribution scheme depressed the noble lord awfully, and down His Lordship came. A triumphant idea of success achieved in mercilessly hurling his retrogressive measures against the helpless subjects of His Majesty would exalt him at one moment to the seventh heaven. The next moment, however, the approach of some masterful men with a masterful vocabulary would cause His Lordship to bow down to the very earth. Bold, restless and jolly, Lord Curzon would at one moment land on the ground of emergency, at another he would run up to some high principle of statesmanship. But such constant shifting was bound to check the measured movement of the see-saw, and behold our hero fall on his nose. He makes to-day a sad exit, but surely we all were prepared for it.

The news of Lord Curzon's resignation has by no means been sprung on the Indian people as a surprise. Already unpopular among almost all sections of men in India, and having of late contrived to break with even the authorities at home, notwithstanding that, as Mr. Brodrick very pathetically observes, he has constantly endeavoured to give his support in the various measures of administrative reforms introduced by His Lordship, including the partition of Bengal, Lord Curzon had made his position thoroughly untenable and he had no option other than to resign. The Secretary of State must have been highly mistaken if he persuaded himself to believe that his constant support of all measures inaugurated by Lord Curzon, including even those that were unsound and harmful, would cause His Lordship at any time to defer to his judgment. Evidently Lord Curzon has become so used to receiving support even beyond what is allowable that he did not scruple to dictate terms to the Secretary of State, and like a spoilt child was vexed that they were not accepted. Firstly as a matter of right, then on grounds of emergency, and then again in the name of the principles underlying future changes in the administration did Lord Curzon demand the appointment of General Sir Edmund Barrow to the new Supply Membership. Either on purpose or through some misunderstanding, the Viceroy even proceeded so far as to represent that he had consulted Lord Kitchener in the matter and the appointment would be acceptable to the Commander-in-Chief. The latter has since given a flat contradiction of the report. He has also repudiated the description of his proposals contained in a summary submitted by the Viceroy. Throughout the controversy Lord Curzon has cut a very sad figure, and though he has constantly shifted his footing, Mr. Brodrick has once for all proved inexorable. As his last resource, Lord Curzon threatened that if his recommendation was not accepted he would throw up his appointment. Surely, to proffer one's resignation by way of enforcing the acceptance of one's proposal is a measure worthy of only Lord Curzon. Happily for the Indian people, the frail sheet-anchor has been torn from His Lordship's grasp and not only has the resignation of Lord Curzon been accepted by His Majesty, but, as though to preclude the possibility of his any further changing his mind, his successor has been nominated. The Viceroy-elect is Lord Minto. Le roi est mort : vive le roi.

Lord Curzon has expressed his desire to be relieved of his charge without further delay. Although this is making too large a demand upon our credulity, yet we persuade ourselves that the desire is sincere ; but as Lord Minto will not sail before the end of October and cannot reach India before the first week of November, we trust Lord Ampthill may be called upon once again to take over charge. Indeed, the excitement to which the rule of Lord Curzon has perpetually subjected the Indian people has told upon their nerves, and they are anxious for the approach of the day when His Lordship actually lays down office, and they are suffered to enjoy respite—a period of prolonged rest.

It is certain that Lord Curzon has been disgraced. Yet an attempt is being made that his prestige does not suffer in the eyes of at least the Indian people. No other explanation is possible of the following telegraphic correspondence which has passed between His Majesty the King-Emperor and His Excellency the Viceroy :—Telegram from the King-Emperor—Marienbad, dated 22nd August 1905 —" With deep regret I have no other alternative but to accept your resignation at your urgent request. Most warmly do I thank you for your invaluable services to your Sovereign and your country, and especially to the Indian Empire.

Most sincerely do I hope that your health may improve." The Viceroy replied :—" I am deeply touched by Your Majesty's generous message, which has cheered me greatly. The happiest feature of my service in India has been the gracious consideration which I have never failed to receive from your Majesty."

ZULQARNAIN,
28th August,
1905.

Lord Curzon's resignation.

9. The Zulqarnain (Budaun), of the 28th August, congratulates Lord Minto on his appointment as Viceroy of India, and observes that the Bengalis should be right glad at the early retirement of Lord Curzon. But Lord Curzon was a very wise and shrewd Governor-General. It is difficult for this country to get the like of him in the future.

ADVOCATE,
31st August, 1905.

The British Ministry and Lord Curzon.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 31st August, says :—The irony of fate makes Lord Curzon the perpetrator of the constitutional outrage in one case and its victim in the other. To this the Statesman draws pointed attention. His Lordship has familiarised us with a Government that disobeys orders and confronts the imperial authorities with the accomplished fact, as in the case of the Tibet Expedition—a way likely to be repeated even in the latest topic, partition scheme; he has added to the military expenditure without reference to the people here or Parliament in England; the climax he reached in the matter of the partition Resolution. In this matter Mr. Brodrick betrayed utter lack of his sense of duty towards India; he sacrificed the country to the hobby-horse of a " prancing pro-Consul." Says the Statesman: " In other words, we have in the relation to the Government of India to the Partition scheme a parallel sufficiently exact for practical purpose, to the relation existing between the Imperial Government and the Army Reorganisation scheme. There is in both the same disregard of constitutional procedure, the same reliance on the necessity of increased efficiency as an adequate plea for the method adopted, the same resolute ignoring of a practically unanimous public opinion. It has been the almost universal lament throughout India that the Viceroy should be driven to resign over a personal issue rather than that he should have taken the tide at the flood. The lament would have been stronger still had Lord Curzon shown in his own relations with the Indian people that respect for the form and spirit of constitutional procedure for which he has recently stood. As it is, the public is bound to recognise that the principle is applicable all round."

Our local Anglo-Indian contemporary draws attention to the curtailment of the powers and privileges of the Viceroy that is inevitable from the way in which Mr. Brodrick has treated Lord Curzon. The control of the Governor-General in Council on military affairs has surely been lessened by the recent decision on the organization scheme. The rejection of the Viceroy's nomination for the Military Supply Membership means reduction of the exalted representative of the King-Emperor to the position of one who recommends only. If Lord Curzon had all along tried to centralise all authority in the Viceroy, the Secretary of State has taken the wind out of his sail and reduced the Gevornor-General into a decree-registering machine. India has been brought within the pale of Imperialism and both the people and the rulers have come under the direct control of the Ministry that is distinguished for its disregard of popular views here as in England.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
27th August, 1905.

A grievance of the Holkar's subjects.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 27th August, publishes the following contribution :—Since the resignation of His Highness the Maharaja Sir Shivaji Rao Holkar, under compulsory option or optional compulsion, immediately after the great Coronation 'Tamasha' at Delhi, the affairs of his State have been managed by the Council of Regency under the direct superintendence of the Resident at Indore; and during the régime of the present Resident Mr. O. V. Bosanquet, he has set himself vigorously to the work of reorganization of the several departments of the State. But it is painful to have to note that all his reorganization schemes like Lord Curzon's commissions, have not only not proved successful, but have been the cause of an unduly large influx of foreigners in the State. No sooner does any official come to serve here with a view to make cosmos out of chaos, supposed to be reigning in the department, and to bring the administration of the Department to a higher state of efficiency, he begins by removing every one of the former staff and bringing in their place his own favourities wheresoever they may chance to come from. Let alone the men for higher posts: but even constables, peons, clerks, guards, foresters, etc., are imported from outside. Not only do these petty creatures thus come in the way of the natives of the State, but they also help in making the confusion worse confounded. In spite of the circulars from the Government of India to the contrary, there are many persons who have been employed in several departments of the State while on long leave from the British service.

Lastly, I beg you to invite the attention of the Government of India to a recent resolution of the State Council to apply to the Central Provinces Government for the services of a man on the clerical establishment on a salary two and a half times higher than his former one in the British service. Are the State subjects void of so much sense as to be unable to fill the vacancy of a clerk? Does it not reflect upon the wisdom and character of the members of the Council who have solemnly resolved to apply to the Central Provinces Government for the services of a clerk on Rs. 60? Surely the State can at least supply some men who can fill the posts that are filled by clerks from the British service.

The Maharaja of Kashmir and the Viceroy's proposal to invest His Highness with full ruling powers.

12. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 28th August, says that Lord Curzon was to visit Kashmir and invest the Maharaja with full ruling powers. But His Lordship has now tendered his resignation and will depart from this country after a short time. The editor thinks that His Lordship would do well to confer the powers on the Maharaja before he leaves India, and thereby earn the gratitude of the people of Kashmir.

HINDUSTANI,

Complaint regarding delay made in the disposal of suits by law courts.

13. A correspondent of the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 30th August, complains that as litigation continues to increase and the number of officers, who administer justice, is very limited, great delay takes place in the decision of cases, to the great inconvenience of suitors, witnesses, &c. It generally happens that suitors and others have to return home from court again and again before their case comes to be heard for the first time. The case with revenue suits is still worse, especially in suits relating to partition, enhancement of rent, and profits. The fact of the matter is that by far the greater part of the time of Deputy Collectors is taken up in dealing with criminal suits, and attending to miscellaneous work, and the result is that they get very little time to take up revenue suits, and even when they are able to do so, they so hurriedly get through them, that full justice cannot be expected from their decisions. In cases relating to five-yearly settlements, decision is made solely on the statements of kanungos and patwáris, though full court-fees, &c., are strictly exacted in every case. Similarly the amin's report forms the sole guide of Deputy Collectors in their decision of partition suits. What is still more astonishing is that while the decisions of cases so hurriedly disposed of are quashed by hundreds in appeal, yet no explanation is ever called for from the lower courts. It is a great pity indeed that though the revenue from court-fees, &c. far exceeds the expenditure on administration of justice, yet the number of judicial officers is not duly increased to keep pace with the increasing amount of judicial work.

Drought and the autumn crop.

14. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 22nd August, complains that the last spring crops were greatly damaged by frost and that the autumn crop is suffering from drought. It would appear that God is bent on destroying the Hindu population in this country. It may be feared that the people will not be able to afford a suitable welcome to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. All the same the Rájas and Mahárájas will receive His Royal Highness with great hospitality.

HINDUSTANI,
30th August, 1905.

Complaint regarding the increase of water-cess in certain districts in the United Provinces.

15. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 30th August, says that when the Ganges Canal was constructed by Government water was in the first instance supplied to cultivators in abundance, with the result that in a few years the area of land under cultivation enormously increased. But at every revision of settlement that followed not only the Government land revenue came to be largely increased, but the water-cess also was levied at increasing rates. What was worse still no special arrangements were made to see that land on which water-cess was levied was sufficiently and timely supplied with water. Why, the canal authorities began to practise more stinginess in the supply of water to cultivated fields as years rolled on, and finally ended by reducing the number of qulábás (outlets), closing them at intervals, &c. To crown all these hardships the water-cess has now all on a sudden been raised from Rs. 6-8-10 to Rs. 10 per acre in the districts of Sahāranpur, Muzaffarnagar and Meerut. The cultivators in these districts mainly cultivated indigo and sugarcane. The cultivation of indigo was given up some years ago, and the cultivators have now depended for their maintenance and Government dues on the sugarcane harvest. But this harvest cannot possibly bear the heavy water-cess of Rs. 10 per acre, and the inevitable result of this exorbitant assessment must be to ruin the tenantry altogether, and make their condition as bad as that of their confrères has been in the Bundelkhand districts. It is certainly great injustice that the water-rate should have been raised to one and-a-half of the previous rate all at once. Surely if Government is really anxious to better the condition of the peasantry, it should not levy the water-rate on commercial principles. Unless the water-rate comes to be moderately assessed and water to be supplied adequately, there is no prospect of the condition of the peasantry being ameliorated in the least. The writer fails to understand what is it that induces the authorities to enhance the water-rate again and again in the three doomed districts.

A complaint regarding the non-acceptance of 1840-rupees by traders.

16. The Mufíd-i-Ám (Agra), of the 21st August, says that as the rupees bearing the year 1840 have ceased to be accepted by traders, &c., the poorer classes are greatly inconvenienced in consequence. The Government would perhaps do well to issue a proclamation in all parts of the country requiring money changers not to refuse 1840-rupees, but to get them exchanged at banks as soon as they have got a lot of them in their possession. This suggestion, if adopted, would save the general public a deal of trouble in their daily transactions.

ADVOCATE,
27th August, 1905.

Gambling at the race course and in the clubs.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 27th August, says:—Side by side with the many virtues with which Anglo-Indians have blessed India, a number of European vices have been inflicted upon the people. We do not think there is a greater curse than gambling which in the name of sports has been introduced into the country—a vice which has been quietly imbibed by Indians and which is threatening to do as much mischief as any scourge could do. It is true that as yet only the large towns have been affected by this vice, but we are afraid it will overtake the masses in no time. The members of the Government, which is so rightly anxious to put down gambling in all forms in the country, do not make a good exhibition of themselves when they encourage gambling at the race course and in the clubs. In the former, Indians freely take part and at least once in their life in the eyes of the book-makers, they hold equal position with their European brethren. Next to those of Calcutta, the races of Lucknow hold great importance in the eyes of the gambling public. If Europeans travel long distances to take part in the races, they can plead interest in the sport, but what possible interest can the shop-keepers of Cawnpore have who fill the special trains from Cawnpore to the race course, or, ordinary shop-keepers, half-starving wasiqa-holders and insolvent Nawabs with the multitude of people in overcrowding the race course? It is nothing but addiction to pure gambling. We know of important houses in the Indian community ruined by betting on the race course; we know of people who feel as much excited during the race week as they do, for instance, during the Dewali week. There is a law to suppress gambling at Dewali, but there is no healthy public opinion to condemn the other sort of gambling. We are very thankful to the Bishop of Lahore for his very spirited sermon at Simla on the evil effects of gambling. His Lordship spoke with much warmth and sincerity and dealt with the subject from different points of view, taking as his text the words—" Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall be also reapt."

Some times they have not the necessary register with them, sometimes the value payable parcel forms are not available. Traders have consequently to go to the General Post Office to their great inconvenience where the postal clerks do their work with great unwillingness. It is to be hoped that the Director-General will give his attention to the matter.

SIPAHI,
5th September,
1905.

Anglo-Japanese Alliance.

1. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 5th September, says that an Anglo-Japanese Alliance has been concluded by Lord Lansdowne and Baron Hayashi for ten years. According to this new treaty England and Japan will help each other. If Russia invades India the Japanese Army will come to the help of the Indian Government, and if Japan happens to be troubled by any European Power the Indian troops will proceed to Japan to help her. Japan has broken the spell of Russian power, and now England can depend on India for her protection against the Russians. The Anglo-Japanese Alliance will not be very beneficial to England, inasmuch as England relying on the aid of Japan in case of an invasion of India by Russia will not increase the Native army, nor will she care to gain the good-will of the people. On the other hand, the Alliance will be very useful to Japan. She will be relieved of all fear of France and Germany. The aid and sympathy of England will tend to increase the influence and prestige of Japan in China. India has proved the cause of the ruin of many powers, and who knows what mischief she will do in future. England being a Christian Power is ready to help Japan, a Budhist Power, simply for the sake of India.

ALMORA
AKHBAR,
31st August, 1905.

Lord Curzon's resignation.

2. The Almora Akhbár (Almora), of the 31st August, referring to Lord Curzon's resignation, says that His Lordship was a man of his convictions. He never hesitated to do a thing when he once made up his mind to do it. India has never had a Viceroy of such firmness of mind except Lord Northbrook. His Lordship abolished the famine cess which had been levied for some years past, and also raised the limit of the minimum taxable income from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,000 and thus checked a great deal of official oppression. His Excellency spent money with a free hand on the encouragement of upper primary education. The Viceroy has made satisfactory arrangements for the preservation and maintenance of old royal buildings. At the same time the Viceroy rendered some minor disadvantages to the country which did not befit his rank. The native states have been deeply involved in debt during his administration. Some states will not be able to clear their debts for several years. Some Chiefs have even been deprived of their power and position. The Universities Act which was already considered strict by the public has been rendered stiffer by His Excellency. The Indian Press which looked to His Excellency for its freedom has been gagged by the Official Secrets Act. The division of Bengal has displeased the Bengalis. Far from throwing open any higher ranks of the public service to the children of the soil, the Viceroy has imposed restrictions on their appointment to posts which they could get without much difficulty. He has incurred public odium by his unjust attack on the natives in his Calcutta Convocation speech. He can make amends for that speech only by pursuing a more sympathetic policy towards India on his return to England.

RIYAZ-UL-
AKHBAR,
1st September,
1905.

The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár on Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty.

3. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 1st September, says that the treatment accorded to Lord Curzon in India has been much severer than it was ever accorded to any other Viceroy. The liberty-loving people of Bengal and others holding similar views wanted Lord Curzon to act according to their desires; but such a desire of the people is seldom gratified by the rulers of any country in the world. Lord Curzon's ideas were good at the commencement of his Viceroyalty and he gave some practical proofs thereof too, having made many a promise in England to do good to India before he started for it. But all on a sudden his ideas underwent an abrupt change for the worse. The editor more than once remarked in his paper that Lord Curzon was a passionate and sensitive statesman. With his unique abilities, he did not like to bind himself with fetters of patience or forbearance. After he had been a short time in India, he gauged the thoughts and views of the Bengalis, and provoked by a certain newspaper article, he set to putting restraints on the people's liberty by means of legislation. Considering the persistence with which he pressed the passing of the Official Secrets Act, and the Universities

Act, and the manner in which he abolished the competitive examinations for admission into the public service and started the question of the partition of Bengal, everybody will cry out that His Lordship adopted all these measures to restrain the freedom of speech and the press of the Bengalis. It is no good now calling Lord Curzon names, and the newspapers that abuse him act wrongly, for instead of future Viceroys taking warning from this, will be apt to draw quite a different inference. It is sheer superstition to say that it is due to the curse of the Bengalis that Lord Curzon is forced to leave the country before the period of the extension of his tenure of office had expired. It is a pity that the educated classes should be victims to such weak thoughts. The editor then referring to the correspondence that passed between the British Ministry and Lord Curzon regarding the appointment of General Barrow as Military Supply Member, says that the language employed therein is such that one might well take it to be more a disputation between children than exchange of weighty views between statesmen.

Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty.

OUDH AKHBAR,
2nd September,
1905.

4. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 2nd September, says that though it is true that during the later period of Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty a marked increase has taken place in the opposition of Bengalis to His Lordship's administrative policy, specially in connection with the Bengal Partition Scheme, yet it cannot be averred that there has not been anything during his tenure of office which might become memorable, or for which the Indians might feel grateful to him. A Viceroy who owes obedience to the Secretary of State and has his hands tied down by law, cannot (at his own initiative) change the long-standing system of administration in the country. But Lord Curzon has, like a good friend, again and again told the Indians, in his speeches, that unless they themselves put the shoulder to the wheel in the matter of ameliorating the condition of their country, the Government could not do much for them. Besides, the heated discussions which have now and again taken place at the meetings of the Viceregal Legislative Council during His Lordship's time have led to the creation of public opinion in India, the earliest fruit of which is the movement for the exclusive use of India-made articles that has recently been set on foot in the various parts of the country, especially in Bengal, and bids fair to grow stronger in future. This movement is certainly calculated to prove very beneficial to the country; and such being the case, if Lord Curzon may be excused for his Convocation speech, the same hospitality, courtesy, &c., should be extended to His Lordship as were shown to his predecessors.

Comments on the Pioneer's praise of Lord Curzon's administration.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
3rd September,
1905.

5. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 3rd September, says that while the Pioneer recently writing about the administration of India by Lord Curzon, highly praised him for his mental capacities, &c., it passed over the discontent which he has created among the thirty millions of Bengalis (by his Bengal Partition Scheme). When Lord Curzon first set foot on the Indian soil as Viceroy, the people were leading a pretty easy and quiet life; but having taken the reins of Government into his hand, he began to pass Acts one after another, which threw the whole of the land into a ferment. The Pioneer is against the boycott movement inaugurated in Bengal, and the lofty articles that it has been writing on the subject are not calculated to help the cause of the people. Verily the Anglo-Indian Press can, if it be so minded, comparatively render greater help in ameliorating the fallen condition of Indians than the British rulers.

Lord Curzon's retirement and Indian public opinion.

OUDH PUNCH,
7th September,
1905.

6. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 7th September, says that Mr. Balfour and Mr. Brodrick have proved inexorable and Lord Curzon has at last to retire from India. The Indians were powerless before Lord Curzon who had everything his own way in utter disregard of Indian public opinion. His Lordship found more than a match in Lord Kitchener. The duel lasted for sometime, Lord Kitchener being supported by Mr. Balfour and others. Lord Curzon had the sympathy of all India, and also of some high-minded Englishmen like Lord Ripon and Lord Roberts. But the ways of Providence are mysterious. Lord Curzon has sustained an ignominous defeat. The cry of "Russia! Russia!" raised by Lord Kitchener had a magic influence on England. If England gained the good-will of the Indians she could treat the approach of Russia with contempt. But officials could hardly be expected to acquire their good-will. When Lord Curzon first arrived in this country, the people considering him to be their true friend, were highly jubilant and welcomed his advent. But when His Lordship showed himself in his true colours and paid no attention to public opinion, the attitude of the public underwent a sudden change from one end of the country to the other. Did not his Universities Act hurt the feelings of the people? Did not his Official Secrets Act place a new engine of oppression of the press into the hands of officials? Was not his paying special attention to the wishes and interests of Europeans and Eurasians disagreeable to natives, especially when the Viceroy turned a deaf ear to their representations? Was His Lordship justified in treating with contempt the strong protest of the Bengalis against the partition of their province? Did it become His Lordship to call the people, who have always been loyal and faithful to their former rulers, liars, traitors and flatterers? Although India was dissatisfied with Lord Curzon, her sympathy was always with His Lordship in his quarrel with Lord Kitchener. Lord Curzon has incurred such public odium that not a single man is to be found shedding tears over his departure. Now His Lordship may have realised that, had wiser counsels prevailed with him, the public attitude towards him would be different on the present day from what it is. His Lordship may well bear in mind that he will not be allowed rest even in England. There are some justice-loving and lion-hearted gentlemen in England who will be ready to give vent to the feelings of Indians. If Mr. Digby is no more, his mantle has fallen on Mr. Cotton. His Lordship's eloquence will stand him in good stead in this world and he may succeed in explaining away his mistakes, but his eloquence will be of little avail before the omniscient Providence when, on the Judgment Day, India will take hold of the skirt of his coat and tell the Almighty "This is the tyrant." In order to escape that contingency Lord Curzon should tell Lord Minto to correct his mistakes.

AL BASHIR,

Protest against the Bengalis' expression of joy in objectionable ways at Lord Curzon's resignation.

7. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 5th September, says that on receipt of the news of Lord Curzon's resignation, the "brave" Bengalis assembled on the maidan at Calcutta and gave free expression to their joy at the event, indulging in the display of fireworks, &c. These proceedings of the Bengalis are, no doubt, indicative of their excited feelings, their dissatisfaction at Lord Curzon's policy, and their forgetfulness of themselves in their efforts to imitate the freedom of action of the people in the free Western countries. But if these acts be looked at from the standpoint of decorum and propriety, they surely simply prove their childishness and shallowness of mind. It is conduct of this sort which keeps Muhammadan leaders from standing on the political platform side by side with Bengalis. "We are certainly lovers of liberty, and have always hated flattering. But the respectable members of our community cannot be the partizans of Bengalis in such acts, which are fit but for such (low) classes as dhuniyás (cotton carders), juláhás (weavers), kunjarás (green-grocers) and butchers."

A suggestion to have the proposed conferment of ruling powers on the Maharaja of Kashmir made by the Prince of Wales during his coming visit to India.

8. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 4th September, says that as Lord Curzon is now to leave India very shortly there is little likelihood of His Lordship finding time to visit Kashmir before his departure, and invest the Mahárája with full ruling powers which it is proposed to confer on His Highness. The Prince of Wales is to visit Kashmir during his coming tour in India, and the opportunity may fittingly be taken to have the powers conferred on the Mahárája by the hands of His Royal Highness. If this suggestion be adopted, it will form a very memorable event of His Royal Highness's visit to India.

Partition of Bengal.

ADVOCATE,
3rd September,
1905.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd September, says:—The Sanjibani of Thursday's issue learns that Lord Curzon is determined upon seeing Bengal parted in twain before he leaves the Indian shores. The superior officers for the new province have been appointed, the boundaries of divisions and districts determined, a large amount of money about 2 lakhs for preliminary expenditure, made over to Mr. Fuller, the Lieutenant-Governor-elect. It is further said that the Proclamation will be issued within a week's time. The news is too staggering to be true.

The Bengal Partition Scheme and the Bengali home-manufactures movement.

ADVOCATE,
3rd September,
1905.

11. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 3rd September, says:—The Bengalis have not been unoften misunderstood and misrepresented by the people of other provinces. It is a common thing to hear that Bengal is noisy and talkative. Evenpeople, who have themselves not reached the stage of even talking, have, without showing their own work in any direction, accused the Bengalis of being guilty of mere talk. Now the eyes of whole India are being opened at the united stand Bengal has made in the partition question. Bengali Hindus, who are as divided into different castes and creeds as any other section of the Hindu community is, have shown that they can rise above petty considerations in a manner which cannot but cause a great searching of hearts in the rulers who are used to treat public opinion with contempt and to whom the agitation has come in the form of as much a surprise as to the rest of India. The agitation over the partition question has shown many side-lights of our countrymen of the Lower Province which cannot but rouse the admiration of every thoughtful and patroitic Indian. We may regret some acts of childishness which cannot be avoided in great excitement. But upon the whole Bengal is carrying on the agitation in a manner worthy of the position it holds in India, and is setting an object-lesson to the rest of India which will not, and should on no account be forgotten. The division of a united people may be proceeded with and at the altar of false notions about prestige even good feeling between Indians and Anglo-Indians might be sacrificed, but one thing is clear, namely, that a people cannot be divided against their will and cannot be governed in the spirit in which Lord Curzon attempted to govern them. It is in the hands of the Government of India and the Home Government to effect a compromise and thus narrow the gulf that is widening every day to the detriment of both the State and the country.

However much we may regret that the efforts at industrial development of India should have been given a political significance and thus caused bitter racial feelings, we cannot but feel gratified at the success so far achieved. Racial bitterness will be forgotten as soon as the Government of India feels that it is necessary to reconcile Bengal public opinion, but the movement which has been started in the excitement has come to stay and shall have its effect on the public mind. Long before the partition was talked of problems of reviving the decaying industries of India had been receiving keen attention of the Indian public. The Association for the Advancement of Scientific and Industrial Education of Indians in Bengal, the Ranade Institute in Bombay, the Industrial Association in the Panjab, the efforts of the Caste Conferences to make organised efforts to send students abroad, were a few of the many efforts that were being made to give practical shape to the general desire. Bengal, in this matter, was in the forefront, and we know how its Association gauranteed funds to a number of students whom it has sent to Japan, America and England for technical education. The rest of India has followed Bengal, and there is everywhere a desire to make organised efforts which Bengal has so successfully made. Industries the products of which come to every day use are receiving the greatest attention. Besides taking steps to form companies to run weaving mills, we are glad to note that special attention is being devoted to minor industries.

ADVOCATE,
7th September,
1905.

The Bengal partition scheme, and the Bengali Boycott movement.

12. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th September, says:—The proclamation has been received in Bengal with mixed feelings from which the tone of despair is conspicuous by its absence. The people refuse to consider the question as an accomplished fact and one to which submission might be inevitable, but is sure to be under a severe protest. Like the river which is only a silvery thread at the start but a surging and majestic volume of moving waters as it approaches its goal, the sea, the agitation started in 1903, which was then but a whispering breeze has now become a veritable storm. Its pall is upon Bengal, and that pall is thickening with every hot blast that comes from the official furnace. With every puff of the blast the water turns into vapour and flies away, leaving the clay of agitation harder than before and the shape more pronounced. The Viceroy has done no more and no less than infused the so-called mild Bengali with the firm determination of a true-born Briton.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * *

No trinity of officers are more unpopular now than Lord Curzon, Sir A. Fraser and Mr. Fuller. And these are the persons, particularly the last two, who shall have to face the song of discontent.

Lord Curzon evidently means to face the world with the accomplished fact, and thereby kill the agitation. Foolish dream! It is said there is many a slip between the cup and the lip. The Statesman feels between the two days, that of the Proclamation and that of the partition, something may turn up to intervene between cause and effect by the conviction being brought home to the Government that the remedy would be worse than the disease itself. In England the expected Dissolution may take place; but that is not at all likely to even scotch, much less kill, the Proclamation. From that far-off land the only hukum that may put a stop to partition may come from the King-Emperor himself by cancelling His Majesty's sanction given. Is that possible? We do not yet know what the leaders of Bengal are thinking of doing now. Possible or impossible, we would request them, as subjects of the Sovereign and not of the Superior person in Simla or of his weak superior in Downing street, to tap the one source still left untouched. With or without hoping this way or that way, they should, to make the chain of memorials complete, appeal to the highest legal authority on earth, the Almighty's Vicegerent, to stay the hand of his irritated and therefore erring Viceroy in dividing Bengal in twain. The king, who has no politics of his own, is above all parties and is free from all party bias, may yet be expected to be himself moved and then silence the party for partition with but a wave of his royal hand. Why, on account of the temper of Bengal having been raised to the boiling point by official callousness, His Majesty's intervention, even if unasked, is indeed called for to save the situation and allay the bitterness caused against the Government.

The Bengali has made up his mind to offer passive resistance. "In the case of this flying in the face of the race feelings of the people of Bengal, what could the Government do," asks 'Max,' "in the event of the people of the province turning passive resisters after the example of the Irish people in recent times?" "Are they prepared," he further asks, "to go on with the movement if they have to meet with an opposition framed after that fashion?" Lord Curzon has, strangely enough, answered not for himself but for his successor. The Governor-General in Council could not guarantee the continuance of the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court over the proposed new province as His Excellency did not wish to fetter the hands of his successor or successors in the matter. But he cares a fig to leave for his immediate successor a legacy of seething discontent that has assumed most formidable dimensions. We confess we are simply astonished at the want of the sense of appropriateness that marks the doings of Lord Curzon these days. His impotent rage caused by Lord Kitchener's triumph is being spent upon the Bengali with a fury that is simply uncalled for and paints him in a colour anything but viceregal and majestic. Lord Curzon came out with 'courage and sympathy' for his motto. He has all along shown 'courage' to deprive the people of the rights acquired and kept his fund of 'sympathy' for his kith and kin. He began with killing self-government in Bengal; he means to end with breaking Bengal in twain against the united voice of not only the people of Bengal but that of the entire Indian people.

The boycott movement which is really spreading like wild fire has already caught on. The Proclamation will help it to grow into gigantic proportions. What then? Mr. Maclean, M. P., feels from a distance that Manchester cannot sit quiet, because the breeches pocket of the Englishman is going to be touched. The Dundee Advertiser warns the British people against the unfathomable ways of the Oriental when he makes up his mind to do a thing, as America is learning to its bitterness in China at the present moment. Lord Curzon may greet all such talk with a broad grin, but not so the Manchester millowner. He will read with a searching of heart the following cautious lines in Capital: "There is still considerable talk in the bázár regarding the so-called boycott of Manchester goods in Bengal, and opinion seems pretty equally divided on the subject. Nevertheless the fact remains that the off-take of country-made cloths is very brisk, whilst demand for Manchester dhotis and saris, which ordinarily should now be fairly active, continues extremely slack." An Englishman knows how to put on a silver lining even to the darkest cloud. The "extremely slack" demand may mean a great deal more than what appears on the face of it. This has been followed by a series of telegraphic correspondence that passed between the Marwari Chamber of Commerce and the Manchester Chamber on the practical stoppage of the sale of piece-goods from Lancashire. The depth and intensity of the wish to use Indian-made articles has gone beyond the expectations of the most hopeful friends of the cause.

As to the forms of passive resistance Bengalis may develop on the lines of the Irish, none can say anything positively. But is it yet too late for Lord Curzon to undo his work? Lord Curzon who overflows with sympathy for Indian civilisation seems strangely cruel towards the heirs and inheritors of that civilisation; Lord Curzon who is seriously anxious to keep our historical buildings safe from the ravages of moths and time does not feel even a pang to send sharp arrows right through the heart of people whose forefathers reared the historical structures. In short, it seems Lord Curzon came to revive the past, but kill the present. He has most successfully killed his own reputation and shaken, let us hope not yet irrevocably, the Indian people's confidence in the Briton's sense of justice and love of constitutionalism. Surely the British Government in India is on the fair way to grow into an irresponsible body, whose principles and performances have begun to lose touch with each other. And Lord Curzon has brought the Government to such a miserable plight. The undoing is yet in his hands.

Verses on the Bengali boycott movement.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th September, publishes the following verses:—

THE BOYCOTT.

(With Apologies to the Author of Marmion.)

Why stands Bombay idly now,
And twin Madras with placid brow,
When Bengal's sons proclaim the while
The Boycott of the British Isle?
What checks our patriot's fiery souls?
Why sit they fancy-decked, like dolls,
Inactive in their chairs,
And see their brethren fight alone,
The fight which likewise is their own,
In this and oth'r affairs?
What 'vails vain editorial creeds?
Oh, Tata, for thy sterling deeds!
Mighty Tilak, for thy pen!

Oh for one hour of Gokhale bright,
Or subtle Wacha, to aid the fight,
And cry for "Union and our Right"!
Another sight would England see—
The once prostrate, upright and free!
The helpless land, a power be!
Shall precious hours pass in vain,
And Bengal carry the great campaign
Alone, unaided by her sisters still!
While tingods mock from Simla's hill?

A SWADESHI.

Madras.

SIPAHI,
5th September,
1905.

The Swadeshi movement in Bengal.

14. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 5th September, says that even in her present fallen condition India excels all other countries in piety, but Lord Curzon unwisely publicly advised the natives to refrain from the vice of lying. The fact is that men see motes in the eyes of others and overlook the beam in their own eyes. The Bengali has fully exposed the Viceroy in the matter of truth speaking and His Excellency will think twice before making any reference to true and false speaking in future. Lord Curzon is an Englishman and not a native or Japanese. During his own Viceroyalty he has delighted in dismembering Bengal. In the Indian Gazette of the 2nd September the Viceroy has published a Proclamation for the division of Bengal into two parts from the 16th October. Lord Curzon has placed many impediments in the progress of India. The natives being quite powerless His Lordship is bent on having everything his own way. If natives sunk their mutual differences and acted in unity and loyalty, to say nothing of Lord Curzon, even God would be ready to help them. Japan is an instance in point. The unity of Japan has induced Providence to extend a helping hand to her. The Marwari traders of Calcutta have sent a telegram to the Manchester mill-owners, informing them that their trade has been paralysed, and advising them to ask the Secretary of State to suspend the partition of Bengal, otherwise they must cancel all their indents. The Manchester firms have replied that they will hold a meeting on Monday to consider the subject. There is a great difference between the Indian and the British public. If an injustice were done to a single mill-owner in England all the other mill-owners would at once espouse his cause and bring pressure on Parliament to redress the wrong. The fact is that India is ruled by the sword, and England by evenly-balanced scales of justice. Apart from the question of the partition of Bengal natives should make a point of encouraging Indian industries. The use of foreign goods has impoverished the country and even led to a number of diseases. Public meetings should be held all over the country to induce the people to refrain from using foreign goods. A native who is found clad in foreign cloth from head to foot is an undutiful son of India, while others who patronize Indian goods are her true sons.

RAHBAR,
7th September,
1905.

The location of the Indian orderlies of the King-Emperor in England.

15. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th September, says that it is two years since King-Emperor Edward VII appointed some Indian soldiers as his orderlies. These Indian soldiers have hitherto been treated with special consideration and assigned big buildings for their residence. This special mark of honour to the Indian soldiers caused dissatisfaction among the Scotch orderlies of His Majesty, and they gave expression to their feelings. The result is that His Majesty has proposed to quarter his Indian orderlies also in houses of lesser pretentions. The authorities ought to have settled where the Indian soldiers were to be located at their appointment, and the writer thinks that having once quartered them in magnificent buildings it is heaping disgrace on them for the British Government to lodge them now in ordinary houses.

ALMORA AKHBAR,

Railway Conference.

16. The Almora Akhbár (Almora), of the 31st August, says that when a Commission is appointed to introduce any administrative reforms the matter at first remains unknown to the public. When the Commission has held its sittings for a short period and the members have drawn their pay, it transpires that the Commission has finished its inquiries and a report is in the press. But when the report sees the light it leads to no practical results. The Railway Conference which was lately held is reported to have done its work. It would seem that it was to improve the transport of goods by railway and to revise the rates of freight. It has been alleged that the Conference has recommended the appointment of a Secretary to the Railway Board on Rs. 1,500 a month. But it is difficult to understand how the Secretary will be able to attend to so many irons in the fire and how he will manage to be omnipresent at every railway station. Thus the Conference has only created a new fat berth for a European and nothing more. There is no hope for the stoppage of the abstraction of goods from parcels at railway stations until the station masters and their subordinates have been made responsible for the safety of the goods and required to pay compensation for any losses. When traders suffer any loss they will have no time to find out where the Secretary is at the time to wait on him and to prove to him their loss. The railway clerks should be very careful in receiving and delivering goods to traders.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, August, 1905.

Lord Curzon's resignation.

1. The Hindustán Review (Allahabad), for August, says :—Lord Curzon came an untried man in the field of constructive statesmanship, but then he was not a total stranger to this country; he had acquired private as well as official knowledge of the land and its people; he was in the vigour of youth, and he was known to be ambitious of fame. The speeches which he delivered in England as Viceroy-designate, preceded him to this country and gave rise to expectations that reconciled the people to their lot in hopes of a better future. No sooner did he land in this country than he took the whole of the educated classes by surprise, not so much by the dazzling gorgeousness of his language, great indeed as it is, as by the hopes which he kindled and the aspirations which he revived. It was understood that the storm was over, that we were in sight of calm and that if the wrongs done under his predecessor could not be undone, at least no further wrong would be allowed to be perpetrated. His famous speech at Bombay sounded a note entirely different from anything which the country had been accustomed to hear for many years past. The impression at once got abroad that public opinion was again going to be restored to its legitimate position of respect and confidence from which it had been dislodged. His address to the Taluqdars of Oudh, in which he exhorted officialdom to descend from its Olympian height of seclusion; his utterance at Gwalior where he told the Indian princes, in no unmistakable language, that thenceforward they were to look upon themselves not as pliant tools of a supreme will, but as partners in the duties and glories of the administration of the country; his first speech as Chancellor of the Calcutta University in which he opened out bright vistas of hope to the Indian graduates—these and some others at once caught the imagination of the people and invested him with the halo of a reformer striving after the realization of a lofty ideal. Anglo-India was in a rage, the officials foamed and fretted and the Anglo-Indian Press, finding itself deprived of the privilege of patting the Viceroy on the back, lashed itself into fury and indulged in prophecies of the evil day that was in store for the Government. The most pronounced official organ—the Pioneer of Allahabad—characterized the Viceroy as a Kaiser in miniature, with all the bluff and bombast of the prototype. If there was any unanimity upon any act of his, it was upon his famine administration; as for the rest the Indian and the Anglo-Indian opinions were as hopelessly divided as they always have been and as they will, in all likelihood, always be. Lord Curzon's sympathy with the natives of the country who were assaulted by European soldiers and the strong measures which he took to punish them—in one case a whole regiment—were looked upon by Anglo-Indians as outrages upon British prestige in the country.

Such was Lord Curzon in the beginning of his career in India—a strong though self-willed ruler, a man who spared neither himself nor his subordinates in the discharge of duty, and who raised hopes in the public mind by inviting public opinion. But the curtain falls, and by a shuffling of scenes, Lord Curzon appears on the stage in a new character. The people no longer recognise in him their old friend and inspirer of hopes. There is alarm at first, followed afterwards by suspicion; distrust comes next and the conviction—that the man who began as a friend is ending his connection with the country as the reviler of her people's character, the divider of their unity, and the smotherer of their liberties and hopes—becomes more and more deep-seated in the popular mind. A forgiving public had nearly spent its wrath over the passing of the Calcutta Municipal Act, when the convening of the Simla Educational Conference and the extreme secrecy which was observed about its proceedings sent a signal of alarm from one end of the country to the other. The Universities Commission followed and the alarm grew more intense. The debates in the Council over the unfortunate Universities Bill convinced the public mind that whatsoever room there might be for the improvement of education in this country, Lord Curzon's measure would only convert the Universities into so many departments of State and deprive them of that freedom and opportunity of organic growth which are the normal conditions of the existence and progress of all Universities. From the measure to the man there is but one step, and henceforward public opinion refused to swallow any more gilded pills that came from Lord Curzon's hands. If the new Universities Act could be described to be an indirect blow levelled at higher education in the country, the abolition of competitive test for the recruitment of the public services was the clearest indication that Lord Curzon had made up his mind to revive the good old days when favouritism and nepotism were rampant in the country, and that the graduates of this country might no longer have the satisfaction of earning their bread by dint of their talents, but that they must always remember that they are children of a larger growth to be fed or not to be fed according as the whim or caprice of the autocratic parent may for the moment be. It is an irony of fate that one of the finest products of University education, a man in whom the love of competition should be an instinct, should take it upon himself to strike at the root of Universities in India and place competition at a discount.

The famous resolution on the Land Revenue policy of the Government, the creation of new berths for Europeans, the gradual but steady elbowing out of the natives of the country from the public services, the passing into law of the Bill relating to Official Secrets in the teeth of the united opposition of Indian and Anglo-Indian opinion, and the unwarranted expedition to Tibet, all showed that the mainspring of Lord Curzon's conduct had been entirely changed, that what was a strength of character at first, had degenerated into perversity, and this perversity had bred in him a contempt for public opinion. Naturally the educated Indian community—the one articulate portion of the Indian population—lost all confidence in him. As if Lord Curzon had not done everything he could have done to make himself thoroughly unpopular with and disagreeable to the educated classes in India, he launched forth the scheme for the partition of Bengal. The whole of Bengal was amazed at the boldness of the scheme, and it is scarcely necessary to say that the Bengali mind has never been, since the country came under British rule, so much exercised about this attempt to break up the unity of their province. The part which Lord Curzon has played in this unfortunate controversy is one which might have suited any other person, but not the highest dignitary of the State. He conceived the idea in the plenitude of his autocratic powers; he expressed it in a manner which left no option to the Bengalis but to resent and protest against; and he pursued it in a fashion least consistent with the straightforwardness or dignity which ought to mark a Viceroy. Instead of conciliating the Bengali leaders he offended them by saying that the agitation in Bengal did not represent the true feelings of the people, and that it was entirely hollow and manufactured. This might have been very good party politics, it was scarcely statesmanship. Lastly his endeavour to reform the Police is distinctly characteristic of the man. Small increments in the pay of the indigenous agency, establishment of an inferior cadre for them but with further wider opening for Europeans, and a significant glossing over the question of the separation of the judicial and executive functions may be said to form the leading features of the much-talked-of and long-expected Police reform.

When Lord Curzon left the shores of this country on the expiry of his first term of office, he was at least a hero in the eyes of his countrymen, though he had forfeited the regard and esteem of those who had been committed to his charge. The people of this country had come to regard him as a man who began with pious intentions, but who had been spoilt by the very eminence of his position, and who was swayed by the master passion of glitter and pomp, whether in the Council Chamber or in the procession at the Delhi Durbar, where he found himself surrounded by the noblest and wealthiest of the land, apparently only too willing to render him such obeisance as they could not withhold from him. The feeling at his departure was one of temporary relief in this country. When, however, it was announced that he had accepted an extension of term, it was hoped that he might within the short space of time before him rehabilitate himself with the people whom he had almost exasperated. But an unkindly Fate seems to have dictated the acceptance of his second tenure of office. He had been in the country only a few days when his pet legislative measure, the Universities Act, gave rise to certain difficultes. With the characteristic official high-handedness it was considered possible in the Bombay University to carry a constitutional position by force, till at last some of the Fellows of the University, headed by Sir Pherozeshah Mehta, moved the High Court to give its verdict. A respecter of constitution and judicial freedom would have acted otherwise than did Lord Curzon. Instead of awaiting the result of the action at law, a Validating Bill was introduced and passed in the midst of a most stormy debate which Mr. Gokhale started in the Council. The entire country was of one mind, the entire Indian press withheld their support from the Government. But Lord Curzon had made up his mind; he would not and did not brook any opposition; he betrayed peevishness and a want of dignity; he even descended into personalities and the Bill was, of course, passed into law. As if he had not sufficiently vilified some of the leaders of the Indian community on that occasion, he widened his field of criticism the next day at the Convocation of the Calcutta University by reading a homily to all the Indian people upon ethics. Lord Curzon could not have chosen a more appropriate and effective manner of destroying his reputation as a wise and tactful ruler of a sensitive people than by telling them what he did tell them on that occasion. For the first time in the history of British rule in India, the country witnessed the unique spectacle of a whole nation organizing protest meetings against the conduct of the Governor-General. He had sown the wind and he must reap the whirlwind. The whole country rang from one end to the other with loud cries of protest. Men like Dr. Rashbehary Ghose and Pandit Bishambar Nath, came out of their seclusion to preside at these meetings—meetings, be it remembered not of school boys or college students, but of responsible men who might be called the brain and the voice of the country. Never before in the history of Birtish India had British statesmanship been brought into greater disrepute, and never before had popular censure of a ruler been more distinct and pronounced. It marked a permanent cleavage between Lord Curzon and this country. Had Lord Curzon offended and insulted the people of the Australian Commonwealth, or the inhabitants of Canada, it is not difficult to imagine what would have happened. The next steamer would have carried him back to the mother-country and the storm of popular indignation would have followed him even there. There would have been a sensation in England and his conduct have furnished a battle-cry to His Majesty's opposition in Parliament. But all that happened in that august assembly was that Mr. Brodrick came out with a disingenuous explanation and interpretation of the Governor-General's speech. Lord Curzon had aspersed the character of the Indian people, it remained for Mr. Brodrick to insult their intelligence. Hardly had the storms subsided when the new scheme of the partition of Bengal was thrust upon a people whose patience had already been exhausted. It has been followed by an agitation unparallelled in the history of the country. Hair-brained critics might belittle the form of popular agitation, but the fact will go down to history that the people of Bengal have demonstrated their discontent with the scheme as boldly and as unmistakably as any law-abiding subject people can show in a constitutional way. In a sense Lord Curzon has been the benefactor of the country. He has called into being, by his retrograde measures and repressive policy, the potential forces of public spirit and popular agitation, coupled with an unflinching determination on the part of the people to hold their own and to assert and stand by their rights, which would have lain dormant for many a year. He has thus given an impetus to political activity which not even the most prominent of popular leaders might have hoped to impart under ordinary circumstances. He has by his very attempt to divide the people of Bengal made them draw closer to one another. He has given the country a training in adversity and the fruits of adversity are not always bitter in the end.

Though Lord Curzon thus stood entirely discredited with the people, yet the climax or the anti-climax in his career had not yet arrived. It arrived with the despatch of Mr. Brodrick on the military administration. It was in truth a complete discomfiture of Lord Curzon, and it was the victory of Lord Kitchener. For once the politician was beaten by the soldier. But though beaten, public sympathy for obvious reasons, did not hesitate to enlist itself on his side. Had he at once exercised proper discretion and tendered his resignation, he would have gone back with something of the halo and glory of a martyr. But he denied himself even the crown of thorns which was then within his reach. He stayed on, on Mr. Brodrick's acceptance of the so-called modifications, but has chosen to fight over a petty question. Having accepted the policy of his employers, he chose to dictate to them who should be the instrument of their will. What do the long telegraphic despatches which have had to be published disclose? Nothing which does credit to Lord Curzon. He has clearly attempted to ride rough-shod over principles of constitution. He has asserted himself when he ought to have obeyed. If he could get two members of his Council to his liking, why could not he get a third as well. Like a spoilt child, he presumed too much upon the pliancy of his old friend, Mr. Brodrick, for the fulfilment of his wishes. He has shown temper, obstinacy and peevishness which usually accompany defeat and disappointment. Mr. Brodrick, on the other hand, has surpassed himself in making a display of toleration, dignity, and courteous firmness. As put by the Pioneer, Lord Curzon has by his "melancholy mal-adroitness" placed himself hopelessly in the wrong and his opponents in the right. The Barrow incident has been his wrong trump and it has lost him the game. Who feels sorry for the result? Surely not the people of this country. They have received the news of his departure—to put it mildly—with a sigh of relief. The educated Indians are jubilant over the issue of the controversy, not because it is Lord Kitchener's victory, but because it means the discomfiture of one who has traduced their character, who has narrowed the circle of their ambitions and aspirations, who has done everything in fact to retard their progress by quite half a century. Possibly contemporary Indian opinion is wrong, possibly the future historian will pass a different verdict. But there it is, and it cannot be altogether ignored just at present. And yet it is impossible not to feel regret at the sudden fall of Lord Curzon, which, as the Pioneer writes, "reminds one rather of the fall of Wolsey than of the occurrences of our own hum-drum times." What splendid opportunities has he not missed to do permanent good to this country! What splendid powers has he not misapplied! What hopes did he not kindle and what hopes has he not crushed! He might have left this country as a hero, in the midst of the popular regret as did the righteous Ripon. He might have gone back possessing the confidence of the Indian subjects of His Majesty. He is now leaving the country shorn of their confidence as also of the confidence of those who sent him out. Had he retired last year, his career would have merited a less severe verdict. He purchased his second tenure of office at too great a cost. He came in sunshine, and he is leaving under a cloud. And, what is worse than all, he is leaving behind him a memory which will always recall some of the darkest associations. The present generation of Indians will always remember him as a ruler whose very strength proved his weakness and his failure. Nor, it is to be hoped, will the lessons of Lord Curzon's administration be lost upon his successor, who may do worse than ignore the moral it points. If Lord Minto will but constantly keep in view the fact, standing out in such bold relief, that Lord Curzon's failure has been due to his lack of appreciation of the popular side of questions, his studied contempt for Indian public opinion, his overpowering ambition to treat a country with a long past as a tabula rasa on which to scribble at pleasure, and above all his complete absence of sympathy with the grievances and the aspirations of the educated classes, he may well hope to succeed where the present Viceroy has failed. Energy, industry and zeal for reform are all very well and are no doubt desirable concomitants of a Viceroy, but the quality essential for success, above all others, is a sympathetic appreciation of the popular view and a sincere desire to raise the people higher in the scale of nations, not only by means of "administrative efficiency," but by conferring on them such political rights and privileges as their educational and economic progress might justify. Herein lay the secret of the strength and success of Lord Ripon, herein is to be found the true explanation of the "failure of Lord Curzon."

SANSAR MITRA,
September, 1905.

Lord Curzon's resignation.

2. The Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), for September, says that the manner in which Lord Curzon ruled India for (about) seven years, caused much heart-burning among the Indians, and struck, as it were, terror in them, the latter having specially grown sick of His Lordship's missions and commissions. To make the Coronation Darbár at Delhi a grand imposing affair, he induced the Native Chiefs to incur such heavy expenses during their sojourn there, as have almost crushed them. He gagged the Press by passing the Official Secrets Act. He not only passed the Universities Act, an iniquitous measure that it was, but he also abused the Indians in the course of his speech delivered at the Convocation of the Calcutta University. In this way he went on causing grave annoyance and dissatisfaction to the people, till he ended by devising the partition of Bengal, in utter disregard of the public opinion of the country. The ultimate result of all this has been what it should be. His reputation, honour, dignity and position have received a heavy blow. The curse of the distressed has overtaken him; so that circumstances have arisen compelling him to resign the viceroyalty and go home covered with disgrace. He thus closes his career in India just in the same way as the sun, having blazed fiercely when on the meridian, goes down in the evening (shorn of his beams). Had Lord Curzon resigned and gone home at once when the British Ministry supported Lord Kitchener's Army administration scheme to which he was opposed, he would have lost no ground in public estimate; but he repeatedly avoided resigning, until circumstances grew too strong to admit of his shilly-shallying any further, which must necessarily reflect discredit on him.

Lord Curzon as Viceroy of India.

3. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 17th September says:—Let us say that with all his good and bad qualities which his critics attribute to Lord Curzon, he has been a good Governor of India. He is no doubt one of the best and the one who stopped the longest of any of his predecessors.

Question of the disposal of the Government grant to the Allahabad University.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th September, says:—We have said that the meetings of the local University Senate are held behind the pardah, and that consequently we are not enabled to know much of their transactions. Now and then, however, we manage to see a little of the game from behind the curtain and then we faithfully portray the picture for the benefit of our readers. At the last meeting of the Senate we are told that the question of the Government grant to the University was under discussion, and are glad to learn that the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya succeeded in persuading the Senate to request Government to give it a voice in the disposal of the one and one-third lakhs of rupees granted to it. The Government would seem to intend spending a good deal of this, by no means too large a sum of money, on the purchase of the Darbhanga Castle, the construction of quarters for the Registrar, and such other objects. Without questioning the utility of these it may be said that they are not altogether the most urgent of needed educational reforms, and it does seem to be wiser to devote a major portion of the grant to more immediately useful purposes. We trust the Senate's appeal will be favourably considered by the Government.

Results of the recommendations of the Irrigation Commission.

5. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 12th September, observes that it has become a characteristic feature of the Bengali press to pass adverse comments on the doings of the British officers in general, and on the policy of Lord Curzon in particular. But what surprises Al Bashír is that a respectable paper (of these Provinces) should have lately questioned the utility of the Irrigation Commission appointed by Lord Curzon, asserting that it uselessly entailed an expenditure of Rs. 10,92,444 on the Indian treasury. Surely this paper ought to have remembered that the sanction of ten crores of rupees for the construction of Jhelum and Chenab canals in the Panjab was given on the recommendation of the Irrigation Commission. The Sarda Canal project in the United Provinces, the Sindh Canal Scheme in the Panjab and the Tangbhadra Canal in Madras, and other equally useful irrigation measures, are also, as the result of the deliberations of the said Commission, to be taken in hand as funds become available. To condemn the Irrigation Commission as an unprofitable business in the face of these glaring facts is preposterous. In an agricultural country like India, the appointment of the Irrigation Commission was an unmixed blessing, and Lord Curzon cannot be sufficiently thanked for the special attention he has paid to the question of increasing the means of irrigation.

Impending famine and impoverishment of the country.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
14th September,
1905.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th September, says :—We think it is now quite evident that a large tract of the country has to pass through another famine of intense severity. There was hardly a couple of years' plenteous harvest for India after the last great famine when she has again to face the gravest of national problems. That a single failure of the seasonal rainfall should produce so much popular misery and starvation is the most crushing indictment of the economic policy of British rule in India. Formerly also there were droughts, but the people had some staying power. They had their grain stores and money enough to purchase food in times of scarcity. Now, however, all that is changed. The British Government has drained away so much of the wealth of the country and exacts so much from the people in the shape of taxation out of all proportion to their means, that though there is ample food in the country the poor peasant and the poorer labourer have not an anna to buy food with when once the monsoon proves treacherous. Hardly a satisfactory result this of a century and a half of British rule for rulers of the Curzon type to be proud of!

Partition of Bengal.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
7th September,
1905.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 7th September, in an article headed "Curzon's curse," says :—This is how the Indian Nation, which officialdom does not include among the so-called rabid section of the Indian Press, refers to the partition of Bengal. Even after his resignation under peculiarly painful circumstances, even after his fall from his high estate, when he is a functus officio in all but name; even under these circumstances, Lord Curzon has felt himself unable to show some deference and respect for outraged public feeling. He has inflicted his parting blow on the fairest province of India and has thus alienated public feeling from the British Government to a larger extent than any previous Governor General. To His Excellency it is nothing if reason and justice are not on his side, and less than nothing if a unanimous public voice condemns his policy, and his measures as at once unwise, unstatesmanlike and unjust. He has no respect for the spirit of the constitution, and sees nothing inconsistent between his own governing the country in a perfectly autocratic and reckless manner and his high-sounding and seemingly earnest protest against the establishment of a military autocracy. Nor does the superior lord of Kedleston seem to care a brass button for his own reputation. Has he even paused for a minute to consider in the privacy of his chamber, between waking hour and sleeping hour, what enormous and it may be irreparable damage he has done to his own reputation as a statesman and as a sincere man, by the consistent and we fear wilful disregard of his own plighted word he exhibits in his acts? But this is neither here nor there. What is of most consequence to us is that by his obstinacy and his un-English tendencies he has succeeded in inflicting the most considerable damage on our country. Never a particularly energetic or public-spirited people, is it not a great pity that our educated countrymen have to expend most if not the whole of their energy in efforts to regain lost ground? One should have thought that it was too late in the day for any statesman, however jingoistic he might be, to assail the liberty of the press and higher education: the Viceroy who began by advertising his love of India and his determination to respect public opinion has achieved both these feats. Military expenditure stood at so high a figure when Lord Elgin laid down the reins of office that one might have hoped rather for a reduction in the same in the time of his noble successor: Lord Curzon has added to it by leaps and bounds taking improper advantage of his currency surpluses, has justified that increased expenditure by the utterance of much alarmist cant year after year from his place in the Viceroy's Council, and really paved the way for the establishment of that military dictatorship against which he has had to inveigh so ineffectually and which has begun by terminating his own despotic career. His policy as regards the North-West frontier at the outset created great hope in the public mind that the 'forward' policy was at last dead: His Lordship has really revived it with a vengeance by sending his political mission to Kabul, his commercial mission to Persia, and his Maxim mission to Tibet. His Excellency, who has been the Government of India ever since he came, has really produced so much harm by his thoughtless and perverse acts that we do not think it an exaggeration to say that his administration has been one long-drawn out agony.

If this is the description we feel ourselves justified in giving to Lord Curzon's administration as a whole, words fail us to characterise in adequate language his contemptuous disregard of Bengal public opinion in the matter of the dismemberment of that prosperous province. We decline, now and here, to enter into anything like a detailed consideration of the merits of the partition controversy. It is enough to us that a unanimous public opinion has condemned the Government's proposals in the most unmistakable language. Bengalis regard the partition as a political measure aimed at their progress which will be productive of direful consequences. They may be right in their apprehensions, or they may not be; we ourselves are convinced they are right. But assuming they were wrong, what then? Should the opinions, the wishes, the aspirations, the feelings, the sentiments of millions of people go for nothing at all? Does Lord Curzon alone know what is good for the people of Bengal or even for British rule? Unless and until the points made by Sir Henry Cotton in his memorable Town Hall speech of January last will be answered satisfactorily by the author or the apologists of what our Bengali fellow-countrymen regard as an 'act of vandalism,' and with the very pertinent and necessary question of the elected members of the Bengal Legislative Council left unanswered, we decline to believe that a tittle of reason can be adduced in favour of the foolish partition project. And if it will be actually carried out in defiance of public opinion and without reasons being assigned, if flagrant despotism will be perpetrated merely because a single person takes it into his head to carry out a perverse wish which has taken fatal possession of him in a cursed moment, wherein does British rule differ from Russian or Turkish misrule, and where will be the inducement to educated or uneducated Indians to be loyal and devoted to that rule? By the adverse economic policy the British have deliberately pursued since the commencement of their connection with India, they have succeeded, God knows, remarkably well, in impoverishing the country and its people as never before they were. The educated classes who alone understand and stand to gain by the particular virtues which are supposed to differentiate British from Russian or Turkish rule, have been considered by the wisest of Anglo-Indian statesmen to be the mainstay of British Indian rule. How can they continue to be so attached to the British Government in future if they will be treated as a less than negligible factor in the economy of the British Government as Lord Curzon has taken a silly pride in treating them? We as loyal subjects of the Crown and as convinced supporters of British rule as tending to the ultimate regeneration of India, confess with sorrow, with pain, aye with a very real agony, that we cannot satisfactorily answer this question.

Now that our public meetings and Press criticisms standing by themselves have proved ineffectual to influence the decision of Government, what are educated Indians to do? It is evident of course that they cannot retire into their tents. They love their motherland too dearly to commit that suicidal mistake. Nor can they resort to methods other than constitutional: this goes against their grain as they are loyal to the British rule and as their anxiety is not to support that rule but to get it so reformed as to 'nationalise' it. Two things are clear without need of demonstration : they must keep up their constitutional agitation, and they cannot afford to be content with their meetings and speeches and writings. Passive resistance will be the last resort as the English Nonconformists have shown us. Meantime we have faith in the boycott movement so skilfully initiated and being so successfully prosecuted by our intelligent friends of Bengal. One has only to read the Bengali papers for a couple of days to be satisfied of the reality of the boycott movement. The Calcutta dealers in Manchester piecegoods are already reported to have lost to the tune of fifty lakhs of rupees, and they are afraid they will lose much more. The boycott movement has penetrated into the remotest nooks and corners of the entire province of Bengal, and stands excellent chance of success. The movement has spread farther than that large province, and we wish it all success. No greater mistake can be committed than to suppose that the partition of Bengal is a measure only of provincial importance; in that a grosser and more deliberate outrage of public opinion has never been perpetrated in a national question of paramount and burning importance. The leaders of public opinion in provinces other than Bengal will not only be convicting themselves of not feeling that inter-provincial sympathy which we insist is at the bottom of the growth of the sentiment of Indian nationality, but be committing a great and sad political mistake if they will not energetically and promptly second the efforts of their brethren of Bengal in what they believe to be their sorest trial. The entire country from end to end must ring with one indignant cry of protest against this intolerable Curzonism. We are passing through a dark period in our national history, and we have a presentiment that much of our future will depend on the way in which we acquit ourselves now. God help Bengal, and all India, in the dire misfortunes that have overtaken them in such quick succession!

Al Bashir on the Bengal Partition Proclamation.

AL BASHIR,
12th September,
1905.

8. Al Bashir (Etáwah), of the 12th September is glad to notice that Government has published in the official Gazette a Proclamation constituting Assam and Eastern Bengal into a new province with effect from the 16th October next. It can hardly be supposed that the Bengalis will, with this final settlement of the question of the partition of Bengal, keep quiet. On the other hand, considering their natural tendencies, it will not probably be wrong to predict that they will now indulge in still more uproarious and childish demonstrations. The editor, however, would praise Lord Curzon for his resolute mind and unyielding policy.

The Bengal Partition Proclamation, and a suggestion to establish a Hindu-Muhammadan fraternity in Eastern Bengal.

CITIZEN,
11th September,

9. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 11th September, condemning Lord Curzon's alleged undue haste in issuing the Proclamation for the partition of Bengal, says:—The evils of separation have been frequently dwelt upon and they need not be repeated. The question now is, Will Bengal be able to counteract those evils? To terminate the growing friendship beween the Hindus and Muhammadans in Bengal has been one of the objects of partition. Let all Bengalis resolve to frustrate at least this object. The Muhammadans predominate in Eastern Bengal. Let, therefore, a Hindu-Muhammadan fraternity be founded and let its object be to promote by all practicable means real and lasting friendship between the two communities. Bengali is now considered to be their mother tongue by the Bengal Muhammadans and many of them write and speak as good Bengali as any of the Hindu Bengalis. Thus literary culture may also furnish a general ground for the union of the two communities.

The people of united Bengal will henceforth be placed under two different Governments. But in discussion of political matters they should never fail to lay hold of every opportunity to work conjointly and in harmony. Let Calcutta continue to be their meeting place as heretofore for the purpose of political discussions and confabulations. Let the Eastern Bengalis never consider that they have been weaned from their brothers of the West, but must continue to look to Calcutta for light and guidance. Divided politically, let them be united more at heart and form the resolution, come what may, they shall rise or fall together.

Proposal for the formation of a Municipal and Provincial League in Calcutta.

CITIZEN
11th September,
1905.

10. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 11th September says:—The public will learn with interest, and we think with no little satisfaction, says the Statesman, that the proposal in reference to the formation of a Municipal and Provincial League, made in Capital a day or two ago, is being vigorously taken up.

The suggestion, it will be remembered, was that a public meeting should be called for the purpose of recording a united protest against the Partition scheme, and that afterwards the league should be organised for permanent work in connection with the regular affairs of the city and province. The response, on both the European and the Indian sides, has been immediate and cordial. Apart from the Partition question, upon which public opinion has concentrated rapidly during the past few weeks, it is recognised that the work of the local government presents a large area of common ground upon which Europeans and Indians may unite. In these matters the interests of the non-official public are largely independent of race feeling. The Indian no less than the European citizen is concerned in the standard of purity and efficiency—low enough in many cases—attained by the municipal government and by the general character of the provincial administration, and both communities are alike concerned in the maintenance of constitutional rights against the pretensions of a too-powerful executive.

DEWA NAGARI GAZETTE,
September, 1905.

The Swadeshi movement.

11. The Dewa Nágari Gazette (Meerut), for September, referring to the Swadeshi movement in Bengal, says that if the people of other provinces also followed this noble and patriotic example of the Bengalis, and solemnly pledged themselves to exclusively use India-made articles, it would surely give a rude awakening to foreign traders. The treatment of the Indians by the white foreigners is simply reprehensible. They subsist upon the wheat produced by Indians, but their conduct towards them is quite devilish. It is a matter for great regret indeed that while the Indians who work hard in the fields to produce food-stuffs should have to starve, the white foreign merchants live in clover at their expense. It is high time that the people of the United Provinces roused themselves from their deep sleep of indifference, and took a lesson from their white rulers in the matter of patronizing the manufacturers of their own country. The writer in conclusion says that the Bengalis, who have taken the lead in the matter, should remain firm in their resolve to eschew foreign goods altogether, and God will surely help them.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

The Swadeshi movement in Allahabad.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 7th September, says :—Inter-provincial sympathy is the keynote of nationality, and we think it time that provinces other than Bengal took steps to publicly express the sympathy which we know they are really feeling for their countrymen of Bengal. No doubt several meetings have already been held for this purpose—at Poona, Bombay, Nagpur, Rawalpindi, &c.,—but it is a united national demonstration that is now called for. Two meetings have been held at Allahabad—one of Bengalis only, and the other a general meeting particularly about the Swadeshi movement. We have reason to believe that a meeting of the Indian students of the city is about to be held in furtherance of the Swadeshi movement. But a public meeting of the citizens is what is wanted, and we appeal to the leading members of the Indian community in our city to take steps in this direction.

ADVOCATE,
10th September,
1905.

The Swadeshi movement outside Bengal.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 10th September, says :—In all important towns of Upper India the Swadeshi movement is the subject of talk. Steps are being taken to form societies for the sale of country-made goods in order to meet the popular demand. Limited Liability Companies are in course of formation, and it is expected that in many a town, the companies will soon be doing good business. This activity outside Bengal at this juncture when there is so much talk about boycott might lead to certain conclusions and might frighten away gentlemen in Government service from joining the movement. Hence it is necessary to explain that the movement has no political significance whatsoever as far as these provinces are concerned. It is true that the growth of popular feeling in Bengal towards Swadeshism has given a sudden impetus to the movement that had been silently working in these provinces, but it is quite unconnected with any political motive and agitation. At Allahabad as the Honourable Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya who presided over last Monday's meeting said, it began in the seventies and eighties. Its first outcome, the Deshi Tijarat Company, was established some twenty-five years ago. Its failure discouraged people. For a long period all efforts were stupefied. Some two years ago again attempts were made to float a company about which consultations were going on with our usual dilatoriness. Then suddenly the partition agitation in Bengal drew popular attention towards it, and on floating the company money poured in, the most part being subscribed by non-Bengalis. In Lucknow the company which is about to be floated with a large capital has been in a state of incubation for years. Smaller towns feel that the demand for country-made cloth should be encouraged and starving Julahas and Koris made to work at the improved hand-loom. The greatest proof of the genuineness of the movement is furnished by the success of different factories started by certain Japan-returned students for the purpose of constructing hand-looms. Mr. Muhammad Shafi of Ludhiana is making large profits from the concern. We mention these facts to remove misunderstanding in quarters where it is likely to cause serious mischief to the movement by rousing class feeling, as also to impress on the supporters of the Swadeshi movement that their interest in the movement is not limited to this or that policy of the Government. It is a deliberate resolve to improve the economic condition of the country and to find work for people who, owing to the decay of their industries, have taken to agricultural pursuits. Swadeshism as a cult has to be encouraged as a partriotic resolve to use country-made articles, and it is this cult which has to be preached from every house-top. This means ill-feeling towards nobody, no rousing of hatred or class-feeling towards anybody or class of persons. It means a desire to supply our own needs by manufacturing them in the country and to husband the country's resources, and has thus no political significance. The Swadeshi movement is one of those few movements which ought to bring people of all classes and of opinions on one common platform and rouse in them the feeling of patriotism and love for the mother-country. After the above was in type we read an interesting article in the Indian Mirror on the same subject and were glad to note that these sentiments are shared by our Calcutta friends. We have to run this movement very carefully and cautiously. We will take care that the movement which has received a sudden impetus in the last few weeks grows in strength and the enthusiasm for it does not flag.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
10th September, 1905.

The boycott movement in Bengal.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th September publishes the following communication from a Calcutta correspondent :—The interval between my last letter and this has been a pretty long one. But events in Calcutta have lately been moving so fast and the monotony of our existence has been enlivened by so many new experiences, surprises and denouements that we have naturally got somewhat out of breath. The currents and counter-currents that have been lately here, distributing the stream of life in Calcutta and fighting one another in their course, have invaded the inmost recesses and darkest buttresses of our social citadel and most of us have been caught in the swirl and carried completely off our feet. Brer Babu has, like President Krüger, for once staggered humanity. He has shown a capacity for united action and doggedness of purpose of which his kindest friends have never believed him capable. He has so long been considered a boaster and braggart who carried far more soil than ballast and talked by the yard the arrantest nonsense and the most sickening twaddles. Speech-making and phrase-coining was considered his one strong point and action, his most particular bugbear and bogey. I cannot honestly say that I myself thought any better of my people, or that they themselves had any adequate idea of their own capacity and strength. Well, it seems that we did not know ourselves, that in appraising our own flesh and blood at so low a rate of valuation we were a little more than kin and less than kind to our kind. Some miracle has lately been at work in our midst. Or, how is it that the people have risen like one man at their country's call—an unprecedented enough circumstance in itself—and unanimously tabooed foreign goods. Even our travelled folks whose be-all and end-all of life was at one time the aping of the foreigner in every detail of dress and deportment have cast in their lot with the boycott movement and renounced their false gods with book, bell and candle, so to say. It has become quite a dangerous thing to sell foreign goods in this province. Not that anyone who is not dead to all feeling of shame, now-a-days wants to buy them. But there are always black sheep in every fold, and a handful few could still be found who hanker for the fleshpots of Egypt. But they have to indulge this sneaking partiality for foreign fripperies and baubles sub rosa and with as much secrecy as murder, robbery or any other heinous crime. Finding foreign goods a glut in the market most dealers in such goods have gone in for country manufactures. Even half-price and quarter-price sales at foreign firms have failed to draw. A strict watch is kept outside for secret purchasers, and none who values the integrity of his own limbs or the good opinion of his neighbours, dares to go in for dear life. If anyone is caught in the street or on the cars carrying foreign goods of any kind—newly-purchased dhoties, kiranees' shoes and such like things—he is at once set upon by one or more prowling youths of the boycott party who have bound themselves into vigilance committees and go about scouring the bye-ways and highways in search of possible traitors, asked to name his price for the rubbish carried by him, is paid the money, and then eased of his previous belongings in the twinkling of a bed-post. The forfeited goods are then torn in pieces—they call it "partitioning" out of respect for the Viceroy of "partition" fame—a match is struck and applied to the heap and before you would say Jack Robinson you find the whole blessed affair burning and blazing away for all it is worth and being reduced to ashes. This much for new foreign goods which have all but ceased to sell. As for old goods in the possession of people, they too, are not spared. The fact of their having already been paid for makes no difference to the boycotters. These goods have been coming very pat and handy in lighting and feeding with fuel the many bonfires with which young Bengal has been celebrating Bengal's coming deliverance from Lord Curzon's galling yoke. This savours of fanaticism no doubt, as pointed out by some wiseacre who thinks that the confiscated and rejected goods (for which foreign traders have already pocketed good value) should not be destroyed but utilized for purposes of charity so as to save the poorest classes the necessity of buying foreign goods for the Durga Pujah—such goods alone being within their means. But fanaticism is not altogether without its uses ; it is essentially necessary to the success of a cause which has to appeal to the populace and draw live sparks from a dead and inert mass like what we are. It would not do to bring the cold light of logic to bear upon popular enthusiasm of this kind. That will be like putting a wet blanket on the spirits and killing their newly awakened ardour. Don't let us, therefore, argue whether foreign goods have been paid for as we set them on fire, for that matter all foreign goods in the market have already been paid for so far as their foreign exporters are concerned, and those who would be the first to suffer from the boycott are Marwari and Bengali importers. But even at the risk of hurting our own kith and kin we must not touch these goods, so that if not this year at least the next the foreign exporter may find his occupation gone. Down with foreign goods is the battle-cry which has been able to "pitch" our apathetic people. It has touched the right chord in them and the heart of the whole nation is, in consequence, throbbing in unison. What was once a wild dream has become a stern reality. With the hour has come the man, the man that so long lay hiding behind the nation. The rallying-cry, down with foreign goods, has called forth the slumbering manhood of Bengal. If we let that cry abate by one jot or budge from our stand-point by the breadth of a hair, we are bound to have the whole thing toppling over and falling about our ears like a house of cards. Those who came to scoff at the boycott movement have since remained to pray for its speedy dissolution. They now know that the Bengali means business and are, therefore, casting about for some means by which the bumptious Babu could best be baulked of his boycotting revenge. Manchester has taken fright and would have given a lively quart a'huere to the Ministry if Parliament had not been in recess. The local Anglo-Indian community is also in a blue funk. But Capital has hit upon a happy plan of campaign to bring about the collapse of the boycott movement. Anglo-Indians (in pursuance of this plan) have discovered a sudden anxiety to join Bengalis in an alliance of offence and defence against the Government. The idea is to start at once an Indo-European Provincial and Municipal League for fighting Government in defence of the just rights—common rights of Europeans, The idea is not half bad, nor is it a novel idea by a long way. Indians had been the first to ask Anglo-Indians to join them in their demands for the franchise and other rights of citizenship from which both of them were alike excluded. But Anglo-Indians only laughed at them for their pains. How is it, then, that they make the same offer to us themselves at a time when we are moving heaven and earth to ruin them financially ? The offer comes to us in such a questionable shape that we must look further into it before we make any response one way or the other.

Suggestion for boycotting English liquor along with other foreign articles.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 10th September, 1905.

15. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th September, says:—We most heartily and earnestly sympathise with the excellent and timely suggestion made by a correspondent of the Bengalee that a crusade against English liquor may usefully and appropriately be made a part of the present boycott movement. * * *

We trust our temperance organizations will make good use of the present state of the public mind to promote their sacred cause.

Evil consequences of some of the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act.

ZAMINDAR-WA-KASHTKAR, August, 1905.

16. The Zamíndár-wa-Káshtkár (Bijnor), for August, says that the Government has lately been making enquiries from principal landholders why (1) the tenantry have, since the enactment of the Agra Tenancy Act, been giving up the cultivation of land and taking to work as labourers, and (2) why there has been a large increase in ejectment suits. The fact of the matter is that Sir Antony MacDonnell, the late Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces, wilfully persisted in passing the Tenancy Act in the face of the strong opposition of the public who urged that the measure was calculated to prove highly injurious to the interests of both the tenants and landholders, and the result of the Act has been what it was expected to be. According to one of the provisions of this Act if a tenant ejected from one holding is given another (in the same village) the continuation of his tenure will be held to be uninterrupted for the purposes of acquiring occupancy rights. This provision induces landholders to refuse any other land in his village to ejected tenants, and the inevitable result is that ejected tenants, failing to obtain land for cultivation, become day-labourers. Similarly the provision which requires a regular suit to be filed before a tenant can be ejected has not only increased the work of Revenue Courts, but has unnecessarily burdened both the landholder and the tenant with its cost which they had not to bear before, formerly a mere notice sufficing for the purpose. To prevent the accrual of occupancy rights, a landlord could, without going to a court, make a tenant give up his holding for the time being and take another under the former Act. But this exchange of one holding for another by mutual agreement has been interdicted by the new law, and this is the root of all the evil that has sprung up between the landlord and the tenant, and has so strained the relations between them.

VI.—RAILWAY.

The Punjab Mail on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th September, 1905.

17. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th September, expresses surprise that the Punjab Mail on its way from Lucknow to Mughal Sarai viâ Rae Bareli does not halt at any station between Lucknow and Rae Bareli, which is necessarily a source of great public inconvenience, especially as many taluqdárs and their relatives have to travel between Lucknow and Rae Bareli. The train should halt at all events at the Nigohan station where the passengers' traffic is a pretty large one. A few minutes' halt could not disturb the railway arrangements while it would remove a great public inconvenience. The editor also draws attention to the matter that at a large junction station like the Aligarh Station the platform tickets are not supplied.

Misconduct of a Eurasian ticket collector.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th September, 1905.

18. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th September, says that the appointment of Europeans and Eurasians as ticket-collectors is greatly recommended in some quarters, but as a matter of fact they ill-treat native passengers, however respectable they may be, and do not fear even the station masters and other station officials. Lately a Eurasian ticket-collector challenged a passenger on the ground that he had too much luggage. He showed the railway receipt for the freight he had paid. However the ticket-collector was not satisfied and his luggage was weighed. The station master discharged the passenger and allowed him to go. This drew tears from the eyes of the ticket-collector who being crestfallen told the station master that the man had given him impertinent replies. On this the station master again sent for the passenger and unjustly charged him some freight simply to preserve the prestige of the ticket-collector. In view of such incidents the employment of native ticket-collectors is much better, inasmuch as they pay attention to the wants and wishes of native passengers and duly fear their European superiors.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th September, 1905.

Need for zenana sheds at Kathgodam and Haldwani Railway stations.

19. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th September, says that a large number of respectable natives who visit Naini Tal every year are accompanied by the female members of their families, but there being no zenana passengers' shed at Kathgodam and Haldwani respectable native ladies are exposed to great inconvenience. The ordinary passengers' shed is far off from the railway station, and again latrines are similarly situated from the passengers' shed. It is therefore very difficult for respectable ladies to walk all the way from the railway station to the passengers' shed and from thence to the latrines. Moreover, they have to sit long at the shed amidst strangers. Again, tongas and dandis are available for European ladies at the station, but these conveniences are not provided for native ladies. The Traffic Superintendent of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway should provide zenana sheds at the railway stations above referred to.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th September, 1905.

A suggestion for the introduction of platform tickets at the smaller stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

20. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th September, says that the platform tickets are available at the larger stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, but not at the smaller ones. Consequently when any zenana ladies arrive at a smaller station by the railway train they have to bear great trouble and inconvenience to alight from the train and find their way to the conveyance outside the station if their male friends who have come to receive them are not admitted to the platform, as may easily be imagined. In the absence of platform tickets admission to the platform depends on the sweet will of the station masters. Either the platform tickets should be abolished altogether and there should be free admission to platforms, or such tickets should be also introduced at the smaller stations.

SHRI RAGHAVENDRA,
September, 1905.

Revd. G. Hibbert Ware of Delhi on the prospects of Christianity.

21. The Shri Raghavendra (Allahabad) for September, says that Revd. G. Hibbert Ware of the S. P. G. and Cambridge Mission at Delhi in his report to his mission considers the question what facilities there are at present for the spread of Christianity in India and what measures the Christian missions should adopt in future to promote the cause. After quoting an extract from the report, the editor says that it will be observed that the more India is adopting the Western civilization, the more lamentable the condition of the country and of the Indian religion becomes. As it is, the natives of light and leading have become slaves to Western civilization. The reverend gentleman advises the mission to prepare a book bringing home to the natives that at last the time has come for the regeneration of the people, but that regeneration depends on their imitating Western ideas which the spread of English education will enable them to do easily. The reverend gentleman says that the natives have already shown a tendency to cultivate unity and to adopt a common language for the whole of the country, and fancies that ere long a desire may grow up among them for the adoption of a common religion. Considering the circumstances he is led to think that this common religion will be no other than Christianity. But the editor thinks that the clergyman is building castles in the air. The spread of English education and civilization has only created among the natives an undue love for liberty. The children are now loath to respect and obey their parents and servants their masters. Supposing for the sake of argument that natives will adopt the Christian faith. Then they will be required to abide by the rules and ordinances of that religion. But in their present mood when they are unable to bear the yoke of their own religion they can hardly be expected to like that of any other's religion.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th September
1905.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale, President-designate of the coming National Congress at Benares.

1. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 17th September, says:—Mr. Gokhale has had an exceptionally distinguished career and his admiring and grateful countrymen grow never weary of rendering honour to him. Under his auspices the Benares Session of the Congress is bound to prove of more than ordinary interest. We are passing through critical times. In the felicitous and earnest language of the orator of the Congress, "We have very arduous duties before us. There is no mistake that we stand face to face with one of the greatest crises which have developed themselves in the history of this country. We are at the parting of the ways. Our rulers, after having pursued a career of beneficence for more than half a century, seem all on a sudden to be staggered at the marvellous success of their own work. They pause, they hesitate, they linger, they would fain go back." The times are exceptional, and whoever accepts the Presidentship of the Congress this particular year must review in a responsible and comprehensive manner the seven years of Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty, and restate the ideals and aspirations of the educated classes of the country in view of the situation created by Lord Curzon's rule. At such a crisis we need careful and wise statesmanlike guidance, and we feel convinced that the Congress will have such guidance from our honourable and distinguished friend. He combines in a really unique manner the 'three most essential qualities of unswerving devotion to the Congress cause, unquestionable loyalty, and, what is above all, the most unblemished personal character.' We find all these qualities, and 'modesty, moderation and judgment, combined with high intellectual ability' in the President the Benares Reception Committee has elected.

ADVOCATE,
17th September,
1905.

Appointment of Deputy Superintendents of Police in the United Provinces.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 17th September, says:—We have been waiting for all these months to learn how the Local Government intends giving effect to the recommendations of the Police Commission in the matter of the appointments of Deputy Superintendents. There has been no meeting of the Legislative Council this summer. Hence even through some non-official members of the Council information could not be asked for. We hope the Government will soon place the necessary information before the public as to how it intends to fill up the new Deputy Superintendentships that have been created by the Government of India. Before issuing the rules finally the public would like to know the views of the Inspector-General of Police on the subject and express an opinion on them. What are the qualifications that will be required of the candidates? Will Inspectors be promoted to any of the posts, and if so, when and how are the selections to be made? Will any appointments be made this year? These are the few questions that arise in public mind. We are deeply interested in learning the replies to the above questions.

The Deputy Superintendentships of the Police Department will be something like prize posts in the eyes of the employés of the Department. We do hope that the rules will be so framed as to give some scope to the ambition of honest and efficient officers of the force who join the Department as Inspectors or even as Sub-Inspectors. The people are interested in having as Deputy Superintendents efficient men who are likely to do justice to the office, and who whenever required would make capable and efficient D. S. Ps. The appointments, if we have rightly understood the spirit of the Government of India's Resolution on the Report of the Commission, are meant for natives of India and natives in the true sense of the word, that is, those who possess the qualifications which the Government of India is pleased to lay down for the office, namely, knowing the vernacular of the province well enough to be able to read the shikast writing in which Police diaries are written. The Police diaries, a great source of worry to the illiterate population and a means to manufacture crime, require closer supervision, and this is possible only when the natives of India are given the new office, and they possess all the qualifications of good and honest officers.

Suggestion for establishing a new University for the newly-constituted Province of Assam and Eastern Bengal.

AL BASHIR,
19th September, 1905.

3. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 19th September, says that as higher education in Eastern Bengal is comparatively much behind that in Western Bengal, Government would do well to establish a new University to regulate the studies for the newly-constituted Province of Assam and Eastern Bengal. The standard of higher education is equally low in Burma, and the colleges in the latter Province might advantageously be disaffiliated from the Calcutta University and affiliated to the new University suggested by the editor. The foundation of a separate University for the new Province may also be deemed expedient with the view of keeping the inhabitants of the new Province free from the influence of impetuous Bengalis of Western Bengal.

Drought in certain parts of the United Provinces, and the need for starting relief works.

HINDUSTANI,
20th September, 1905.

4. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 20th September, referring to the drought which has overtaken a considerable portion of the United Provinces, along with the other parts of the country, says that both men and animals have already begun to feel distress in the affected parts, and expresses a hope that Government will take timely steps to start famine relief works, and duly inform the peasantry of those places where they can earn good wages. The construction of two new railway lines from Allahabad to Benares, and to Hardoi viâ Rae Bareli, that is under contemplation, may be taken in hand at once, and thereby the suffering peasantry of Bundelkhand may easily be provided with employment without the necessity of their having to seek it far away from their homes.

(g).—General.

The India Office Committee on the Military Controversy.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th September, 1905.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th September, has the following article headed "The India Office Committee on the Military Controversy—II:"—The India Office Committee admits that it is unquestioned that proper provision must be made for a political and financial check to be applied to all the military proposals emanating from the Commander-in-Chief, but it is clear to it that the existing system of providing a soldier of presumably inferior attainments for the express purpose of criticising the military proposals of his superior officer after the latter have been placed at the head of the army in India, must at times lead to friction and is likely to produce unsatisfactory results. No doubt at first sight this appears to be an anomaly, but it is only one of many anomalies that are to be found in the British constitution. Are not the Secretaries to the Government of India, and even the Members of the Council, inferior in status and presumably in attainments to the heads of provincial Governments, and their members of Council? Are not the Secretaries of Provincial Governments, with the exception of the Chief Secretaries, junior officers of less experience than the members of the Boards of Revenue? And yet, are not the seniors and superiors in both cases familiar with the occasional rejection of their proposals and schemes by those junior to them? The Secretary of State is the official superior of the Governor-General, but not unoften, he happens to be a junior in public life compared to the latter, and is sometimes promoted to the latter office long after he held the former office. Lord Ripon was Secretary of State for India sometime in the sixties, and he came out as Governor-General about fifteen years later. If, therefore, the existing system has worked fairly satisfactorily no mere theoretical objection should be allowed to prevail in upsetting it. We are not, however, wedded to it. We are by no means convinced that it has been productive of nothing but satisfactory results. The so-called financial check the Military Member is supposed to exercise is often found to be mere moonshine. We would therefore gladly support any scheme that promises to lead to greater control over military expenditure in practical administration and which would provide a real financial check over the proposals of the Commander-in-Chief. Unfortunately no such alternative system has been made the substitute for the existing one. On the other hand, the constitution of the Government has been made more military than ever. * * * * *

The duty of the people of India in the circumstances in which they find themselves is plain enough. It has been clearly pointed out by three leading Anglo-Indian papers—the Statesman, the Englishman and the Madras Mail. We are confronted by a grave constitutional danger. The Cabinet has acted in supreme and reckless disregard of all constitutional principles, of all the fundamental principles of civilised and responsible Governments, in sanctioning the establishment of a military autocracy in India. Further, it has acted against the unanimous opinion of the Government and the people of India. This is one side of the story. The other side is as full of regrettable incidents as this. We have a Governor-General who has made a mince-meat of the constitution. Lord Curzon has easily surpassed one and all of his predecessors in his contempt for public opinion and for the constitutional checks imposed on him. He has passed a series of measures, administrative and legislative, which have been opposed by the people to the utmost of their capacity, and as the crowning mercy he is bent upon partitioning Bengal in the face of the most determined possible of opposition, which has taken the shape of a boycott of British goods. It is evident there is but one remedy for all this and that is to press for the introduction of changes in the constitution of the Government which will have the effect of checking the autocracy of the Governor-General by introducing a popular element into the Government. This is the one infallible antidote for the poison of the civil and military despotism by which India is confronted, and our countrymen must concentrate their energies on obtaining popular control over the Government.

ARYA MITRA,
16th September,
1905.

The boycott movement.

6. The Ārya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th September, states that Pandit Bishwa Nath Sharma says that the cry for the use of country-made goods is an old one, but that so far the people have contented themselves with a mere indulgence in the cry. If the promoters of the National Congress and the Provincial Conferences refrain from the use of foreign goods only for a year, the drain of crores of rupees to England would be stopped and the money would find its way into the pockets of the Indian manufacturers. Out of evil cometh good. All praise is due to Lord Curzon whose partition scheme has so annoyed the Bengalis, who used to be clad in foreign goods from head to foot that they have been taking a vow to refrain from goods of foreign manufacture. Lately a thousand Bengali students collected all the foreign goods in their possession and set fire to them. The editor would ask the readers of the Ārya Mitra to abandon the use of foreign goods in toto from to-day though he would not go the length of asking them to burn the foreign goods already in their possession. The editor himself has taken such a vow. If 1,500 readers bound themselves in this way and each of them tried to induce at least five men in a year to do the same, they would do a great good to the country. The natives all over the country should espouse the cause of the Bengalis and extend a helping hand to them on the present occasion.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
17th September,
1905.

The Swadeshi movement, and the issue of a seditious anonymous leaflet.

7. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 17th September, referring to the anonymous Bengali leaflet which, according to the Pioneer, has been widely published in Assam and Bengal, abusing Englishmen, and calling upon Indians to promote the Swadeshi movement, says that the leaflet must be the work of some foolish mean fellow. Government has given the Indians full liberty in social and other similar matters, so that the latter can freely promote the cause of their country-made goods without any fear of interference from the authorities; and hence there is no need for the promoters of the Swadeshi movement to publish any seditious matter to catch the masses.

OUDH AKHBAR,
19th September,
1905.

The Swadeshi movement. and the issue of an anonymous leaflet abusing the British people.

8. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 19th September, referring to the Swadeshi movement, says that the increasing poverty of India and the want of employment for her children have necessitated such a movement, and that now that it has once been set on foot, it can hardly be arrested. Government cannot possibly provide employment to all unemployed Indians in its offices, &c., and hence the people themselves must help one another, by exchanging the products of one another's labour, and ceasing to use foreign goods. It is by patriotism of this nature that European races have made themselves rich, prosperous and great, and there can be nothing objectionable in the movement which the Indians though, late in the day, have thought fit to start. The writer is, however, very much pained to learn, from a respectable contemporary (the Pioneer) that an anonymous leaflet has recently been widely circulated in Bengal and Assam, in which the British are freely abused, the masses are urged to commit excesses, &c. The issue of any such leaflet is surely extremely foolish, and calculated to put a spoke in the wheel of the Swadeshi movement; but it is quite possible that some of the opponents of the movement might have issued the leaflet to bring the movement and its promoters into discredit.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
21st September,

Meeting of the Indian students at Allahabad in support of the Swadeshi movement.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 21st September says:—The meeting of the Indian students of Allahabad which was held on Sunday evening in the hall of the Kayastha Pathshala under the appropriate and worthy chairmanship of Principal Ramananda Chatterjee was a remarkable and unqualified success. The arrangements compared very favourably with those of meetings convened by persons more experienced and more favourably situated, while in point of attendance we have not witnessed many meetings in this city which were so well attended. The students who were in charge of the arrangements deserve to be congratulated on the encouraging capacity for organization of which they gave proof. The speakers at the meeting merit equally warm felicitations on the ability, knowledge, eloquence and feeling with which they spoke. One and all acquitted themselves in a distinctly creditable manner, and if only they will keep up their public-spirited enthusiasm they may expect to be useful acquisitions to the ranks of our public men.

Two resolutions were passed at the meeting, one expressing the sympathy of the Indian students of Allahabad with the Swadeshi movement and the other that a message of congratulation should be sent to the students of the city of Calcutta, and of the province of Bengal generally, on the excellent work they are doing in connection with the same. About three hundred young men signed pledges that as far as practicable they would use only country-made goods and that they would persuade their friends and relations to do the same. The speech of Principal Ramananda Chatterjee was a very effective and impressive discourse which breathed love for young men and love of Swadesa. It was pitched in a highly optimistic key, and a note of almost aggressive enthusiasm rang throughout. The proceedings, which lasted for three hours and were not dull in any part of them, began with the singing of a stirring vernacular national song composed by a young Punjabi poet, and concluded with repeated rounds of cheering for Young Bengal, for the Swadeshi movement and for the Motherland.

HINDUSTANI,
20th September,
1905.

Need for the appointment of female ticket-collectors at the railway stations to check the tickets of female passengers.

10. One Sajjád Husain, a supervisor kanúngo on leave, writing to the Hindustáni (Lucknow) of the 20th September, says that five days ago he saw, with his own eyes, a (European) ticket-collector and another man in his company, standing at the door of a third-class female carriage, at the railway station, Moghal Sarai, trying to flirt with two respectable native ladies seated therein, who, seeing them, closely veiled their faces and kept quiet. The writer who occupied a bench, at a little distance, remonstrated with the offenders, and then they walked off. Government takes special care to have the entire establishments of female hospitals made up of females with a view to strictly preserve the pardah of respectable native patients, and there is no reason why it should not insist on the railway companies appointing female ticket-collectors for checking the tickets of female passengers. It is high time that this crying railway reform were carried out without further delay.

A Frenchman on Indian character.

11. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 19th September, says that a Frenchman, in imitation of Lord Curzon, has deemed it expedient to declare that Indians generally tell lies but seldom the truth, and that the case with Europeans is just the reverse. Bravo! Frenchman, at present it has been allotted to Europeans to speak the truth, to perform true acts and to understand truth. Sooner or later the wheel of fortune must have a turn when Indians will come to be considered truth-tellers and Europeans liars.

HINDOSTHAN,
20th September,
1905.

British ignorance of India.

12. The English Hindosthán (Kalákánkar), of the 20th September, has the following article headed "British Ignorance of India" —(II):—Referring to our quotation made in our last issue under the above heading we must entirely agree with the remark of our contemporary the Pioneer that English people and papers display great ignorance of Indian matters. We have already taken up this subject when a similar mistake was committed about some statement made in reference to the Hyderabad State which we fully explained in the columns of the Hindosthán to which we cannot refer now before returning to our head office at Kalákánkar, and looking for it in the file of the paper. But this is certain no doubt that British ignorance of India is unprecedented, and, with all the efforts of Messrs. Hume, Dadabhai Nowrojee, Digby, Sir William Wedderburn, Sir Henry Cotton, &c., &c., they do not yet remember when Lord Amherst was the Governor-General of India and who is the ruler of the Indian Empire now. Likewise they do not know which Governor acted for Lord Curzon and what is his name. Under these circumstances we think it is most advisable for us to confine ourselves to our own country, India, and ask for our just wants and requirements loyally and constitutionally from the Government of India without making such fusses and agitation as the people are making anent Lord Curzon's Government, under various pretences, such as the Partition of Bengal, and Lord Curzon's Convocation speech, &c., &c.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
24th September,
1905.

The Prince of Wales' approaching visit to India, and the prospects of famine thickening in certain parts of the country.

1. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 24th September, referring to the approaching visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to India, says that though it is true, as the English Press observes, that the Royal visit is calculated to intensify the loyalty and devotion of the Indians to the British Crown and Government, yet it is very much to be doubted whether the Indians, among whom Lord Curzon has caused much dissatisfaction by his legislative and executive measures, will be in a fit mood to accord a right royal and hearty reception to Their Highnesses. It is a pity that while it is due to Lord Curzon's invitation given three years ago that the Prince of Wales is going to visit this country this year, His Lordship has, during this interval, been doing all in his power to excite the ill-will of the Indians and make them lose their confidence in the British Government as much as possible. What is still more strange is that he has thought fit to make the partition of Bengal, which has been so strongly opposed by the people, a fait accompli just at the time when the Prince of Wales is about to set foot on Indian soil. Lord Curzon, has, by his (retrograde) measures, simply turned the country, as it were, topsy-turvy, so that the people may be said to have quite lost their equanimity. During His Lordship's six years' administration, there occurred a famine a few years ago, and another is looming in the near future just at the time of his departure. Had His Lordship liberally helped the peasantry with money at the close of the last famine instead of largely increasing the military expenditure, the peasants would not feel so distressed as they do now at the prospect of an impending famine. But the higher authorities are taking very good care to cross out all those places from the programme of His Highness' visit, as they are found involved in famine: why, they are likely to prevent His Highness even knowing the names of famine-affected parts of the country; but the editor doesn't think it possible for the authorities to disallow His Highness to read Indian newspapers.

CITIZEN,
25th September,
1905.

The Muhammadans and their aloofness from politics.

2. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 25th September, says:—To our Muhammadan fellow-citizens in the United Provinces and the Punjab who regard the policy of masterly inactivity that they follow in political matters as the best policy that they can follow, we recommend a careful consideration of a speech of one of their co-religionists in Bengal which, it will be seen from the text elsewhere, is most sensible and altogether to the purpose. By a strange irony of fate the practical Musalman has come to think that his salvation lies in leaving politics severely alone, and the more he cuts himself off from his Hindu brethren the better does he please the official class. The notion may favour the divide-and-rule policy of interested men, but the fairy-land that it creates for our friends, in which visions of smart carriages and unlimited patronage flash before the eyes of their fancy, is bound to receive a rude shock and ere long to be shattered. Mr. Huda cites a recent instance in Bengal showing how Muhammadan gentlemen have not been considered fit for even Police Inspectorships. Such instances are by no means rare in Upper India. When the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mahmood vacated his office and Mr. Banerji was appointed his successor, there was wailing in the Muslim world. But when a similar opportunity presented itself only of late in the Punjab, did the claims of our Muhammadan friends receive adequate consideration? Mr. Huda's speech has been very opportune, and we are sure will amply repay a perusal.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 24th September, 1905.

Lord Curzon's speech before the Educational Conference at Simla.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 24th September, in an article, headed "The Great Capital I Again," says:—The first of the series of farewell self-eulogiums with which Lord Curzon will favour us, was delivered at Simla on Wednesday evening. As we have again and again insisted, his Excellency will have first to change his nature before he can convince himself of the wisdom of leaving others to sing his praises. What if those others will not do it thoroughly? Rather than expose himself to the risk of leaving those praises of number one which are so dear to his heart unsung for the delectation of a credulous and admiring world, let him do it himself: this is evidently Lord Curzon's principle of action. And accordingly, a long-suffering public must make up its mind to read long columns of autobiographical oratory in the daily papers. If the historian will err in giving Lord Curzon his due, it will certainly not be for lack of materials supplied by the person directly interested. Lord Curzon has a singular and most convenient method of publicly praising himself. He describes in his own highly coloured and ornate manner a state of affairs supposed to be existing when the reformer's hand, meaning himself, touched it, and lo! the base opaque metal was converted into shining gold. Everything was wrong owing to the neglect and incompetence of his predecessors, then his dutiful and able self came, saw, examined and—conquered the situation. As to what he himself has done, well, he manipulates and interprets facts in his own manner so as to suit his controversial purposes. Mistakes of fact and incorrectness of inferences are pointed out to him by his critics, and he meets them by—repeating his errors in a more cocksure and defiant manner. And he takes precious good care always to have the last word in a discussion or dispute. We are quite familiar with these unfair controversial methods, and are not in the least surprised at the splendid audacity of his utterance at the conference of Directors of Public Instruction at Simla. And see how the occasion is created for his speaking in self-praise. The principal departmental heads meet at Simla under the presidency of that great sinecurist, the Director-General of Education; whether for the transaction of serious business or for regaling themselves on those Capuan heights it is not for us to enquire. (We only know there were none of these frequent official meetings before, and do not know that business suffered on that account.) In a manner and at a moment most suited to Lord Curzon they convey to His Excellency an expression of their desire that he should attend their deliberations and address them. The deliberations themselves are secret. Yet the Viceregal oration is public and is flashed to the four corners of the land and to beyond the seas. The oration is then delivered; the Viceregal orator compliments himself and those assembled to hear him and is in turn complimented by them. And lo! the splendid satisfaction produced by this happy mutual adulation. If we are asked our candid opinion of this skilful stage-managing, we will say it is demoralizing.

The speech itself is of the character we have described above. The Viceregal orator, the 'Great Capital I' as 'Max' of Capital facetiously calls His Magnificence, appropriately begins his discourse with martial phraseology. 'I feel rather,' he said, 'like a General addressing his Marshals for the last time before he unbuckles his sword and retires into private life, for the task which has engaged so much of our energies during the past seven years has been like nothing so much as a campaign marked by a long series of engagements which we have fought together; and although I am about to resign my commission, you will remain to carry on, I hope, the same colours to victory on many another well won field.' Yes; we accept this description of the work in which Lord Curzon has been engaged for the past seven years. It is like nothing so much as a campaign against high education in which he has been engaged, and the campaign has been marked by such engagements as the notorious Text Books circular, the secret Simla Conference, the packed Universities Commission, the retrograde Universities Bill, the high-handed Validating Bill, and so on. When Lord Curzon came to India it seems that educational reforms loomed before him as one of those objects which from such knowledge of India as he possessed appeared to deserve a prominent place in any scheme of adminstrative reconstruction. Why this should have been so is a mystery to us; unless indeed we are to find an explanation for it in some of the later phases of His Excellency's schemes of what is euphemistically called administrative reconstruction but which is really reactionaryism run rampant. Probably to put down educated Indians and repress their growing public spirit was as much the wish of His Excellency at the time he was uttering smooth sentiments as latterly when he descended to vilifying their national character. We at all events shall not be surprised if this was so.

So far, however, as the enunciation of some general principles goes, we admit we have no quarrel with Lord Curzon. Nay, we do not think we ourselves could state our own ideas so appositely as His Excellency does for us. For instance, can anything be better than the following description of the all-embracing importance of education? Said Lord Curzon in his speech under notice :—

> In the first place, vital as is education everywhere as the instrument by which men and nations rise, yet in a country like India in its present state of development it is perhaps the most clamant necessity of all, for here education is required not primarily as the instrument of culture or the source of learning, but as the key to employment, the condition of all national advance and prosperity, and the sole stepping stone for every class of the community to higher things. It is a social and political, even more than an intellectual demand, and to it alone can we look to provide a livelihood for our citizens, to train up our public servants, to develop the economic and industrial resources of the country, to fit the people for the share in self-government which is given to them, and which will increase with their deserts; and to fashion the national character on sound and healthy lines. The man in India who has grasped the education problem has got nearer to the heart of things than any of his comrades, and he who can offer to us the right educational prescription is the true physician of the State.

Lord Curzon recognises education to be 'a peculiarly British responsibility.' He does believe that education is raising the moral level of the community; and 'it is because it is the first and most powerful instrument of moral elevation in India that it must for ever remain a primary care of the State.' So far so good. But when it comes to saying something of what he himself has done or attempted to do, all the excellence of Lord Curzon's manner vanishes and an almost intolerable prominence is given to the first person singular. The imperfections that might have been existing before are grossly and grotesquely exaggerated, and the magnificence of his own handiwork is described in language of exaggeration which is positively misleading. For instance His Excellency tells us that 'for years education in India had been muddling along with no one to look after it at headquarters or to observe its symptoms, until the men who had given up their lives to it were sick at heart and well nigh in despair.' Is this even an approach to a truthful description of what was or what is? May we politely remind Lord Curzon of a certain Convocation sermon on veracity? But to proceed. It 'seems there was a vagueness as to fundamental principles, slackness had crept in, standards had depreciated, and what was wanting was the impulse and movement of a new life.' We wonder what impression the veteran educationalists assembled at Simla carried away of this ridiculous exaggeration of such defects as might have existed in the educational organization of India. But Lord Curzon stepped in, and lo and behold ! all is changed for the better. I 'threw myself with a burning zeal into the subject of educational reform.' And he deliberately acted like a veritable martyr in doing so :—

> I knew the risks that had to be run. There was not one among them that could be apprehended that has not been incurred. I was aware of all the taunts that would be levelled; that we should be accused, when we were merely raising a debased standard, of wanting to shut the doors of education in the face of the people, and when we felt it our duty to assert the proper control of Government, of desiring to aggrandise the power of the State, and many other equally unfounded charges.

But with the heroic unselfishness and the righteous determination which always characterise the action of great reformers who stamp their name on the age in which they live, the noble Lord of Kedlestone thought the object was worth the risk. 'The allies and fellow-workers were there, who were only too ready and anxious to join in the struggle, and it merely remained to formulate the plan of action and to go ahead.' One can only exclaim in wonderment and admiration—if not in bewilderment—Bravo ! Shábásh ! !

UNION GAZETTE,
21st September,
1905.

Alleged need for granting half a day's holiday on Fridays in the Bareilly College to enable the Muhammadan students to say their congregational prayers.

4. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st September, publishes a letter from the Secretary to the local Anjuman-i-Faláh-ul-Musalmín (an association for promoting the well-being of the Muhammadans), complaining that, though His Highness the Nawáb of Rámpur has considerably aided the Bareilly College by grant of both money and land, and other well-to-do Muhammadans too have made handsome contributions to its funds, no kind of special concession is made to the Muhammadan students. Lately the Muhammadan students made an application (to the Principal) requesting that the College might be closed at 12½ P.M. on Fridays to enable them to say their prayers in congregation on those days, without losing the benefit of lectures, but it was not granted. They then applied that they themselves alone might be granted half a day's leave on Fridays to meet their religious need, but this request too was rejected, with the remark that the course of the College lectures could in no way be allowed to be disturbed for the sake of the few Muhammadan students, who (if dissatisfied) had better leave the College. Surely such a harsh reply should not have been given to the Muhammadan students, and the Principal would do well to reconsider the matter.

SAHIFA,
19th September,
1905.

Complaint against Government officers employing unparlimentary language towards Municipal members, pleaders, &c.

5. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 19th September, says that following on the heels of the Allahabad Municipal "scandal," in which the Municipal Chairman offended Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya by characterizing something he said as nonsense, and thereby forced him to resign his membership of the Allahabad Municipal Board, a similar incident recently occurred at Moradabad, in which the District Judge gave similar offence to a certain member of the Bar, which has caused much dissatisfaction both among European and Indian legal practitioners. It is a matter for much regret, indeed, that Government officials should be guilty of such misconduct even in large stations. This shows that Government officers contract the bad habit of using discourteous language and practising high-handedness in small stations, where men of education and character are few and far between, so that the former's misconduct is hardly ever brought to the notice of Government. The heads of the European chairmen of the District and the Municipal Boards are so filled with autocratic ideas that nobody dares utter a word against their opinions or proposals. These chairmen have simply trampled the principle of self-government under foot. The reason why a resolution passed by a Municipal Board is sometimes found to throw a whole town in a ferment, or causes great excitement in a particular community or class is no other than that some influential and powerful officer of the Board keeps the members so much overawed that they dare not oppose any proposal but feel themselves bound to support it, however much they may be convinced of its disagreeableness to their constituents, otherwise they, being the representatives of the people, and knowing well their likes and dislikes, manners and feelings, would not vote for a measure that is calculated to cause the latter inconvenience, dissatisfaction, &c. If due regard be paid to public opinion by district and other officers, their measures will seldom be attended by an evil consequence. Government would therefore do well to see that its officials do not ride roughshod over public opinion.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th September,
1905.

An inflammatory appeal to Bengalis on the Partition question.

6. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th September, publishes an Urdu translation of the notice which was circulated in Eastern Bengal and Assam on the partition of Bengal, and a sort of an inflammatory appeal to the Bengalis, an English translation of which appeared in the Pioneer of the 15th September, page 7.

CITIZEN,
25th September,
1905.

Comments on the Pioneer's apprehension of sedition lurking in the Swadeshi movement in Bengal.

7. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 25th September, says :—The local daily has from some source which it does not care to mention produced a piece of sheer nonsense, and managed to persuade itself that there is sedition lurking in Bengal. The Bengalis, if the highest authorities on the subject can be depended upon, are of all the Indian races the most peaceful and law-abiding and least apt to have recourse to any measure which may be regarded as coercive, dark and sinister. The mutiny of 1857 could not extend down to Bengal, and, indeed, had received no countenance from men of light or learning in any part of the land. Painfully conscious as we educated Indians are of the various shortcomings of the British Government, we fully appreciate the numberless blessings that they have conferred upon us, and unless some prancing consul comes and in the plenitude of his wisdom finds it fit to goad the classes and masses to desperation, they can never rise. If, however, that evil day come and the Indian people turn against their benefactors they will find to their cost that they have been biting against the file. The British system of administration is under no circumstance favourable to sedition—a fact which no party knows better than our contemporary. Conscience, however, makes cowards of men and the silly document has unnerved the Pioneer.

ADVOCATE,
28th September,
1905.

Comments on the establishment of the Staff College, the cordite and shell factories, and other late military activities in India.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th September, giving an account of the proceedings of the recent Indian Staff College Dinner held at Simla observes:—Lord Kitchener deserves our thanks for gradually making India free from the leading strings of England. Our cordite and shell factories have made the country self-reliant in the matter of munitions of war, rifles and other weapons coming still from England. For training in the higher branches of the art of war, we have now got a Staff College too. For such attempts and achievements many thanks. But ours are qualified thanks. In the workshops and factories, it is the British brain that rules with the help of Indian hands. There is no reason as yet to think that Indian brains will ever be given the opportunity to direct the work of the manufacture of weapons and munitions of war. Then again, the Indian in the Army has to be always under the control of and subject to the British officer, be this gentleman old or young, raw or experienced, and if even hardly qualified to sit at the feet of an old Subadar-Major or Risaldar-Major to learn the art of war. The Staff College at Quetta is Indian because of its location in this country, but in other respects it is as English as its sister institution in England. When the Imperial Cadet Corps was founded, it was given out that the cadets after completion of training would be given direct commissions in the Army. This bubble was pricked not even a month ago. No such thing was, we are told, intended. To many this disillusionment came as a surprise. So all activity in the Military Department means, as it has always meant, rise in the burden on the Indian taxpayer without any compensating accession to rights and privileges on the part of the Indian in any grade of the Army List.

Alleged predictions by an Indian astrologer.

OUDH AKHBAR, 27th September, 1905.

9. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 27th September, publishes a communication containing the predictions of an Indian astrologer. The astrologer says that the King-Emperor (Edward VII) will be long-lived, and witness a mighty change in England, which will occur in 1907. Lord Curzon will not remain quiet in England, and his secret plot will be exposed in its horrible form in 1907. The Government of America and England will be on the same footing. Lord Minto s administration of India will be a turbulent one. A new Amir will be set up in Kabul. Three more (Viceroys) will succeed Lord Minto, the name of the last one being Wellesley or Mackenzie, after which the Government of India will take a different form. The Indian Rajas and Nawabs will be great losers, many of them being involved in political complications; a distinguished Raja will be deposed from the gaddi. Rainfall (in 1906 ?) will be copious and timely, slight famine will be experienced in certain parts of India, but speedy relief will be found in the supply of rice obtained from outside. Indian trade will improve, while England will suffer. Shocks of earthquake will increase in the beginning of December and middle of February (next ?). The plague will disappear altogether from India, but cholera and ague will take its place.

AGRA AKHBAR,
28th September,
1905.

Lord Curzon's administration of India.

1. The Agra Akhbár (Agra), of the 28th September, publishes a number of verses, in which the writer observes that while Lord Curzon showed a great desire to promote female education in India—the last syllable of his name (which in Persian means a woman) implying his partiality to women—he proved quite an enemy to other education. His Lordship has placed many restrictions on education, so that if his educational policy is maintained, high education will become a thing of the past. Lord Curzon called the Orientals untruthful, and the Oudh Punch replied that His Lordship was "a king of liars." He sent a mission to Thibet, but when China showed her teeth he quietly sneaked off. His Lordship made the native chiefs utterly helpless, and went the length of even deposing the Maharaja of Indore. He dispossessed the Nizam of Berar for ever by his diplomatic adroitness. There is wailing and crying, in short, in every part of the country, the people of Bengal being especially distressed on account of the partition of their province. Lord Curzon is, however, now returning home under circumstances in which no other Viceroy of India ever retired before.

QAND-I-PARSI,
1st October, 1905.

The Muhammadans and the National Congress

2. The Qand-i-Pársi (Aligarh), in its joint issue for August, September, and October, publishes a communication from a Muhammadan gentleman, named Mirza Durdi of Ispahán, who instituting a favourable contrast of the British Government in India with the past Muhammadan rule, observes that from the very foundation of the Islam religion, the entire conduct of its followers has been wholly based on selfishness, and greed of worldy riches, honour, &c. The opposition of the Muhammadans to the Indian National Congress is due to the same spirit of selfishness, under which they practise hositility towards that body to win the good-will of the British rulers. But what have the anti-Congressist Musalmans been so far able to obtain from the Government for their sycophancy? Nothing; whereas some Congressists have been able to enter Parliament; one has been knighted, &c. But it is due to this attitude of the Muhammadans that Englishmen have become very bold (reckless) and do many unjust things in India. If the Muhammadans laid aside their selfishness they would be able to do great things. What a pity that while the Babus of Bengal, who are weak as mice, are able to balk and thwart the British rulers in so many ways, the Muhammadans, who are brave and strong as lions, should be so utterly cowed and meek before the latter.

HINDI URDU SAMACHAR.
For June, July and August, 1905.

Summonses not properly filled up in the Munsif's Court at Etáwah.

3. The Hindi Urdu Samáchár (Etáwah) in its joint issue for June, July and August complains that the summonses which issue from the Munsif's Court at Etáwah are filled up only in Urdu, the Hindi form being left blank. Some time ago the editor himself received such a summons. He made a note on the back of the summons, drawing attention to the matter but the court does not seem to have taken any notice of his note and continues to issue summonses in the same way. The Munsif though a Musalman, is an able man but he should see that the orders of Government are duly observed by his ministerial officials. The High Court should keep an eye on the subordinate Court.

A complaint regarding the summonses issued by the criminal courts in Oudh.

ADVOCATE,
1st October, 1905.

4. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st October, publishes the following communication from Mr. Sadiq Ali Khan, Barrister-at-law, Lucknow:—Sir,—Will you allow me to bring to the notice of our popular Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Ross Scott, through the medium of your valuable and influential journal, a public grievance—

(1) The summonses usually issued by criminal courts in Oudh, generally in summons cases, are not accompanied with complaints or with any statements showing the charge which the accused is required to meet, so that the courts and the accused may be saved the inconvenience of having another date for defence.

(2) The prevailing practice as regards the issue of summonses by criminal courts in Oudh is that the original to be returned to the court is written in the Urdu character and the duplicate which is left with the party in the Nagri character. This causes great inconvenience to those who do not know Nagri, and no less inconvenience to Nagri-knowing men who endorse the original which is in Urdu and the contents of which they must take on trust. It would tend to public convenience if the Judicial Commissioner were pleased to order that in future in criminal cases a copy of the complaint where one is filed or of a brief statement showing the nature and particular of the charge which the accused is called upon to answer should be sent along with the summons and that the contents of summonses, both original and duplicate in criminal cases, should be written in both characters.

Ahírs and grain dealers at Allahabad.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
1st October, 1905.

5. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 1st October, does not approve of the desire of the Allahabad Municipal Board to levy a license fee from Ahírs who keep cattle and supply milk to the public. As it is, the Ahírs supply milk at 8 seers a rupee and the milk is not by any means pure and good. Ghi sells at one seer a rupee. The levy of a license fee will necessarily make matters still worse. If nutritious articles become so rare and dear, it will be difficult for people to keep themselves in good health. Again, the grain dealers are left to their own sweet will to supply grain to the public at any rates they like. The grain supplied to the Commissariat is paid at the rates recorded in the Tahsíldár's office. But no one cares to know what rates the grain dealers charge the public.

The Swadeshi movement

ARYA MITRA,
1st October, 1905.

6. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st October, says that at present there is a deep and widespread sensation in the country for the use of country-made goods. This is as it should be. In some towns public meetings have not yet been held in support of the Swadeshi movement. But all the same the matter is engaging the attention of all thoughtful and intelligent well-wishers of India. There is no thoughtful native who is not fully alive to the necessity of the encouragement of indigenous trades and industries. No country has ever prospered without the development of its industrial arts. The people are to be found so fond of European goods simply because they are gaudy and so easily available. But the time has arrived when they should throw off the magic influence of Western goods, and seek to supply their wants from Indian manufactures. They should take a lesson from the conduct of Englishmen in the matter. British officers do not allow persons to enter public offices and courts with native shoes on, while shoes of English make are exempt from this disability. The reason for this is not far to seek. Here is a remarkable story. The butler of a superior European once bought a box of liquor for Rs 30 from a native shop and placed it before his master with the remark that the Great Eastern Hotel used to charge Rs. 40 for it. The gentleman candidly told him that the extra ten rupees charged by the Great Eastern Hotel found their way back to England, but that the profit of a rupee or two made by the native shopkeeper would remain in this country. With this explanation he ordered the butler to return the box and get another from the Great Eastern Hotel. The Indians should take a leaf out of the book of Europeans and make a point of patronizing Indian goods. Then they will soon see better days dawning on dear India. India imports 17 crores of rupees worth of foreign small wares alone a year. If only half this enormous drain were stopped, the signs of prosperity would be visible in the country ere long.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
1st October, 1905.

Allahabad students in support of the Swadeshi movement.

7. The Prayág Samáchar (Allahabad), of the 1st October, refers to a public meeting held by the schoolboys in the Káyasth Páthshála on the 17th September under the presidency of Mr. Ramanand Chatterji, Principal of the school. The meeting supported the Swadeshi movement, and many persons took a vow to use only Indian manufactures and to induce their friends and relatives to do so.

AL BASHIR,
3rd October, 1905.

The boycott movement, and Native Christians, English merchants, &c.

8. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 3rd October, referring to the rumour that Native Christians too disapprove of the partition of Bengal, says that the rumour is probably well founded. So long as Eastern Bengal formed part of the Bengal Gevernment the Musalman residents in the former made no progress in education, so that Christian missionaries found a good field among them, illiterate as they were, to propagate their religion. With the separation of Eastern Bengal, the writer has every reason to believe that the Musalmans will have far better opportunities (and inducements) to receive education, and thus the chances of the missionaries to convert them to Christianity will grow less and less as time passes. The washermen and barbers are also said to refuse to serve those persons who use foreign goods: can illiterate men be also expected to realize the economy of the use of home-made goods, or the Swadeshi agitation has been spread among them by wire-pullers? If so, are the practices of this kind legitimate? English merchants, queer to say, are likewise reported to be against the Partition scheme, lest they should lose their trade in foreign goods on account of the Swadeshi movement set on foot in resentment against the scheme in question. But it is difficult to believe that Government will withdraw the scheme in consideration of the interest of English traders in imported goods, especially as the Bengalis have sought to gain their object by coercion. Should the Government recede owing to pressure thus brought to bear on her from so many directions, it would be an exhibition of sheer weakness on her part, and set a bad example to Indians, so that it would become almost impossible for the British Government to maintain its rule in India in the future.

Misbehaviour of booking clerks at Railway stations.

9. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st October, in a communication, complains that the reduction in railway fares has afforded the booking clerks a good opportunity for cheating passengers in broad daylight. They charge passengers fares at the old rates; but they deposit revenues from the fares at the new rates in the Railway treasury and keep the excess to themselves. The Railway authorities would do well to stop the issue of old tickets and thereby strike at the root of the evil.

Complaint against the alleged prejudiced writings of the Musáfir newspaper of Agra.

10. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th September, complains that not only the religious pamphlets of Arya Samajists are full of prejudiced thoughts, but that their ordinary political newspapers too freely give an expression to similarly narrow and biased views. Take, for instance, the Agra Musáfir, an Árya Samaj paper, of the 23rd September, in the very title page of which the editor, while advertising an Árya book of poems in which the teachings of the Vedas are versified by one Pandit Bhojdat Ji, and is entitled the "Áryá Diwán" takes the opportunity to cast a slur on the late famous Urdu poet Dágh, observing that the latter continued a slave to his passions till his death. In the same issue the Musáfir, referring to the late bomb accident at the mosque in Constantinple, speaks of the Sultan of Turkey in the singular number, though respect or courtesy requires one to use the plural number in Urdu in respect to such a high personage. Again, in its columns on religious controversy, the observations which the Musáfir makes are anything but civil or decorous.

Protest against the open space near the Nichi Bágh being used as a stand for ekkas, &c. at Benares.

1. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 2nd October, says that the open space near the Nichi Bágh, which is situated in the centre of the town at Benares, is used by the permission of the Municipal Board as a stand for ekkas and other carriages. The result is that the whole place stinks with horse dung, &c. The health officer would do well to see that this kind of thing is stopped.

BHARAT JIWAN,
2nd October, 1905.

Co-operation of Musalmans in Calcutta with the Bengalis in the Swadeshi movement.

2. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 2nd October, expresses satisfaction that the Musalmans in Calcutta are coming forward to co-operate with the Hindus in the Swadeshi movement. This is as it should be. The movement has nothing to do with religion. It is simply intended to improve the material condition of the people. All classes of Indians should be able to stand on a common platform and work heart and soul to promote Indian arts and industries.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th October, 1905.

The Swadeshi movement, and its alleged support by all classes of Indians in general.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th October, says :—The Swadeshi movement has testified to at least one thing, viz., that it is not difficult to weld the Indian peoples into one homogeneous whole. The complete unanimity of feeling and sentiment that prevails, in all quarters, on the subject of the use of articles of Indian manufacture and the disuse of goods of foreign manufacture does, to our mind, bring the dream of our political leaders—the dream of a united India instinct with the feeling of nationality—within the bounds of actual reality. Common sentiments, common feelings, common political disabilities have gone a long way in unifying our people. But more is needed.

AL BASHIR,
10th October, 1905.

A Muhammadan public meeting in Bengal against the partition.

4. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 10th October says that sensible Muhammadans in Bengal have lately been expressing satisfaction at the partition of their province. Public meetings have been held at several places in the new province and thanks offered to Government for the measure. But the cunning Bengalis, who always try to win over the simple-hearted Musalmans to their side, when it suits their purpose to do so, have not been slow to follow this trick on this occasion. The Musalmans were lately induced to hold a public meeting. The Hindu and Muhammadan schoolboys walked through the streets hand in hand to exhibit their unity. Similar exhibitions of unity have often been made in the United Provinces, but they have always been found to be ephemeral. At all events this spectacle shows that so far there was no unity between the two communities in Bengal. What was the cause of the want of unity? No other than the prejudice of Bengalis against the Musalmans. The Bengali literature abounds with unjust attacks on Musalmans; even the Bengali school text-books are not free from this evil. Whenever any Musalmans have been elevated to offices of trust and responsibility, the Bengali press has unanimously entered strong protests against their elevation: all the sympathy of selfish Bengalis has evaporated on such occasions! They have never felt the necessity of unity at such times. Now when it suits their purpose to enlist the sympathy of Musalmans, they are to be found ready to do so. The Musalmans are a very simple-hearted people and readily play into their hands. One Mr. A. Rasul appears to have been elected chairman of the Muhammadan meeting. He is not at all known to public fame and enjoys no high social position. Evidently the Bengalis were unable to get hold of a better Muhammadan for the chair.

AL AZIZ,
7th October, 1905.

Supply of provisions to the camps of officers going out on tour during winter in the United Provinces.

5. Al Aziz (Agra), of the 7th October, says that there are men who are so utterly void of human sympathy, that they desire to have their physical wants readily supplied, though it might entail any amount of suffering on others. The false pride of the power with which such men happen to be temporarily invested makes them utterly blind to, and careless of, the rights of their fellow-creatures, so that they commit all sorts of excesses on the latter, thereby proving themselves a veritable evil genius to mankind. Not to speak of the beneficent British Government, no other just Government in the world has got a law on its Statute-book which allows its low ministerial officials to practise what oppressions and high-handedness they please on the poorer classes of the people. But it is a fact that the underlings of the majority of civil officers in India do not stick at anything, however cruel and oppressive it may be to the people, to satisfy their own selfish ends. The poor peasantry become the special object of prey of these underlings during winter, when most of the officers go out on tour, and the articles of food, &c., are exacted from the banias and others at considerably lower than the market rates. The touring officers themselves little know of what excesses their underlings commit on the poor people.

KAVINDRA BATIKA,
1st October, 1905.

The coming Kumbh fair at Allahabad.

6. The Kavindra Bátika (Allahabad), of the 1st October, says that the Kumbh fair which is held every twelfth year will come off at the confluence of the rivers in Allahabad during the coming Magh month. The fair is visited by immense crowds of Hindus from all parts of the country. No Muhammadan or Christian officials should have anything to do with the fair. Indeed Muhammadans and Christians should not, under any circumstances, be allowed to resort to the fair, inasmuch as, however considerate they may be, they will do one thing or another against the Hindu religion. The Hindu pilgrims should be able to perform their religious ceremonies undisturbed. The authorities should place the management of the Magh mela into the hands of Hindu officials.

V.—Legislation.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th October, 1905.

The passing of the Bengal and Assam Laws Bill.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th October, says:—So, after all, the most non-contentious of Bills, viz., the one relating to the Partition of Bengal, was considered and passed into law at the last meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council at Simla! The Government of India can rest with an easy conscience now that it has conquered at last and has maintained its prestige intact. Glorious victory this, and mighty consolation indeed for a Government whose secret, if not express, determination has been to disregard public opinion!!

What shall our friends of Bengal do next? The agitation over this partition business has been the most unprecedented in the annals of the history of India under the British—an agitation carried on on the most consitutional line—, and the step that our friends of the Lower Provinces have taken is only the natural sequence of the series of events. The attention of the Government of India was drawn to what has been called, and so far as we are able to judge, rightly so, the illegality of the partition. But what has legality or illegality to do with the edicts of the great Proconsul on whom has fallen the mantle of the Great Moghul? Who should be so bold as to question the right of the Great Moghul of to-day?

Establishment of a committee in Calcutta for the promotion of a uniform script.

8. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 2nd October, is glad to notice that a committee has been formed at Calcutta to promote the use of a uniform script throughont the country. The Devanagri character is the script selected by the committee for the purpose. If a uniform script were adopted, better days would dawn on the country ere long. Mr. Justice Sarda Charan Mittra has been appointed Secretary to the committee.

AL BASHIR,
10th October, 1905.

Custom of letting off fireworks among the natives.

9. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 10th October, says that it would appear from the Arya Gazette, published in Lahore, that the clothes of the young son of a Khatri in that town lately caught fire from a firework and that the boy was severely burnt, and died the following day of his wounds. Such fatal accidents occur every year, but neither parents can prevent their children from letting off fireworks on the occasion of the Shab-i-Barat, nor does Government see its way to interference, although both of them are responsible for the safety of the lives of children. It is a matter of satisfaction that the Lahore Municipal Board has seen its way to checking the evil. It is earnestly to be hoped that the other municipal boards will follow suit.

SIPAHI,
10th October, 1905.

The approaching visit of the present Prince of Wales to India, compared with that of the King-Emperor Edward VII, his father, in 1875.

1. THE Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 10th October, after offering greetings to the Prince of Wales at his approaching visit to India, says that it is just thirty years since His Highness's father, now King-Emperor Edward VII, visited this country in the same capacity in which His Highness is going to do so now. In 1875, the year of His Majesty's visit, a great storm burst over Ahmedabad. A similar catastrophe has preceded the advent of His Royal Highness in the present year. King Edward was welcomed at his landing in, and bid farewell to at his departure from, India by one and the same Viceroy, Lord Northbrook; but His Royal Highness will be welcomed by Lord Curzon, and bid farewell to by another Viceroy, Lord Minto. A severe famine occurred in India two years before King Edward's visit, while His Royal Highness is paying his visit to the country in the midst of actual famine. His father's special trains ran during day as well as during night; but His Highness' specials are to run by night only, so that even when he has 'done' the whole country, he will know little of the land and of its inhabitants. Lord Lytton held a Darbar at Delhi two years after King Edward had visited this country; but Lord Curzon held a similar Darbar two years before His Highness' advent. It was several years after King Edward's visit that a British force had to be despatched to Afghanistan. Tibetan, Afghanistan and Russian complications are impending at the present time, and God forbid that His Royal Highness' visit should become infamous on account of any of those complications becoming serious. His father was not accompanied by the queen when he visited India, but His Royal Highness is coming out with the Princess of Wales, so that the Indian Princes and Princesses will respectively show their hospitality to and wait upon the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Oudh Taluqdars come to the end of their resources (or find themselves impoverished) in entertaining even a single District Officer: so that even the biggest native princes will have a bad time of it in having to receive and entertain the occupants of three special trains. But let the consequences be what they may! An Indian, however miserable a life he may be leading, thinks it his every day duty to show hospitality to strangers in general, whereas His Royal Highness is his would-be Emperor, and hence he must welcome and give him a right royal reception.

EXPRESS,
19th October, 1905.

Protest against the appointment of a Shia as Assistant Manager of the Sunni estate of Nanpara, Bahraich District.

3. The Express (Lucknow), of the 19th October, reproduces the following letter from a Sunni, published in the Indian Daily Telegraph of the 14th idem:—Sir,—It is, I believe, well-known to the public and to the Government that the Estate of Nanpara, in the Bahraich District, belongs to a Sunni Taluqdar. The late Raja Sir Jang Bahadur, K.C.I.E., was not only respected for his wealth and estate, but was deeply loved and revered as a leader of the Sunni sect. He established the celebration of the anniversary of Khawja Abdul Qadir Jilani's demise, and spent thousands of rupees on the occasion. Maulvis, Sufis and other religious leaders of the Sunni community from all parts of India gathered together in Nanpara. The gathering became so large every year, that the Raja intended to make a permanent endowment for its maintenance. The authorities consequently recognized the 11th of Rabi-ussani as a public holiday in the district of Bahraich.

The Raja's premature death left everything unsettled, but his successor, Raja Muhammad Siddiq Khan, a staunch Sunni, kept up the anniversary with the same eclát. Most of his employés were of the Sunni persuasion. Unfortunately on account of his bad health, the benevolent Government with its usual foresight and generosity, considered it necessary to protect the old Nanpara House by placing the Estate under the Court of Wards, and every Muhammadan resident of Oudh is grateful to Sir James LaTouche for this act of sympathy.

But there is one fact which has created much misgiving in the minds of the people. It is difficult to conceive why a Shia gentleman of Jaunpur family was selected first as Manager, and then as Assistant Manager of the biggest Sunni estate in Oudh.

It has generally been the policy of the Local Government to select for the management of a disqualified proprietor, a gentleman of the same persuasion to which that proprietor belonged. The appointment of Thakur Bhagoti Dayal Singh as Manager of Pyagpur estate in the same district is a recent proof of the assertion. I have personally nothing to say in this letter against any one; but on principle, I bring to the notice of Government the inadvisability of keeping a Shia as the coadjutor of Mr. Sladen. It is a well known fact that Shias do not respect the Great Saint of Baghdad, and the recent dissensions between the Shias and Sunnis have clearly established it. Although it is a great folly to quarrel with each other, the Shias have in fact a great hatred for the Sunnis and their Khalifas. It must be an unpleasant duty indeed to the Assistant Manager himself to manage and supervise the celebration of the Giarhvin-Sharif, as it would be to a Sunni if he were required to manage the majlises at Husainabad or Shah-Najaf on the 8th of Moharram. If I may not be wrong, I think the Government, after M. Brij Bhukhan Lal gave up charge of the Husainabad Secretaryship, decided that a Sunni or a Hindu should not be appointed as Secretary of the institution which belonged to the Shias. As a result of the present arrangement in Nanpara, the number of Shia employés and lessees of the estate have increased in bulk during the tenure of the Shia Manager, a fact that can easily be ascertained from the authorities. We appeal to the Hon'ble Mr. Cruickshank and His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, to select a Sunni officer for the appointment which will give general satisfaction, and remove the present incumbent from a false position.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,

Fatal accidents at the Tribeni ghat in Allahabad.

4. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 16th October, says that the Tribeni ghat has lately been in a very unsatisfactory state. Fatal drowning accidents have invariably occurred whenever there have been gatherings of pilgrims. It would appear that on Sunday the Daserah day two women, one of whom wore ornaments worth Rs. 700 or Rs. 800 went to the confluence and had a dive in the waters. They were not seen again. The District Magistrate should endeavour to improve the Ramghat and the Tribeni ghat, otherwise thousands of lives will be lost. The editor makes some suggestions for the improvement of the ghat for the information of the District Magistrate.

DEVANAGRI GAZETTE,
1st October, 1905.

Swadeshi movement.

5. The Devanagri Gazette (Meerut), of the 1st October, says that if the Indians desire the prosperity of their country, they should abandon the use of foreign goods and take to using the Indian manufactures. They should prefer the latter to the former, even if the latter happen to be more costly and less gaudy. America, England, Germany and other European countries owe their prosperity to the rise of their trades and industries. The land of the Rising Sun which has but lately come into the front rank of nations owes all to the development of Japanese industries. With a view to checking the import of foreign goods, the British Government passed an Act in 1697, rendering the use of foreign cotton goods in England penal. Indeed the English shop-keepers convicted of dealing in foreign cotton goods were liable to a fine of £40. Thus it will be seen that the encouragement of Indian industries is a sine quâ non for the progress of the country. Moreover, the measure will lead to an improvment in the political status of the people ere long. The refusal of China to patronize American goods has soon brought the Government of the United States to its senses, and induced it to meet the demands of China and cease ill-treating the Chinese coolies. The Indians should refrain from the use of foreign goods in toto. In that case they will soon be able to bring the British nation to its feet and find it ready to lend an ear to their grievances. If the natives of the United Provinces do not co-operate with the brave Bengalis in the Swadeshi movement, they will not find a place even in hell. The Devanagri Gazette thanks the Bengalis for setting the Swadeshi movement on foot, the promoters of the movement which will not allow the Indians to present an address full of false flattery to Lord Curzon, and those persons who will check the use of unholy foreign sugar and salt. Young Bengal has a very critical time before it. Young Bengalis should proceed with great care and caution and avoid the pitfalls ahead. They should strictly follow the advice of their natural leaders to escape getting into trouble.

HINDOSTHAN,
11th October, 1905.

Partition of Bengal and the Swadeshi movement.

6. The English Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 11th October, says:— The Bengal Partition Scheme, which has already been carried out by Lord Curzon's Government, has caused great consternation and dissatisfaction amongst the Bengalis. Numerous monster representative meetings have been held at Calcutta and various other chief places in Bengal, in which the intrepid Bengalis have imitated the procedure which is adopted by agitators in Western countries. Of course, they have not bent the railings of the Viceregal Residence as, on occasions, the anti-Government agitators in England have bent those of Hyde Park. They are passing resolutions at public meetings that unless the Government withdrew the Partition Scheme they would boycott British goods. The result has been that under the pretence and ægis of the Swadeshi movement they have been endeavouring to wreak vengeance on Lord Curzon, though to what extent this movement can injure the Viceroy and British imports into India, is left to the readers to judge for themselves.

It is all very well and fine for the Bengali patriots and lovers of the indigenous arts to induce people to use articles manufactured in India by Indians. There is no doubt that this is a noble and grand movement in the right direction, the aims and objects of which claim sympathy from every Indian—be he a Bengali or a member of any other Indian community. But it is a great pity that this movement should have been associated with the Bengal Partition Scheme, and converted from a non-political into a political question which will keep aloof the magnates of various Indian communities, whose co-operation is a sine quâ non in the matter. The leaders of the movement should not have cared for public fame and made so much ostentation. They should have acted quietly and zealously in the cause of their country that their efforts would have met with success. Past experience has shown that we are not yet prepared to compete successfully with the alien merchants, especially in the absence of Mr. Chamberlain's policy. It should be remembered that the keen competition of Sweden has dealt a death blow to the Ahmedabad Match Factory which is no more in existence. Likewise many other Indian enterprises have met a similar fate. Taking all these disadvantages into consideration, the Bengali leaders should not have been so rash as they have been, and after a mature deliberation of the pros and cons of the subject they should have so shaped the movement as to command public sympathy and co-operation without touching upon the Partition Scheme. Time has not yet arrived when we could boast of competing with the Western merchants, therefore anything that we do towards this attainment, should be done quietly and done slowly but surely.

I am afraid the readers might put a different construction upon my writing, but let me assure them that I am not a whit less than anybody in the world in inducing people and myself to use Swadeshi articles. The only thing I object to, is the mode of carrying on this agitation, viz., that the Swadeshi movement should not have been confused with the Bengal Partition Scheme. With this amendment the movement has my entire support. It would not be out of place to mention here that as far as I can help, I use country-made goods; but I am sorry to say we are unable at present to supply our wants ourselves. In support of my statement I would like to quote the following incident. The other day when I went out shopping at Allahabad, under the influence of the Swadeshi movement, I called upon the Manager of the Indian Trading Company there, as I had to buy some handkerchiefs in compliance with a friend's request. I enquired of the Manager if he had any plain bordered handkerchiefs, and was told in reply that he had none, and showed me some having black borders and resembling jharans. I was rather amused to see them and bought a few for the sake of fun. On my return home I showed the Swadeshi stuff to my friend who was equally amused to see them, and said he never wanted any jharans but asked me to buy a few plain-bordered rumals for him. I assured him that was the only kind I could get at the Indian Trading Company from whom only he desired me to buy the articles. My friend entirely disapproved of the rumals. However, I had to retain them not having bought them subject to approval. By my relating the above incident, I sincerely hope the readers will not misconstrue my meaning. Without intending any harm to the firm in question and the movement I have simply quoted the above to draw the attention of the leaders towards studying the wants and requirements of the people as well as the fashions of the day to compete successfully with the foreign merchants in turning out materials from their mills and factories in India.

HINDOSTHAN,
13th October, 1905.

The Swadeshi movement in Bengal.

7. The English Hindosthan (Kálákankar), of the 13th October, says:—According to the following saying we proceed to advise our Swadeshi movement agitators. Maharaj Lakshamanji said to Maharaj Parsuramji: "Yahan kohud batiya kau nahin jo tarjani dekh kumlahin." (There is nobody here who resembles a young pumpkin which by being pointed out by one's finger dies. There is a belief among the ignorant Indians that the young pumpkin dies by being pointed out by one's finger, so the speaker said that he was not timid.) And say that the English Government is not a young pumpkin which would die by being pointed out. By such hue and cry and hubbub as the Swadeshi movement agitators are making they are frustrating the noble object of their patriotic principles. What business have they to confuse the Swadeshi movement with the strike of the compositors? Why should Swadeshi movement agitators be arrested on the 3rd October in Harrison Road, Calcutta, seventeen in number, being young students and clerks, and in the act of assaulting the police? Are these handful of clerks and students going to make a common cause against the present Government, and if they did, have they any chance of success? They had the audacity of molesting a native on the public road for purchasing Manchester goods. This is lawlessness in excelcis. And then the beauty is this that these objectionable acts are encouraged by such personages as the Hon'ble Bhupendranath Bose and others. In conclusion while supporting heartily the movement of the Swadeshi agitation we heartily disapprove of the adjunction of the partitions with it.

SARASWATI,
October, 1905.

An appeal to Indians to exclusively use India-made articles.

8. The Saraswati (Allahabad), for October, publishes some spirited Hindi stanzas, in which the writer makes an appeal to Indians to co-operate in ameliorating the condition of their mother land by making a point of using no article in any shape that has not been made in this country. The Indians should also go to foreign countries to learn modern industries and on return home open schools to teach the same to the youths of their country. Patriotism is the pivot on which the well-being of a country turns, and Indians cannot too much cultivate it.

ADVOCATE,
19th October, 1905.

Swadeshi movement in the Punjab.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th October, says:—One noticeable feature of the Swadeshi meeting held at Lahore was that of over 5,000 persons who attended the meeting a good percentage came from the Muhammadan community. Some Muhammadan poets sang national songs and Muhammadan speakers spoke of the movement as one which was likely to unite Hindus and Muhammadans together. Munshi Mahbúb Alam pointed out that the movement in the Punjab was likely to benefit Muhammadans more than Hindus as the artizans came from the Muhammadan community. Stress was laid on the fact that the movement has no political significance whatsoever. Similar meetings were held at Ferozepur, Gujranwallah, Behra, Rohtak, Rawalpindi, Lyallpur, Kasoor and some other places.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th October, 1905.

The Swadeshi movement in Moradabad.

10. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th October, publishes the following communication from Moradabad :—The Swadeshi movement has been attracting public attention for some weeks past. A meeting of some of the raises and pleaders of this city was held at the premises of R. B. Dwarka Singh, retired Sub-Inspector of Police, yesterday and promises to the value of about Rs. 33,000 were made with a view to open a new industry at Moradabad. What form the industry will take is not yet decided, but the people of this city are at one with the inhabitants of this country in general, and of Bengal in particular, in pushing the Swadeshi movement.

OUDH AKHBÁR,
21st October, 1905.

The Swadeshi movement.

11. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 21st October, referring to the Swadeshi movement, says that it is incumbent on the Indians to encourage and patronize the artizans of their own country, if they desire to remove the poverty of their fellow-countrymen. India-made cotton goods are far more durable than Manchester ones. The former are no doubt a little coarser, but patriotic Indians should be quite willing to use them, and no longer hanker after gaudy and cheap Manchester goods. Time was when the finest and most durable cloths used to be turned out by Indian weavers, but as the taste of Indians changed, and they took a fancy to foreign cloths the old Indian industries have died out. But it is a matter of satisfaction that the Indians have at last become alive to the heavy drain which the import of foreign goods involves to their country, and have seen the necessity of reviving their old industries. The latter, if duly encouraged, will soon be revived, and begin to supply the entire home demands in a short time. It is high time that Indians took to using not only home-made cloths, but also all other articles they use, so far as possible.

ADVOCATE,
15th October, 1905.

A Pandit preaching the Swadeshi movement arrested at Delhi.

12. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 15th October, says :—We were astonished to receive the news of the arrest of Pandit Kashinath Misra of Bara Banki at Delhi. It appears that the Pandit delivered a speech near the Queen's statue on the Swadeshi movement. The speech according to our correspondent contained nothing objectionable, yet under the orders of the District Magistrate Pandit Kashinath was arrested next day and placed in havalat. Mr. Shankernath, Barrister-at-law, tried to have him released on bail but failed. Major Parsons, the District Magistrate, made the following astonishing observations :—

"O your rulings ! I don't want people to come from outside and make disturbance here. I don't know what attitude the Government is going to take in connection with this movement, but I am not going to accept bail for the accused. The accused remains in prison."

The bail was, however, accepted after three days. The case was to come up on the 10th instant for hearing ; the result is not yet known. Those who know Pandit Kashinath, know him to be a quiet sort of man. Why should Major Parsons smell sedition and rebellion in the word Swadeshi? This arrest shows how people are at the mercy of the police whose one-sided reports are regarded as gospel truth by over-zealous officials.

ADVOCATE,
19th October, 1905.

The Delhi case and Swadeshi movement.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th October, says :—In replying to the address presented by the members of the Subordinate Service at Simla to which Lord Curzon gave an undue importance, His Excellency observed : "A single act of injustice is, in my view, a greater stain upon our rule than much larger errors of policy or judgment." That the ideal set here is noble cannot be denied for one moment, but the question is whether practical effect is given to this high ideal. Do not the magistracy and the police with impunity cast stain on the British sense of justice? Have not matters reached the length that the confidence of the public has been shaken in the proverbial fame of British justice? No ruler has done more to disturb this faith by errors of judgment than His Lordship himself. Leaving higher questions of policy apart, the effect of which is not at once felt by the mass of the people in the administration of the country, a sense of irresponsibility prevails in a class of district officers which is highly detrimental to the good government of the country. People are simply at the mercy of the police and the magistracy. Just take the case which has scandalised the Upper Indian public. Pandit Kashi Pershad Misra of Bara Banki is a quiet sort of man, an enthusiast in the cause of social and temperance reform, a man, who has never been known for creating mischief or harbouring any ill-feeling against the British Government. He is an honorary preacher of the Temparance League and does not accept a shell for his services to the Temperance or other causes to which he is devoted. So it is pure calumny to say that he is a paid agent of any Bengal agitators. In his over-enthusiasm to do good to his country, he, of his own accord, began to address concourses of people on Swadeshism. It is unfortunate that the word should convey at the present moment any political significance, but there is no reason why anybody should smell sedition in the term. Major Parsons, Deputy Commissioner of Delhi, must have a curious temperament that he should for one moment consider Delhi in danger, because the Pandit as a temperance preacher instead of impressing on the people the good qualities of pure water had taken into his head to preach to the people what Lord Curzon had himself preached while opening the Arts Exhibition at Delhi, namely, to prefer Indian articles to foreign goods. Major Parsons was not himself present at the meeting addressed by Pandit Kashi Pershad. He must have given instruction to the police to keep an eye on the Pandit, and as loyal henchmen the Delhi police did what their brethren in other parts of India do to please the lords of their districts, that is they put words in the mouth of Kashi Pershad which he had never uttered. Major Parsons, without any enquiry as to the antecedents of Kashi Pershad, without for one moment thinking what would be the result of his action, got Kashi Pershad arrested and put in the havalat. Major Parsons lost the balance of his judicial mind and treated Mr. Shanker Nath, accused's counsel, as if he was a petty muharrir of his amla room. It was expected that Kashi Pershad would be put on his trial, and be informed of the offence for which he had been consigned to the havalat. Instead of this, we find Major Parsons taking a curious procedure. He called Kashi Pershad at his own house and passed the following extraordinary order :—

> Order :—I had this man Kashi Pershad taken into custody on the 3rd instant (admitted to bail on the 6th instant). While I considered whether a bond should be taken from him or not (under section 118, Criminal Procedure Code) in order to make him cease his tour or delivering speeches calculated to disturb the public tranquillity, which is of course his definite object and of his supporters. He is probably a paid agent of the agitators who for reasons of their own are at this moment avowedly trying to disturb the public tranquillity. After considering and taking advice in the matter, I have decided not to make an order under section 112 and have decided to discharge the man which I accordingly do with a warning.
> 10-10-1905.

Where did Major Parsons seek advice after arresting Kashi Pershad? If any advice was necessary, he ought to have taken it at the time of issuing the warrant. The arrest shows arrant disregard of the rules and regulations laid down to guide a District Magistrate on such occasions. His action was altogether illegal and he had recourse to it with the view to brow-beat Kashi Pershad and thus to kill the Swadeshi movement in Delhi. And he failed to achieve this result, and, in this attempt to achieve the result, brought discredit on himself. We are not surprised to hear that the arrest has caused an amount of excitement in Delhi, has roused feelings of sympathy in the people for the Swadeshi movement, which at a place like Delhi which has no political life, could not be roused by the efforts of many a preacher. By keeping Pandit Kashi Pershad in the lock-up for four days, Major Parsons made a martyr of the Pandit and we are not surprised to learn that even sleepy Delhi rose equal to the occasion and the simple quiet Brahman of Bara Banki, unknown beyond a limited circle of friends, became the centre of attention and got the honour of a reception at a garden party on the grounds of a public garden of Delhi. Major Parsons has unwillingly done a good turn to the Swadeshi movement. We hope, however, that the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab will not quietly pass over the matter, but pass such orders as will prevent repetitions of such high-handed proceedings.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th October, 1905.

Arrest of one Pandit Kashi Nath at Delhi for preaching Swadeshism.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th October, says:—If people could see themselves as others see them, Captain Parsons, Deputy Commissioner of Delhi, would realise what a ridiculous figure he has made in the extraordinary proceedings against Pandit Kashi Nath, who had spoken at a public meeting at Delhi on the Swadeshi question. We notice that the report of the proceedings sent us is the same as furnished to several other papers and must be taken as correct unless contradicted authoritatively. There can be no question that the arrest of the Swadeshi preacher was illegal; his detention in the lock-up and the refusal of bail were equally illegal; and the sudden and ignominious collapse of the whole proceedings redounded wholly to the discredit of the Deputy Commissioner. That an officer so utterly ignorant of law and procedure should be District Magistrate of such an important district as Delhi is a reflection on the Punjab Government itself. The dialogue, or rather the monologue, between the Deputy Commissioner and Mr. Shanker Nath, Barrister-at-Law, is another extraordinary exhibition of wisdom on the part of Captain Parsons, and his order is about the most senseless thing we have ever seen recorded. It seems the police had got together twenty witnesses, but their interesting evidence could not be taken as the Deputy Commissioner had received a hint from higher quarters that he had got hold of the wrong man and the wrong case. Still, he told the counsel who appeared for the Pandit that he (the Deputy Commissioner) hoped he (counsel) had been well paid—a most gratuitously offensive thing to say. Captain Parsons ought to have known—only he does not seem to know anything that he ought to know—that counsel was not paid for what he was doing, and if he was paid, what then? He was at any rate doing his duty by his client and that is more than can be said about Captain Parsons, who has no conception of the duty he is paid to do. His remarks against the Bengali agitators, his gratuitous assumption, without the shadow of any evidence, that the Pandit is a paid agent of the agitators who are trying to disturb the public tranquillity, all tend to prove his utter unfitness to discharge judicial functions or to be put in charge of an important district.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th October, 1905.

The Headmaster of a Government Middle School suspended for speaking in favour of the Swadeshi movement at a public meeting in the Central Provinces.

15. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th October, says:—A correspondent, writing from Amrapura, Harda, Central Provinces, informs us that some time ago a public meeting was held in connection with the Swadeshi movement, among the speakers being the Headmaster of the local Government Middle school. His main point was that local industries should be encouraged, and he quoted the very high authority of Lord Curzon in support of his contention. A similar meeting was held some days later, though it is not stated whether the Headmaster made another speech on this occasion. Any way, the Headmaster and some other speakers who had spoken at the previous meeting received orders that they should take no part in such meetings. These orders were obeyed, but before any fresh occasion for offence could arise the Headmaster was suddenly suspended and some other speakers were sent for and closely examined as to what they and the Headmaster had said. The extreme nervousness that the Swadeshi movement has produced among officials would be laughable but for consequences such as those mentioned above. Unless it is proved that this movement is primarily and directly political—and it is inconceivable by what torture of reasoning this can be accomplished—we do not see how the suspension of the Headmaster can be justified. Outside Bengal the Swadeshi movement is a purely economical and industrial question. Besides, public speeches and meetings do not constitute the strength of the movement. Public servants may be easily forbidden to take part in public demonstrations, but how can they be prevented from buying Swadeshi articles, which is all that the movement aims at?

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th October, 1905.

Manchester, and the Swadeshi and boycott movement.

16. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th October, says:—The official attitude on this question is very simple. Whatever has pleased Lord Curzon has pleased Sir Andrew Fraser, and the necessity for admitting the threatened rupture of trade relations between England and Bengal, and possibly India, was never recognised. The boycott was looked upon as a coercive demonstration. Was Lord Curzon, the greatest Viceroy after Dalhousie, to be coerced by a Bengali agitation? Perish the thought! His Excellency had been coerced pretty tight between Lord Kitchener and Mr. Brodrick, but would he give way to the Bengali Babus? Certainly not, but still we think it was the bounden duty of the Bengal Government and the Government of India to take a correct measure of the proportions of the boycott movement and to advise the Secretary of State for India accordingly. But the Government ignored it altogether. The merchants could not possibly have overlooked what was happening, but they were reluctant to admit that the boycott was pressing closer and closer upon the import trade with England and Europe. The leading Anglo-Indian paper of Calcutta went on publishing pure fabrications from day to day, asserting that the boycott, and the Swadeshi movement were dead. All this reluctance was quite natural. To admit that the leaders of the agitation could really dislocate the trade would have involved a recognition of their power and no section of the Anglo-Indian community was prepared to do this. The Manchester Chamber of Commerce were still more indifferent because they did not think the Bengali Babus were capable of organising an effective boycott. And now the thing is done. Far more wonderful than the Partition of Bengal, for whereas no one doubted Lord Curzon's power to divide Bengal, every one doubted the power of the people of Bengal to make the boycott felt in Manchester. They have succeeded beyond the most sanguine expectations, and a complete dislocation of foreign and English trade is an accomplished fact. It is still a long way to look ahead as to the probable consequences of this agitation, but there can be no question that a new chapter has been opened in British Indian history.

SIPAHI,
10th October, 1905.

Protest against the alleged agitation of the Lancashire mill-owners to get a law passed for curtailing the number of daily working hours in the Indian mills.

17. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 10th October, says that as resenting the partition of Bengal the Bengalis, and other Indians have given up the use of foreign cloths, the demand for India-made fabrics has greatly risen. Owing to this or some other cause, some of the cotton mills in Bombay lately began to work for a larger number of hours a day. On the receipt of this intelligence the Lancashire mill-owners became very angry, and they are going to send a deputation to the Secretary of State for India to persuade him to have a law similar to that prevailing in England passed in India for working the mills for fewer hours in the latter country also. The English mill-owners have some of their own countrymen in the Bombay mills, and the latter are sure to help them in getting such a law passed for this country also. But India is not England. There is a great difference betwen the climates of the two countries, as well as in the nature, character, mode of living, &c. If the same kind of laws will do for both the countries and their inhabitants in the matter of cotton mills, why should not the same treatment be accorded to British and Indian soldiers, in all respects? Why great improvements are being made in the comfort, accommodation, salaries, &c. of British soldiers from time to time, while Indian soldiers continue to receive the paltry pay of Rs. 9 a month, and to be accommodated in tiled huts as before? Why do not Indian soldiers rise beyond Sirdarships, and so on? Why is not a Parliament like the British Parliament established in India, and why are Indians not allowed to bear arms and freely enlist as volunteers like Englishmen? Surely Indians are as loyal to the British Crown as Britons themselves can be; then why should they not be accorded equal treatment in all matters and not in any particular one? The fact of the matter is that Englishmen and Indians are to be held on the same footing in some matters and not in others just as it suits the pure interests of the British: but this is very unjust indeed.

Complaint regarding the condition of a road from Sirathu to Kalakankar.

18. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 16th October, says:—The attention of the authorities concerned is invited to the wretched condition of the road from Sirathu to Kalakankar. The main part of the road is kachcha, and that is the part which specially requires repairing every year. The task is neither very difficult nor very costly. The earth composing the road is so loose and so badly, if at all, beaten, that it readily gives way before the tiny streamlets that run down its sides when it rains, and large and deep pits are produced in the road proper and along its sides. The easiest way of keeping the road in good condition is to repair it every year after the rainy season is over. But in order to make any lasting repairs it is necessary to spread and beat along the sides of the road chikni mitti. If that is done, the sides will stand washing in the rains, and will prevent the earth from being swept off the road.

AGRA AKHBAR,
21st October, 1905.

A suggestion for certain special concessions being made to Indian Mutiny veterans in honour of the Prince of Wales' approaching visit to India.

1. MUHAMMAD NÚR KHAN, ex-risaldár, a Mutiny veteran, writing in the Agra Akhbár (Agra), of the 21st October, suggests that just as Lord Curzon honoured Indian Mutiny veterans by giving them seats in the Coronation Darbár at Delhi, so the Government would do well to honour them again by inviting them to pay their respects to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales either at the Lahore or Agra (sic) Darbár. The veterans should further be honoured by grant of medals and exemption from the operation of the Arms Act in commemoration of His Highness' visit, and the officers among them allowed seats in law courts, and given the title of captains. Should these suggestions be adopted, it would greatly stimulate the devotion of Indian soldiers, and induce people to readily enlist in the army, and the task of recruiting officers will be greatly facilitated in future.

BHARAT JIWAN,
26th October, 1905.

Preservation of cattle.

2. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 26th October, says that India being an agricultural country par excellence a good bovine species is a sine quâ non. It is therefore the duty of every Indian, whether he be a Hindu, a Muhammadan or a Christian, to take steps for the preservation of cattle. The editor appeals to Government to adopt measures for the preservation and improvement of kine in honour of the Indian visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The measure would be a lasting memorial of the royal visit.

ADVOCATE,

Indians in Cape Colony.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th October, says :—The Indian subject of King Edward VII has become a complete Uitlander in South Africa. The Government of the Cape Colony has followed in the wake of the Transvaal Administration to legally brand the Indian as one of the undesirables there. A new regulation has been formulated. It forbids an Indian entering Cape Colony unless he has domicile in South Africa and either possesses £20, able to write a European language, and is the owner of a business. A domicile consists in the intention to bring a wife and family or to make a permanent home in South Africa. Evidently then the independent Indian is a dreaded animal in all colonies, not because he is dirty or diseased, but because he knows the art of living almost upon nothing and underselling all his competitors in any trade in which he may be engaged. The Indian's very method of plain living and his frugal ways are his great disqualifications in the colonies.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

The Alwar incident.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd October, says :—Is there any means of ascertaining the truth about the strange allegation going the round of the press that the Government wanted the Alwar Darbár to take a number of camels off its hands, that the Mahárája pleaded inability, that he was again pressed and that it was with very great difficulty that he begged off in the end ? We wonder whether it is covered by the new Official Secrets Act which throws its ample mantle over the affairs of Native States. However, we do not feel ourselves justified in expressing any opinion about a matter on which no authentic information is available. A question in the House of Commons when Parliament meets again may elicit the facts.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd October, 1905.

Two Europeans convicted by the Allahabad High Court of ravishing a coolie woman.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 22nd October, says:—The case which was tried in the Criminal Sessions of the Allahabad High Court in the beginning of this week before Mr. Justice Richards and a mixed jury is an instance of the most revolting and almost a gang outrage, three Europeans having been found guilty of ravishing a coolie woman on a railway truck. One of the three turned King's evidence in the Court of the Joint Magistrate, Cawnpore, and was granted a free pardon. In the Sessions Court this man became a hostile witness and the prosecution refused to call him. The defence, however, applied to the Court that this witness might be called. The man turned round and made a statement against the prosecution and the Judge very properly remanded him to the lock-up, calling upon him to show cause why he should not forfeit his pardon and be prosecuted for giving false evidence. As regards the two accused the majority of the jury found them guilty on both charges, sections 376—109, Indian Penal Code, and the Judge sentenced one man to seven years' rigorous imprisonment on each charge and the other to five years, the sentences to run concurrently. The defence tried to plead consent on the part of the woman, but it was incredible that any woman, much less a coolie woman who is frightened at the sight of a European, would consent to ravishment—the Irish bull may pass—by three men successively, close to her people and her husband. The only satisfaction is that substantial justice has been done in the case. As for the third man, he is before the Court on a charge of perjury and the result of his trial may be awaited.

CITIZEN,
23rd October, 1905.

Trial of two Europeans for raping a young native girl, by Mr. Justice Richards in the Allahabad High Court.

6. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 23rd October, says:—Another proof the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Richards has just given of the fact that he is a man of integrity and independence and would not allow himself to be influenced by evil advisers—by sentencing the two prisoners, Guard Ramskill and Private Dymock, to seven and five years' rigorous imprisonment respectively. These men were charged with having committed rape and aided and abetted in the commission of the offence on or about the 14th July at 10 P.M. The circumstances of the case may thus be summarized:—While the ballast train male coolies were absent from their respective trucks, the aforesaid prisoners, as also Driver Bernard of the same train, finding a young coolie girl, named Sawai, alone in her truck, got into it, gagged her and ravished her by turn. While the accused named Bernard was having his turn, a lad of some 11 or 12 years in the next truck wanted some fire and came to ask for it; and as he got on the wheel of the truck he was pushed down by one of the prisoners, causing hurt on the knee. The boy ran immediately to the male coolies to inform the husband of the girl about what he had seen. In the meantime the prisoners made off, and on the goods platform they were overheard by one Ardesher, an employé in the same train, while conversing about the enjoyment they were having. At this time, the husband of the girl, together with other coolies, arrived to complain of the occurrence; and Ardesher, having informed the prisoners that the coolies would strike for having been annoyed, Ramksill, pointing a revolver, exclaimed "A dead man tells no tale;" but before it could be fired, he ran away with his life. Driver Bernard became the King's witness and was given a free pardon by the Joint Magistrate of Cawnpore. It transpired in the examination of prisoner Dymock that he committed the offence when he was suffering from syphilis. The defence admitted the commission of the offence but tried to prove the consent of the girl. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, seven against two, and the learned Judge agreeing convicted both the prisoners and sentenced Ramskill to seven years' and Private Dymock to five years' rigorous imprisonment. The prosecution had refused to call Driver Bernard who had stood as King's witness; but on the application of Mr. Sorabji, he was called by the Court; and having made statements against the prosecution was called upon to show cause why his pardon should not be forfeited and he should not be prosecuted for giving false evidence. The 4th of November has been fixed for the hearing of that proceeding. In the meantime he is in the lock-up. At a time when the leaven of discontent is working almost everywhere, Mr. Richards' act of justice will soothe the feelings of the people not a little, and we cannot express our gratitude to him too fervently.

In any country other than British India what Mr. Justice Richards has done would hardly elicit any applause, for it would be regarded as a mere matter of course and as nothing extraordinary. In this unhappy land, however, where acts of brutality by Europeans and Eurasians are constantly perpetrated and, as a rule, followed by failure of justice, the case is otherwise. The Saran outrage case must still be fresh in the minds of all. The Magistrate of the District who tried the case would not believe that the woman whose modesty had been outraged could identify the accused; and with him the evidence of the other Indian witnesses too went for nothing. The English culprit was thus virtually allowed to escape. In Europe and America a sum is generally allowed to an indignant husband, so that thenceforth he may continue to regard his own disgrace and that of his divorced wife with philosophic complaisance. But Asiatic peoples regard the honour of their women above all price. Students of history may remember what it was that had led to the Afghan rising of 1842, which resulted in the massacre of the British embassy and the annihilation of the entire British force with the exception of one who carried to us the tale of the disaster. We warn the Government that too many of outrage cases in India may cause even the Indian worm to turn and to spurn the members of the "superior race."

Suggestion for the appointment of a Muhammadan Sarishtadar in the office of Board of Revenue.

7. Al Bashir (Etáwah), of the 17th October, complains that there never has been a Muhammadan Sarishtadar in the office of the Board of Revenue in the United Provinces, and asks the Board to take an early opportunity to appoint a Muhammadan Sarishtadar to make amends for the past.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th October, 1905.

Lahore municipal address to Lord Curzon.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th October, says:—The spirited protest of the citizens and ratepayers of Lahore against the proposal of the local Municipality to present a farewell address to Lord Curzon in a costly casket reminds us of another instance that occurred some years ago of the independence of our Punjabi friends, when there was a proposal to erect a statue of the late Queen-Empress, of revered memory. A public meeting was called to vote the statue. Although the citizens of Lahore yielded to none in their devoted loyalty to the Queen-Empress, they felt that the time was inopportune as the land was in the grip of a terrible famine and any funds that could be raised should be devoted to the relief of suffering. Accordingly, the supporters of the statue found themselves outvoted at the meeting, which they left precipitately. The audience elected another chairman and passed a resolution to the effect that the funds should be paid to an orphanage. Afterwards, a packed meeting with almost closed doors was held and the statue was voted. In the present case there is no reason why the ratepayers should submit to the action of the Municipality. It is not sufficient to protest and there is no reason why action should not be taken. The Municipal Committee, or the official President, has no right to deal with the money of the ratepayers at the Commissioners' or the President's will. The proper thing would be for the President and the Commissioners to subscribe the cost of the casket among themselves. Otherwise any ratepayer can bring an action against them in their personal capacity for misapplication of municipal funds, and we hope a suit will be filed.

MUFID-I-AM,
20th October, 1905.

Bungalows situated within the Cantonment limits at Agra.

9. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 20th October, complains that the bungalows situated within the Cantonment limits at Agra have generally been vacant to the great loss of the owners. Lately a Civilian desired to hire a bungalow and the owner applied to the Cantonment Magistrate for permission; the Cantonment Magistrate replied that the owner could let the house only to a Military officer with his permission. This system is a source of heavy losses to the owners. To make matters worse the Military officers require the owners to make frequent and costly repairs. Indeed the cost of the repairs amounts nearly to the rent of the bungalow every month. In these circumstances the Cantonment Magistrate himself had better take charge of all the bungalows, pay rent to the owners every month, and then he could let the bungalows to any persons he pleases; or better still Government had better purchase all the bungalows outright, paying the owners the prices for which they themselves bought them. The Government of India had better take the subject into consideration.

ADVOCATE,
26th October, 1905.

Allahabad University.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th October, says:—We are not surprised to notice the feeling of opposition which the agenda paper of the next Senate meeting has called forth in the Fellows of the University, particularly in those who belong to the Colleges as Principals and Professors. We have not been permitted to see what notice has been given of the several amendments that should be pressed at the next meeting to prevent the Vice-Chancellor from at once putting in force the new regulations. In the agenda paper of the annual meeting to be held on the 13th November, the several items to be laid before the Senate have been noted as under:—

> The Registrar will report receipt of G. O. No. 524/XV—570-A/5, dated the 9th September 1905, conveying sanction of the Local Government, under section 26, sub-section (1), clause (a), of the Indian Universities Act of 1904, to the revised body of regulations of the University (vide Appendix A).
> III.—Under Regulation 2, Chapter III, of the Regulation of the University the Senate will assign Fellows of the University—
> (a) to the Faculty of Arts;
> (b) to the Faculty of Science; and
> (c) to the Faculty of Law.
> (The Senate will here adjourn until the several Faculties, formed as above, have respectively elected their Deans. As soon as the Deans have been elected the Senate will resume its sitting.)
> IV.—Under Regulation 1, clauses (d) and (e), Chapter II, of the Regulations of the University, the Senate will elect its Syndicate.

From this notice it is inferred that the Vice-Chancellor means to enforce the new regulations with the permission of the Senate and through the new Faculties and the new Syndicate. But how curious it is that he should in connection with the annual meeting call a meeting, on the 11th November, two days before the Senate meeting, of the Boards of Studies, Faculties and the Syndicate, in order to lay the following business before the respective bodies:—

Provisional Boards of Studies to bring the courses of study for 1906 and 1907 into conformity with the revised regulations		... ...	10 A.M.
Meeting of the Provisional Faculty of Arts		... ...	11 A.M.
Ditto ditto	Science	... ...	12 A.M.
Ditto ditto	Law	... ...	2-30 P.M.

(The Provisional Faculties of Arts and Science to receive reports by Provisional Boards of Studies. The Provisional Faculty of Law will meet to bring courses of study for 1906 and 1907 into harmony with the revised regulations.)

Provisional Syndicate meeting, 3-30 P.M., to receive for sanction the reports of the Provisional Faculties and to transact other business.

These proceedings are mysterious. Why should the Provisional Boards of Studies be allowed to revise the courses according to the new regulations two days before the meeting of the Senate which meets to consider when the new rules should come into force? Why should the Vice-Chancellor be in such a great hurry for the revision of the courses? Has he considered what will be the effect of the new regulations if they are at once put in force? The result will be that there will be no examination for the M.A. degree, because according to the new regulations graduates cannot prepare their courses to appear in the M.A. degree examinations in a few months. Any interference with the courses of study of the B.A. class students who are now ready for the examination in the subjects and text-books fixed previously will be a distinct breach of faith on the part of the University. They will also be made to lose two years. This is no doubt a very serious aspect. So we are glad that, at the instance of Mr. A. H. Pirie, Principal of the Canning College, a memorial is about to be submitted to the Chancellor to prevent the Vice-Chancellor in having recourse to an illegal procedure while trying to enforce the regulations of which the sure and certain effect will be disastrous to candidates for the coming University examination. No University has yet been able to revise its regulations, none has received the sanction of the Government for the innovations to be introduced under the University Act. Why of all Universities should the Allahabad be so anxious to carry out the behests of the Government? Let it have patience and allow time to the educational experts to see from what date the new amendments should be introduced without creating a wrench from the past. We learn that notices for a large number of amendments have been given by Principals asking the Senate to postpone the enforcement of the new rules. Mr. Westcott and Mr. We Jesse desire that a Sub-Committee of the Senate should be appointed to consider the courses of study and to submit proposals through the Faculties to the Senate meeting to be held in January next; Mr. A. B. Ewing and Mr. A. Crosthwaite desire that, notwithstanding anything contained in the regulations sanctioned by the Government, the courses of study for 1906 and 1907 should remain as announced in the University prospectus. All this is expert opinion. Why should it not be respected? One of the objects of passing the Universities Act was to show greater respect for expert opinion, to give the Universities the benefit of the experience of men engaged in the education of the young. Why should the Allahabad University show any disrespect to them and do things which cause no little alarm among students preparing for its several examinations to be held next year?

No Muhammadan Deputy Collector in some districts.

11. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 17th October, regrets to says that there is not a single Muhammadan Deputy Collector in some districts in the United Provinces. Bulandshahr is an instance in point. There are many Muhammadan landholders and other well-to-do Muhammadan residents in the district. Indeed Government should maintain a due proportion of Hindu and Muhammadan officials in every bureau.

AL BASHIR,

Hindu and Muhammadan Deputy Collectors.

12. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 17th October, says that among the Tahsildars selected for the posts of Deputy Collectors this year there are 50 Hindus and only 3 Musalmans. This proportion is open to no objection in view of population. But looking at the list of Deputy Collectors the editor cannot consider the proportion to be just and fair. During the tyrannical administration of Sir Antony MacDonnell the number of Muhammadan Deputy Collectors was greatly reduced, and it was the duty of the Board of Revenue to strengthen the Muhammadan element during the just rule of Sir James Digges LaTouche.

HINDOSTHAN,
20th October, 1905.

The partition of Bengal a fait accompli.

13. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 20th October says:—On Monday last the Partition of Bengal became a very fact. It will take sometime to ascertain whether the prophets who have predicted all sorts of evil would follow the partition have any foundation in fact. We ourselves have no faith in the wild and fanatical predictions which for the past month the native press have given publicity to. We do not believe that Government had any intention other than to forward the best interests of Bengal. To assume that Government had any other intention, is one of those evil designs always being attributed by a certain portion of the Bengal press to the Government of India by fanatical writers of incontrollable and disordered minds.

If national sentiment is animated by any real vitality of its own, it should be independent of such questions as has exercised the Bengali to the alarming extent it has lately done. That is to our way of thinking common sense; but common sense and sentiment very often differ, invariably to the discredit of sentiment.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
25th October, 1905.

The Aligarh Institute Gazette recommending Swadeshism to Musalmans also.

14. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 25th October, referring to the Swadeshi movement among the Bengalis strongly urges the Muhammadans to realize the far-reaching and highly beneficial effects of this movement in India. It is not a political but an economical movement, and if successfully carried out it will check the growing impoverishment of the country and supply employment to those that go unemployed at present. America, Japan, England and other European countries know the value of the cultivation of indigenous industries and encourge them by all means in their power. The Musalmans should therefore in no way be opposed to the Swadeshi movement, or they will reap the same fruit of their aloofness from it as they have reaped from their abstention from Western education in times past. As regards Government appointments, they cannot expect to get more than their proportionate share, and hence unless they take time by the forelock and push forward in the rising tide of Swadeshism at once, they are sure to be left behind in the race by the other communities as they have been in the matter of education. It is time that they too took to sending out their youths to Japan to learn modern industries.

OUDH AKHBAR,
23rd October, 1905.

The Swadeshi movement, and the desirability of establishing industrial museums in India.

15. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 23rd October, says that the Swadeshi movement is nothing but a private effort on the part of Indians to protect their indigenous arts and industries against foreign competition. But to succeed in this endeavour, it is very necessary for the Indians to make some sacrifice in being willing to use their home made coarse articles in preference to fine-looking foreign ones. Even England adopted this measure against the import of fine India-made cotton fabrics (in the past) to protect her indigenous woollen industries. America too sought to protect her industries against British competition in a similar way. The Indians should not therefore be afraid that there is anything wrong in the Swadeshi movement. Associations after associations have lately been fast springing up in the various parts of the country whose one object is to promote the cause of native arts and industries and save these from outside crushing competition, even though it should entail some sacrifice. To give further impetus to the Swadeshi movement, industrial museums should be established, and be open to the public, so that people may easily know where particular articles can be had, &c.

ADVOCATE,
26th October, 1905.

Swadeshi movement at Agra.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th October, says :—A correspondent wires from Agra :—A Swadeshi mass meeeting was held on Sunday at Mankameshwar temple. Over ten thousand people, Hindus and Muhammadans, were present. The native Christians sent a sympathetic message explaining absence on account of Sunday. Lala Kedarnath, Vakil, was elected Chairman. The meeting commenced and terminated with the singing of national songs. Resolutions were passed for adoption of country goods. In conclusion cheers were given for the King Emperor and Motherland. Great enthusiasm prevailed. The meeting being uncontrollable had to be divided into three parts where different speakers addressed. Even then many had to go away for want of room.

ADVOCATE,
26th October, 1905.

Students and Swadeshism.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th October, says :—Elsewhere is published the warning circular alleged to have been issued by the District Magistrates of Bengal to Head Masters of zilla and aided schools with a view to prevent students from taking part in the Swadeshi movement. We have nothing but pity for the advisers of Government for the adoption of such an impolitic and panic-stricken course. The history of the case reveals the political delirium tremens the rulers in Bengal are now suffering from. Some of the leaders were sent for and asked to keep the students away from the Swadeshi movement. The leaders felt the students had not been doing anything against the law of the land. Then Mr. Pedler, presumably under instructions from above, issued a circular calling upon teachers to suppress Swadeshism among students, failing which they would, it was threatened, be turned into special constables and forced thus to furnish to the police names of students preaching the new cult. The measure looked too Russian even to the Director's jaundiced eye. He forthwith withdrew it. Then perhaps the executive officers thought they could do the very same thing in their own capacity. Hence the warning circular that literally warns the rulers and not students or school authorities of rocks ahead in the manufacture of crimes by the police whose factory is already doing lots of business in that line. Evidently the authorities in Bengal have lost their heads as much as the leaders of the people there have kept theirs cool even under provocation.

CITIZEN,
23rd October, 1905.

Complaint regarding the non-observance of gazetted holidays in the office of the Accountant-General at Allahabad.

18. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 23rd October, referring to Lord Curzon's reply to the clerks' address at Simla, says :—Lord Curzon said : 'I set myself, therefore, to try to understand the position and, if possible, to alleviate the lot of the classes of whom I have been speaking ; and the new rules which we have passed, or systems that we have introduced about the abolition of fines in the departments of Government, the observance of public holidays, the leave rule of the subordinate services, the rank and pay of the higher grades among them and the allowances and pensionary prospects of all classes, have, I hope, done a good deal to mitigate some of the hardships that had been felt, and to place them in a more assured and comfortable position in the future." We are prepared to give His Excellency credit for the rules that he has passed and the systems that he has introduced. But we venture to enquire whether he has at any time paused to ascertain how far those rules are carried into practice, and whether those systems have actually alleviated the lot of the men concerned. From every department and section of Government service, letters reach us every day describing in piteous terms the hard lot of the poor clerks ; and we know of few Government offices where the standing orders of Government as to the grant of leave and observance of holidays are not openly set at defiance. We shall to-day cite only one instance. The office of Accountant-General for the United Provinces is, we understand, directly under the control of the Government of India, and yet, in that office, particularly in the Treasury Department, clerks are required to attend even on Sundays, no other holidays being granted them in lieu of such Sundays on which they are required to attend. The Government order is, however urgent the nature of work, no clerk will be required to attend on a holiday which on account of his religious persuasion he regards as peculiarly sacred. And yet in the Treasury Account Department, Muhammadans as a class were required to attend on the 14th instant, which was a gazetted holiday in honour of Shab-i-barat. To crown the misery of the poor men, an order has been issued by that worthy officer, the Deputy Accountant-General, Mr. A. Newmarch, that the clerks must attend office every day from 10 to 6. Now, who is responsible for these hardships? We are of course aware that a Viceroy cannot make it his business to personally watch over every office and regulate its working days and hours. But surely when a Viceroy takes credit for the introduction of certain rules and systems, the Government of that Viceroy should see that those rules and systems are strictly followed.

Proposed Medical College in Lucknow.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th October, says :—There can be only one opinion as to the idea in Lucknow to commemorate the visit of the Prince of Wales to that city by the establishment of a Medical College, and we are very much gratified that the scheme has the cordial approval of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of these Provinces. In addressing the influential deputation that waited upon him in connection with this scheme the Lieutenant-Governor gave an interesting and succinct account of the previous attempts to found a Medical College for these Provinces, and how the munificent offer of the late Mahárája of Vizianagram, who belonged to another Presidency, could not be accepted by the Local Government of those days on account of the refusal of the Government of India to support the scheme financially. As Sir James La Touche pointed out, history is now repeating itself, and the idea which could not be carried out in 1870 has a much better chance of fruition in 1906. We particularly wish to commend to our readers the following words of the Lieutenant-Governor :—" I wish to put aside any project which might be considered a fad of my own or a fad of any other individual. In giving precedence to reforms I wish to select those which are desired by and are certain of the commendation and support of the people at large. Such projects alone are likely to succeed, and I am ready to do all in my power to push them on. Now the institution of a Medical College is to my mind a project of this kind." If our rulers would follow these principles in the introduction of reforms, there would be greater sympathy between the Government and the people, nor should Lord Curzon be leaving the legacy of a discontented India to his successor. The subscriptions promised to the proposed Lucknow Medical College are an indication of earnestness of purpose, and we hope the Nawáb of Rámpur and other magnates will follow the munificent example of the Maháraja of Balrámpur. The College, it is needless to add, will be neither denominational nor sectional.

North-Western Provinces Tenancy Act.

20. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 25th October, publishes a communication from Tajammul Husain, landholder in Nahtore. The writer says that the North-Western Provinces Tenancy Act (No. II of 1901) has set the landholders and tenants by the heels. Indeed, the Act has made great concessions to tenants and has enabled them to deprive the landholders of their privileges. This is conclusive proof that the landholders have incurred the displeasure of Government. They have been always ready to give a ready response to the appeal of the authorities in all matters. What fault have they committed that they have fallen under the displeasure of Government? All agreements made between landholders and tenants have been rendered null and void by section 3 of the Act, which is opposed to all law and precedent. There is a special Contract Act. The section should be cancelled. Sections 11 to 14 should be modified in such a way that when a tenant has resigned his holding or has been ejected, or has been admitted to other land, this second land should not be considered to be in exchange for his first holding, and all his rights should cease. The landholders should be empowered to realize from the tenants the abwábs and dues which Government recovers from the landholders along with the revenue assessments. The tenant, whether an occupancy or a non-occupancy one, keeps half the profits to himself and gives the other half to the landholder. What more should he expect? It is to be hoped that in honour of the Indian visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, Government will remove the above grievances of landholders and stimulate their loyalty.

ZAMANAH, September, 1905.

Railways versus canals in India.

21. The Zamánah (Cawnpore), for September, referring to the loan of twenty millions of pounds sterling which the Secretary of State proposes to take and spend in the extension of railways in India, says it does not see why public money should continue to be so recklessly wasted on such an unprofitable and unimportant work. Both right-minded Indians and Englishmen hold that construction of canals is far more useful and necessary than that of railways in India. The existing canals yield a profit of about 35 per cent., whereas, with the exception of two railway lines, the rest have hitherto proved a losing concern. It is true that a profit of five or six per cent. is shown on the railways in the annual report every year, but this is all fiction. The cost of the East India Railways was about 53 crores of rupees, and, not to speak of profit, the loss entailed by it has been 24 crores so far. India's debt under the head of 'railways' alone now amounts to 450 crores of rupees, the interest paid on which is 145 lakhs a year.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th October, 1905.

Ill-treatment of a ticketchecker at the Bareilly station on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway by a European platform Inspector.

22. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th October, says that on the 29th September last, Bishambarnath, railway ticket checker, found a European travelling without a ticket from Lucknow in the Dehra Dún mail. Bishambarnath asked him to pay the railway fare if he had no ticket. The European passenger refused to pay the fare. On the arrival of the train at Bareilly Bishambarnath drew the attention of Jagannath, ticket collector, to the matter and asked him to realize the fare from the European. In the meantime Mr. Bhoot, platform Inspector, appeared on the scene and told the ticket collector to let the man go as he was his friend. The native officials said that it was their duty to realize the railway fare from the European. The platform Inspector advised them not to interfere with the friends or servants of Europeans. The ticket checker nothing daunted replied that if he interfered in the performance of their duty he would be reported to Mr. Pope. Mr. Bhoot got enraged at the ticket checker's reply and struck him a blow on the face. Bishambarnath then returned to Lucknow and reported the matter to Mr. Pope, the Traffic Manager, who at once sent a telegram to Mr. Keelan, District Traffic Superintendent, to make an inquiry and send him a report. An inquiry was made but it is not known whether the report has been submitted to Mr. Pope or not. It is to be hoped that Mr. Pope will do justice to Bishambarnath who has been ill-treated in the conscientious performance of his duty.

HINDUSTANI,
25th October, 1905.

Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

23. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 25th October, says that the members of the Railway Board will inspect the railways in these provinces and stay at Lucknow for a few days to confer with His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor next month. It is to be hoped that the public will avail themselves of the opportunity to draw the attention of the members to the wants and requirements of the passengers. The public are very thankful to the officials of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway for holding a conference of popular leaders to make suggestions for the removal of the grievances of third class passengers. Some of the suggestions have been carried out, but a great deal still remains to be done and cannot be given effect to unless the higher railway authorities provide the ways and means. The goods wagons have been increased, but there has been no increase in the number of carriages for passengers. On occasions of fairs passengers still continue to be packed as sheep, not the least attention being paid to their convenience and comfort. No steps have been taken for affording facilities to zanana passengers. There are no sheds for third class passengers at many stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway stations. Where there are sheds, they become as hot as ovens during the hot weather and cold during the winter. At some places such as Lucknow, Sháhjahánpur, Bareilly, &c., the railway stations are situated too far from the towns, and the passengers are put to great inconvenience in consequence. The railway stations should be built nearer the towns. Railways should be constructed between Allahabad and Rae Bareli, and Unao and Rae Bareli without further delay.

Some English stanzas on the Viceroyalty of Lord Curzon.

1. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th October, reproduces from the Hindustan Review the following English stanzas which the author, N. Gupta, calls "Curzoniana":—

Who came with crash of cymbal and beat of drum,
Till the world did rattle and things did hum;
“Ch, I did,” said George Curzon,
“For I am a Superior Person.”
Who out-Barnumed Barnum and strutted on the stage?
Who brought back at Delhi the Imperial Age?
“I boss'd the show at Delhi,” said George Curzon,
“For I'm a Magnificent Person.”
Who made Official Secrets fearful still,
Who trotted out the blessed University Bill?
“Of course I did,” said George Curzon,
“For I am an Almighty Person.”
Who bearded Kitchener in his den,
And was routed by Balfour and his men?
“Oh, well,” said Curzon, “'twas a nasty fall,
“I guess I knock'd my head 'gainst a wall.”
Who parted Bengal and broke the land,
Put the people asunder with a pitiless hand?
“I did it,” said Curzon, “I did it Alone.
“For I have a hand of iron and a heart of stone.”
Who drove Manchester out on the street,
Made of the mulls and the cloths a winding sheet?
“I did,” said Curzon, “and the Chamber will foam,
There'll be the devil to pay when I get back Home.”
Who made the Swadeshi leap into life,
Who put an end to storm and to strife?
Who made the Babus a close knit Nation?
‘I didn't mean it, but I did,” said Curzon.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd November, 1905.

The present form of British Government in India.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd November, says:—The conquest of India by England is one of the most remarkable and astonishing facts in history. In the first place, there never was any proper conquest of India by England. The phrase that India was won by England by the sword and must be retained by the sword is common enough in use, but it is hardly true in fact. There was no invasion of India by English troops. The Moghals came as invaders and conquerors. The English did not come in either capacity, but merely as traders. They had no thought of empire or rule, to begin with. When it came to the use of the sword it was wielded mostly by Indian hands on behalf of the English. The English power grew slowly in India. But the former slight hold is now firm and no Moghal Emperor had as complete an ascendancy over the country as the present rulers of India. The English brought to the building of the British Indian Empire a resourcefulness, an administrative capacity, and a grip of details never equalled by any former rulers of India, and the result is the wonderful Empire that we see to-day. When, fifty years ago, British rule in India was in danger the people, or the great majority of them, remained firmly loyal. That is the main reason why order was so speedily established and the expansion and consolidation of the British Empire in India went on smoothly. It must be further remembered that the work of government has been made easy by the people of India themselves. No other people in the world are so easy to rule than the people of India. They have been subject to foreign rule for centuries. By nature they are docile and peaceful and easily amenable to authority. By their religion they have been taught to obey the king and regard him as an incarnation of divinity. It must also be conceded at once that the British rule is the best the people have known for a long time. Other rulers did not appreciate the advantages of religious tolerance and sought to impose their own religion upon the country. That brought about friction and frequent trouble. The English have most wisely decided to interfere with no man's religion, and the people of India are wonderfully tractable so long as their religion is not interfered with.

Along, however, with British rule have come English traditions and English teachings. The genius of a people cannot be divorced from its rule. Unfortunately, the men actually entrusted with the work of carrying on the King's Government in India do not seem to realise that things are moving, even in India. The country is not where it was thirty years ago. The educated classes have rapidly assimiliated English ideas, and the educated classes are the natural leaders of the people all over the world. Nothing is to be gained by a vehement denial of this self-evident truth. The Government has eradicated most of the real and serious evils in this country. In any reform that it may now undertake it should try to carry the country with it. We hear a great deal about agitators and others in India, men who do not wish well to the Government. As a matter of fact, the position of the Government is so secure that it cannot be shaken except by itself. Whenever there has been serious agitation it has been due to measures or legislation introduced by the Government. A dozen instances could be mentioned in recent times in which there have been considerable excitement or agitation, due always to some unpopular measure of the Government. Most of this is avoidable. The Government thinks that there is very little public opinion in this country, but no object is served by provoking that opinion constantly and helping it to grow. That is precisely what the Government has been doing, and quite recently public opinion has expressed itself in a manner which has been felt even in England. So long as the provocation does not come from the Government there is no hitch and things move smoothly. But every now and then there is some fresh fad or some so-called reform, and the people become agitated. If the relations between the Government and the people are becoming strained in any part of the country it is due almost always to the Government, for it is the easiest thing in the world to conciliate the people and govern them smoothly. The Government here requires looking after and the English people must do it. Instead of that, they call a Viceroy great who has done an immense amount of mischief to the country. That is the reason why the real well wishers of England insist on a change in the system of Government and the need of bringing it more in line with the genius and tradition of the English people.

KHICHRI SAMACHAR,

Construction of a drain to carry off the dirty water of the lac factories at Mirzapur.

3. The Khichri Samáchár (Mirzapur), of the 28th October, expressing satisfaction at the drain which is under construction at Mirzapur for carrying off the dirty water of the lac factories in that town, says, that if the drain is connected with the Ganges at the bathing ghát, it will pollute the river and cause annoyance to bathers. The drain had, therefore, better be taken outside the town and let into the river somewhere near Fataha.

AL BASHIR,
24th October, 1905.

Need for the establishment of industrial and commercial schools in the United Provinces.

4. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 24th October, expressing satisfaction at the decision of Government to establish an agricultural college in the United Provinces, thanks Sir James Digges LaTouche for it, and hopes that His Honour will also soon have the need for a provincial Medical College removed. There is likewise an urgent necessity for establishing industrial and commercial schools in these Provinces, and the editor would urge Sir James, a friend of education and beneficent ruler as he is, to see that this desideratum too is supplied before the expiry of the term of his office.

CITIZEN,
30th October, 1905.

Interference of the Government of India with the decision of the Punjab University regarding the minimum age limit for matriculation.

5. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th October, says:—At a meeting of the Punjab University held on the 26th of June last it was decided to fix the minimum age limit for matriculation at 15. Our readers may remember that this number has the imprimatur of the University Commission. The Government of Lord Curzon, however, now so well known to us for its unwise and repressive measures, has made an attempt to upset the decision. In a letter dated the 10th October, addressed to the Punjab Government by Mr. Risley, Secretary to the Government of India, the latter insists that a modification should be made in the decision and the age at which a candidate might present himself for the examination should be fixed at 16 rather than 15. An extract from the letter giving the main arguments of the Government of India in favour of the change insisted upon is given elsewhere. They seem to be: (1) Physical and mental consequences of over-pressure. (2) The free atmosphere of college life. (3) The decision already arrived at by the University of Allahabad, fixing 16 as the age limit. Let us consider the arguments seriatim. (1) It can be shown from statistics that the age of many men, products of our Indian Universities, who have been regarded as ornaments of the various professions that they have entered, when they passed the Entrance Examination, was below rather than above 16, and yet the complaint has never been made that their health was in consequence affected. Lord Curzon's Government would regard such men as precocious, forgetful that because of climatic and other differences between India and England, children in this country attained to a physical, ethical and intellectual development faster than in England. And even in England, the age limit for admission into a medical college has, of course after a careful consideration of the weighty reasons for the change, been reduced from 16 to 15. Surely, the subject prescribed for the Entrance Examination of an Indian University cannot be calculated to produce a greater strain on the mental capacity of a candidate than a study of the Medical profession in England. In 1899 when the question of raising the age limit was discussed by the Senate of the Allahabad University, the plea set up by Mr. Boutflower, the then Director, was that it was proposed to raise the standard of the matriculation test; but when you are not going to raise the School course, as you said, you would, practically by one year, why fetter the Entrance age at all? When a student has worked up to the prescribed standard at the age of 14 or 15 and you do not permit him to go up for the examination, what is he to do in the meantime? It is idle to expect that the extra year or two that you thus grant him against his wishes would be utilized for his physical development. On the other hand that time spent in idleness would not only deprave and demoralise him, but stunt his growth. The argument that guardians of Indian youths force on their children a premature entry upon collegiate life need not be taken in any seriousness. Blood is thicker than water, and there is an Indian saying that a woman who pretends to take greater care of a child than its mother is a witch. The only test which can regulate the limit of age is that of intellectual fitness; that test would be real and natural. Any other if imposed, even by a Viceroy, cannot but be arbitrary and artificial. (2) The atmosphere of college life has been represented as free. Well, if it is freer, it is purer. And if it be dangerous to mix for boys aged 14 and 15 with older students of a college, it is much more dangerous for them to mix with the bigger boys of a school. (3) The University of Allahabad has recommended 16 as the age limit, and for sake of uniformity Government of India recommends the adoption of the same limit by the other Universities as well. But is the Government of India aware by what process the local university arrived at its decision, in the matter? We explained the process in our issue of the 18th September last; and we think it necessary to expose it once again. The Hon'ble the Vice-Chancellor, who at the adjourned meeting of the 15th April, was in the chair, was determined to choke off the discussion led by Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji and Mr. V. R. Pundit. The main arguments adduced by these gentlemen were those that we have referred to above; when the Vice-Chancellor seemed to snub them. Not at all daunted, Mr. Pundit, who, as our readers know, is a Barrister-at-law, observed, "Gentlemen of our profession have no lack of opportunity to hear their own voices, and I can assure you I am not standing here for that purpose. It is the importance of the question which moves me to make remarks." Mr. Justice Knox then threw out a hint that the matter had been settled and no good could come out of further discussion. Dr. Ewing asked pointblank whether it had been so settled by the Government of India. Mr. Knox gave a reply which was rather evasive, but which was so worded that Dr. Ewing and we think the others present regarded it as a reply in the affirmative. The question was then put to the vote, and when we remember that the Vice-Chancellor had, immediately before putting it to the vote, used his irresistible argument that if the Fellows would vote for less than 16 their work would come back to them for re-consideration, we can well conclude that 16 was the age limit adopted. We thus see that if the University of Allahabad recommended 16 as the age limit, it was decidedly under the impression that the Government of India had definitely fixed the limit of 16 years. And we now see the Government of India recommending the same limit to other Universities on the plea that it has already been adopted by the University of Allahabad. Verily, here is a farce enacted of which Lord Curzon's Government alone is capable.

The Kangra relief measures re the late earthquake.

ADVOCATE,
22nd October, 1905.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd October, referring to the Kangra relief measures in connection with the late earthquake, says:—But what is more important is how the wounded and impoverished people may, after they have been brought to the normal state of health, be helped to stand on their legs. The programme drawn up by the Government is briefly told. The orders issued arranged for the remission of the rabi revenue and income tax in the more seriously affected area to leave cash in the pockets of the people, the repair of the irrigation channels to prevent further loss, the issue of takavi free of interest to the extent of one lakh for the purpose of plough bullocks to replace those killed, and for the assistance of the Forest Department in the provision of wood for shelters and the opening of the forests to grazing. All these could not be carried out in toto; the Forest Department failed to respond to the call of duty and humanity. Captain O'Brien, who has all along been in the thick of the fight against disease and privations, exposure and impoverishment, is not satisfied with the measures sanctioned. His views are thus worded: "It seems important that throughout this tract the revenue for kharif harvest should be remitted. The amount of this instalment being three times that of the rabi, it would be harsh to collect it from people so distressed, and the income of the harvest will do much to set them on their legs. So far no one has had any assistance outside the towns and bazars, and it appears to have been decided to restrict relief to non-agriculturists only. This is a decision for the reconsideration of which I press strongly, especially as regards the decimated area. Apart from the fact that the agriculturists in towns have received relief, and that practically speaking no line can be drawn between agriculturists and non-agriculturists, as all own land, it is clear that in the worst affected area all the measures which Government can carry out will not suffice to restore the cultivators to a state approaching that in which they were previous to the disaster, and that the Relief Committee should come to their assistance." It goes without saying that full approval of this suggestion will place the Government in the real character of the ma bap ruler before the people. Sir Charles Rivaz, who has taken charge of the Province, may be expected to signalise the assumption of his office by sanctioning Captain O'Brien's most humane proposal.

AL BASHIR,
24th October, 1905.

Al Bashír on the Swadeshi movement

7. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 24th October, referring to the boycott movement of the Bengalis, says that the latter have set up this movement in imitation of the Irish who sought to coerce, by boycotting, the British Government into granting their demands. But the Bengalis should remember that the Irish are one nation, follow one religion, their mode of living is the same, &c. On the other hand, the case is quite the reverse with the Indians; and their boycott movement will probably result in simply retarding their progress instead of promoting it. Supposing, for instance, that the idea of the Indians is correct that the Universities Act has been passed to prevent Indian youths receiving higher education in future, and that the Partition of Bengal has been made to ruin the Bengalis, cannot the Government that has adopted these measures equally modify the Factory Act, imposing such severe restrictions, as to working hours, wages of the operatives, &c. on the Indian Mills, as will make it almost impossible for these mills to compete with foreign ones. It is a great pity that the Bengalis and others who have followed their example should have, by their agitation, made the Government distrustful of them. The editor is especially afraid lest his own co-religionists who sympathise with the Swadeshi movement should have to suffer for it, while the other community, on account of their education, trade and wealth may be able to hold their own, in the long run. A considerable number of Musalmans are in favour of promoting indigenous industries, and there are thousands among them, the editor himself being one of them, who have long been using only India-made cloths. The Swadeshi movement of Bengal is, however, based on selfishness, being set on foot in resentment against the partition of Bengal, and not out of pure love for one's own country's goods. The editor would, therefore, strongly advise his co-religionists to continue to quietly support and encourage indigenous industries as they have hitherto done, without making any unnecessary fuss about it.

AL BASHIR,
24th October, 1905.

The Swadeshi movement and the Musalmans.

8. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 24th October, publishes a letter from a Muhammadan who wishes to distinctly point out that the Musalmans, and even Hindus of all other parts of India save Bengal, sympathise with the Swadeshi movement not because they resent the partition of Bengal in any way, but because it is calculated to greatly ameliorate the condition of the country. The people have long been in favour of using India-made goods to stop the drain of wealth from their country. The writer concludes urging Muhammadans especially to hold public meetings and pass resolutions stating that though they are desirous of promoting indigenous industries in every way, and are in full sympathy with the Swadeshi movement, their sympathy is based on pure patriotism and not on any dissatisfaction at the partition of Bengal.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th October, 1905.

The Swadeshi movement, and the District Superintendent of Police, Lahore.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th October, says:—In Calcutta the slight conflicts between the Police and the supporters of the Swadeshi movement have made the former somewhat chary, and encounters are now very rare. But a novel instance of police bungling is reported from Lahore. The Tribune has published the text of a curious reply given by the District Superintendent of Police, Lahore, to an application about a Swadeshi procession to pass through the streets of that city. The Police Superintendent says proper police arrangement cannot be made on such short notice. At least 10 days' previous notice must be given, and detailed information on various heads must be furnished. Next he wants to know the name, rank and position of the promoters of the meeting, the object of the meeting (the application, it must be remembered, was for a procession, since Swadeshi meetings have been already held in Lahore), the hour of commencement and finish, what is to take place at the meeting, &c. In conclusion, this wonderfully wise Superintendent of Police says:—"On receipt of full information the advisability of allowing a procession on a date after the 29th October will be duly considered." The naming of a date is very suggestive, as it is known that Lord Curzon was to arrive at Lahore on the 27th instant, and the intention evidently is that no procession should be permitted until His Excellency leaves Lahore. While the District Superintendent of Police was about it he might as well have enquired whether the procession would be accompanied by a brass band, whether the tunes played would be martial or mournful, what sort of dress the processionists would wear, and several other important details which a zealous police officer should make himself acquainted with. As regards the rights of the matter it goes without saying that the Lahore Police Superintendent is no more in the right than Captain Parsons was in arresting Pandit Kashi Nath. We are glad to notice a committee of leading lawyers in Lahore has been formed to see the matter out. There is no doubt as regards the issue, for no policeman has any right to prohibit a peaceful procession. We should like to suggest to the leaders of the Swadeshi movement in the Punjab that, after what has happened and after the matter in issue is decided, they should organise Swadeshi processions in every important town in the Province.

KHICHRI SAMACHAR, 28th October, 1905.

Complaint regarding the demolition of houses at Mirzapur to sell off the materials.

10. The Khichri Samáchár (Mirzapur), of the 28th October, says that as certain persons have pulled down some large houses at Mirzapur to sell off the materials, the sites of these houses lie covered with rubbish and dirt, which is calculated to cause the outbreak of plague in the neighbourhood. Besides, the foundations of the houses adjoining those pulled down are generally badly shaken. The authorities had better do something to stop this sort of vandalism in Mirzapur.

KHICHRI SAMACHAR, 28th October, 1905.

Suggestion to prohibit gambling during the Dewali festival.

11. The Khichri Samáchár (Mirzapur), of the 28th October, says that the gambling in which the people indulge so freely during the Dewali festival has ruined many families, and suggests that just as Government has prohibited gambling in rain-speculations at Calcutta, so it should prohibit the general gambling during the Dewali in India.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR, 29th October, 1905.

Complaint regarding the non-observance of gazetted holidays in certain public offices at Allahabad.

12. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 29th October, regrets that while Government annually publishes in the Provincial gazette a list of holidays to be granted in offices, it takes no care to see that its officials duly observe these holidays in the public offices. For the last Dewali festival two days' holidays were gazetted, but a number of the unfortunate clerks in the Accountant-General's Office and certain other offices at Allahabad had all the same to attend their respective offices on those days. Gazetted holidays are, as a rule, not observed regularly in the public offices on the occasion of other festivals too, a portion of the staff being invariably required to attend on all Indian holidays, however important they may be.

ADVOCATE, 22nd October, 1905.

Third class railway passengers.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd October, says:—We appreciate all the labours of the Railway Traffic Department recently undertaken to improve the third class traffic. We think this feeling is generally shared by the public. But much remains to be done yet. It is no want of appreciation nor any captious spirit that makes us say that the result of the Railway Conference has not been what was expected, and we do not know whom to blame for it. One of the grievances of third class passengers is that the carriages are almost always overcrowded, and on occasions, as religious festivals, wagons are used for the passenger traffic. This complaint has not yet been removed and the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway are still in want of sufficient rolling stock to carry their third class passengers. It was strongly pointed out at the Railway Conference held at Lucknow that this grievance should be removed, but no progress has been made in the matter. Since December 1903 several new branches have been added to the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway system, but we are sorry to say that the rolling-stock has not been sufficiently added to, and passengers are still loaded in trucks like cattle. The Railway Board while at Lucknow should see whether the existing rolling stock does not require immediate addition.

The accommodation for third class passengers on railway stations is deficient. There are stations of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway line which have no waiting rooms, and wherever waiting rooms have been built they offer no protection against wind or rain. In winter they become unfit for people to spend a few hours in the shivering cold nights and in the summer the corrugated iron roofing turns them into regular furnaces. This complaint has also to be removed. Attempts have been made to offer better treatment to third class passengers by employment of inspectors, but no improvement can be effected unless the agency through which the Railway works is the proper agency and contains a larger number of men to whom the passengers can speak freely. A low-paid Eurasian staff has hardly the capacity to make itself understandable to the average Indian passenger. Of late we hear there had been rather retrograde steps taken in this respect, particularly in the Lucknow District of the Traffic Department.

In the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway line third class passengers are put to inconvenience owing to the situation of the railway stations which are at some distance from the cities. This is so in Lucknow, Sháhjahánpur and Bareilly. This can be removed by constructing branch lines to the city. We hope this will not be grudged in order to see the inconvenience removed.

BRAHMAN SAMACHAR,
October, 1905.

A complaint regarding the mail-cart service in Parichhatgarh, Meerut district.

14. The Brahman Samáchár (Parichhatgarh, Meerut), for October, says that formerly the mail (cart) reached Parichhatgarh at 6 A.M. and left at 5 P.M., and then subsequently it came at 10 A.M. and left at 4 P.M., which allowed the public sufficient time to send their replies by return post, but that lately the cart has been arriving at 10 A.M. and leaving the place at 12 A.M., a very unsatisfactory arrangement which hardly admits of the letters, &c., being delivered to the public and their replies despatched by the returning mail.

AR RIYAZ,
8th November, 1905.

The Sultan of Turkey.

1. The Ar Riyáz (Aligarh), of the 8th November, observing that the British Government will, at least, take two years to recover the loss of prestige it has suffered in connection with the resignation of Lord Curzon, is glad to observe that His Lordship who held a very hostile attitude towards the Sultan of Turkey in respect to the latter's dominion in Arabia, has resigned the Viceroyalty of India, and thus lost his power of doing much mischief. The young man who is to succeed to the office of the Sheriff of Mecca, who died lately, will, it is to be hoped, duly apply for his appointment to the Sultan, and not install himself in the office as his hereditary post, or play into the hands of the British Government as his predecessor had begun to do. The Hejáz railway which is nearing completion will, there is little doubt, serve to greatly increase the influence of the Sultan in the Muhammadan world. Russia, the great enemy of Turkey, has seriously been weakened in the Russo-Japanese war, so that the Sultan can now freely fortify the Bosphorus coast without interference. In short, there are indications on all sides that the Sultan has nothing to fear from any quarter at present. His Majesty is, in fact, born lucky, and will live long.

ADVOCATE,
9th November,
1905.

Greetings offered to the Prince and Princess of Wales on their first landing on Indian soil.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow,) of the 9th November, says:—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince George and Princess May step on Indian soil this afternoon. We accord our cordial welcome to the royal guests of our country and offer our greetings on this their first visit to India. Animated by loyal feelings towards the Throne of England to which, India by common consent owes allegiance, the whole country with one voice welcomes the royal personages to Indian soil and feels pleasure at the presence of the heir-apparent to the throne and his consort, impelled by the affection with which eastern people look upon the sovereign and his own people.

The relations of the people of India with their Sovereign have been always cordial. The name of Queen Victoria is still uttered throughout India with reverence which few sovereigns have elsewhere ever enjoyed. The affection with which the Indian subjects of Emperor Edward look upon His Imperial Majesty and his family is too genuine to be questioned, and therefore the feeling is mutual. The trouble and inconvenience which the august personages have taken in making this long journey will be repaid by the conviction which we are sure their Royal Highnesses will carry with them home that their Indian subjects love them as ardently as other subjects of any other parts of the Empire do.

The affection and expression of confidence is not blind. It is intelligent, as the belief prevails that whatever blunders may be committed by the agents who carry on the administration of the land, whatsoever may be the motives which guide them in their action, the Sovereign and his family's sympathy is always with the people, and it has found expression whenever any occasion has arisen. The visit to India of Emperor Edward thirty years ago is remembered for the impression then created. The present visit will also leave behind it many mementos that will directly benefit all classes of the community. Our request to all parties concerned is that the visit throughout may be made pleasant to our honoured guests so that they may take back with them pleasant recollections of their visit; that their visit be made memorable not only by memorials which the people in their loyalty will raise among themselves, but by some marks of royal pleasure, which will serve as a living memorial for all time to come. We once more greet our royal guests and wish them a pleasant tour in India and safe return home.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th November,
1905.

Rumoured proposal to boycott pro-Swadeshi newspapers from the table of the Prince of Wales while in India.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th November, says:—We find it stated in some Calcutta papers that the Superintendent of Stationery with the Government of India has given directions that certain Indian newspapers as well as an Anglo-Indian newspaper should on no account be placed on the table of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales during his Indian tour. Should this happen to be true it is of course open to inference that the Superintendent is either acting under orders or under suggestion. The papers named have distinguished themselves by the uncompromising support they have given to the Swadeshi movement and the freedom with which they have criticised the Government in regard to its recent decision about students and some other questions. Probably, they are set down among the malcontents and suspects, but there is no present intention of setting Section 124A of the Indian Penal Code in motion against them. We do not know whether the Prince of Wales will have much time to give to the reading of Indian newspapers. If he has, he will have to be given any papers that he wishes to read. The Russian Censor, with his broad ink-pad, does not exist in India. Besides, if the Prince does not read one class of newspapers he will read another, which denounce the Swadeshi movement, the students and generally everything connected with the present agitation. And if the Prince is curious, he will want to know what it is all about, and to see the other side of the picture. Moreover, the Prince of Wales is not a political visitor and whatever he may see or hear he will keep his own counsel. If, however, the report mentioned above is true there can be no doubt that an attempt is being made to keep the truth from His Royal Highness.

AL BASHIR,
7th November,
1905.

Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty and the Muhammadans.

4. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 7th November, commenting on the Viceroyalty of Lord Curzon from the standpoint of the interests of the Muhammadan residents of India, says that while not finding fault with His Lordship for taking away Berar from the Nizam's jurisdiction for good, this being a long-settled policy of the British Government, the Muhammadans have as much reason to be grateful to His Lordship for the Partition of Bengal, as they have to be dissatisfied with the creation of the North-West Frontier Province, one being as beneficial as the other is prejudicial to their interests. His commemoration of the "baseless" Black Hole incident which fixes a deep stain on the memory of Nawab Siraj-ud-dowla, and is calculated to create undesirable hatred among Europeans towards Muhammadans, cannot possibly receive the commendation of any thoughtful Muhammadan. His Lordship's special efforts to preserve ancient Muhammadan monuments from decay were worthy of all praise, and the Muhammadans cannot be too grateful for the same. There were a number of similar other smaller acts of Lord Curzon, some of which were agreeable and others disagreeable to the Muhammadans. But judging Lord Curzon by his larger and more important administrative measures the Muhammadans consider him to be their greatest enemy, and his very being a source of serious danger to their nation. He has long since set his heart upon Persia, his late tour in the Persian Gulf being the best proof of his proclivity. The rebellion that lately occurred in Arabia against the authority ot the Sultan of Turkey is believed by shrewd politicians to have been instigated by Lord Curzon. His Lordship belongs to that school of politicians who desire to see the Turkish Empire weakened, and Arabia made independent of Turkey, and brought under the jurisdiction of the Viceroy of India. Such being the case, the editor has not the least sympathy with the personality of Lord Curzon. His Lordship is, in fact, nobody's friend, but of his own country and countrymen alone. If he benefited or injured any one, he did so simply in the pursuit of his own country's good, and not out of any special regard for any class or race. And for this virtue of genuine patriotism he is well worthy of every praise and honour.

ZUL-QARNAIN,
7th November,
1905.

The Provincial Civil Service in the United Provinces.

5. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun) of the 7th November, in a long article, referring to the institution of the Statutory Civil Service some twenty years ago, and to that of the Provincial Civil Service in 1890, as the result of the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission, complains that none of the Covenanted Civil Service posts which the Secretary of State reserved for the members of the newly constituted Provincial Civil Service have hitherto been given to the latter in the United Provinces, the Government explaining this away by stating that the posts in question were held by the Statutory Civilians, and that the Provincial Service men could not get them until vacancies occurred in them. This explanation is not satisfactory at all, inasmuch as the Statutory Civilians were already graded with, and formed part of the Covenanted Civil Service, and received their promotion along with Covenanted Civilians, and the posts reserved for the Provincial Civil Service were at once to be filled by members of the latter service. The result of this withholding the promised Covenanted Civil Service posts from the members of the Provincial Civil Service has been that brilliant and distinguished educated Indians no longer seek admission into this service. It is very strange that the principles and rules laid down by the Secretary of State for regulating the constitution and recruitment of the Provincial Civil Service should have been made a dead letter without even observing the formality of submitting the modifications in question to the Secretary of State for sanction. It is quite possible that by the time—which will not be less than 20 years hence—the posts at present held by the Statutory Civilians come to fall vacant, the Government of India might still manage to withhold them from the members of the Provincial Civil Service by telling them that those posts were held by Indian Covenanted Civilians whose number is rapidly increasing and is likely to equal that of the present number of the Statutory Civilians in course of time. The Secretary of State provided that a certain number of joint magistracies should be filled by members of the Provincial Civil Service, but the Government has avoided doing this by simply adding as many posts to Deputy Collectorships as the Secretary of State wanted to be held as joint magistracies by the members in question, justifying its action with the explanation that as the duties of the Deputy Collectors and Joint Magistrates were the same, it was no use showing them under two different heads. Similarly Government has virtually abolished the two special posts of Assistant Settlement Officers and one of Assistant Director of Land Records and Agriculture, which the Secretary of State had reserved for the members of the Provincial Civil Service, merging them into those of Deputy Collectors. As regards the two posts of Small Cause Court Judges, Government continues to fill them with the members of the Provincial service, mainly because European Joint Magistrates do not generally like Judicial civil work. What makes the lot of the members of the Provincial Civil Service still worse is that when one of them goes on leave, no gradual promotion is given in the service, but only a probationary Deptuy Collector is appointed to the vacancy on a small pay. The members of this service whose pay does not exceed Rs. 500 per mensem are granted only second class travelling allowance, while men in other departments such as the Opium, Salt, Public Works Department, &c. drawing much smaller salaries and doing much less responsible work, are given first class travelling allowance. Is this distinction made because the Provincial Civil Service is mainly recruited from Indians, whereas Europeans are also to be found in the other services named above, or what?

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th November, 1905.

A public meeting at Lahore to protest against the Government of India's interference with the decision of the Punjab University regarding the age-limit for Matriculation.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th November, says:—A public meeting has been held at Lahore to protest against the decision of the Government of India overruling a resolution of the Senate of the Punjab University fixing the minimum age for passing the Matriculation Examination at 14. The right of the public to protest is never exhausted, but in this instance the issue lies between the University and the Government even more than between the public and the Government. A deliberate slight has been put not only upon the Senate of the Punjab University, but also upon the Chancellor of that University. What is the constitution of our Universities? The Senate governs the affairs of the University and the Chancellor has the power either to approve or veto the decisions of the University. The decision of the Chancellor is final: The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is the Chancellor of the University, with which the Viceroy or Government of India has no concern. The Senate consists of independent men, or is supposed to consist of such men. They arrive at a certain decision which is approved by the Chancellor of the University. After several months the Government of India steps in and suddenly upsets their decision. If the Senate were to resign in a body by way of protest against such treatment it would be perfectly justified. Unfortunately, we know the stuff of which the Senate of the Punjab University is made, and that body is certain to take the rebuff meekly. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is powerless to resent the interference of the Government of India, and thus a fatal blow has been struck at the independence of the Indian Universities.

RAJPUT, 31st October, 1905.

Suggestion for establishing seed depots in all districts in the United Provinces.

7. The Rájpút (Agra), of the 31st October, expressing satisfaction at the decision of the Local Government to establish an Agricultural College at Cawnpore, and start experimental farms in various places in the United Provinces, says that the sooner these measures, highly useful as they are for promoting agriculture, are carried out the better. Government had better establish also seed depôts in all other districts just as it has already done in Cawnpore and Partábgarh, want of good seed not unoften being an impediment to agricultural improvement.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR, 5th November, 1905.

The issue of a circular by the District Magistrates to the heads of schools and colleges in Bengal condemning the conduct of students actively participating in the Swadeshi movement.

8. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 5th November, referring to the circular which the District Magistrates recently issued to the school and college authorities in Bengal condemning the active participation of students in the Swadeshi movement, says that it is difficult to understand under what law the Magistrates issued the circular in question. The Indians are not allowed to bear arms, their loyalty to the British Crown is unquestioned and well-known to the world, there is no disturbance in any part of the country at the present time; and it is very strange that the authorities should so far lose their equanimity at the agitation of young students for the use of India-made goods, as to threaten the teachers of schools and colleges to appoint them as special constables to preserve the peace. If students request and persuade their fellow-countrymen to use only Indian goods, what is there political in it? Is there any country in the world where to call upon one's countrymen to use home-made goods and eschew foreign ones has been made penal by law? Again, the circular which has apparently been conceived and issued in the interest of the Manchester manufacturers, goes quite against the spirit of her late Majesty Queen Victoria's Proclamation of 1858, which guaranteed equal treatment to all classes of her subjects without the distinction of colour, race or creed. But let the object of the issue of the circular be what it may, if the Indians have really awakened to the need of their country, they will stick to their resolution of eschewing foreign goods even though they should have to establish their own schools and colleges at their own expense, for the education of their children. The editor, however, thinks, that at such a time when the Swadeshi spirit is so rampant, and spreading so rapidly throughout the country, and the majority of the people are dissatisfied at the partition of Bengal, it is altogther inexpedient for the authorities to add fuel to the fire by issuing the circular referred to above. It is to be hoped that higher authorities will give due consideration to the points urged above and shape their policy accordingly. [The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 6th November, urges Sir Andrew Fraser to reconsider the expediency or otherwise of the circular and give his final decision once for all.]

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th November,
1905.

Participation of students in the Swadeshi movement and the Bengal Government.

9. The Indian People (Lucknow), of the 9th November, says:—We have already said that in the present temper of Bengal the action of the Bengal Government in trying to prevent students from having anything to do with the Swadeshi movement is ill-advised and unwise. In the first place, the Swadeshi movement, from whatever point of view it is considered, is perfectly legitimate and constitutional, and the part taken by students is nowise subversive of school and college discipline. To require schoolmasters to watch their boys out of school hours is preposterous, and the threat of enrolling teachers as special constables is certain to be deeply resented. The result has been a universal note of defiance to the circular of the Bengal Government. Sir Gurudas Banerji, who began his career as a professor of mathematics and was twice Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University and has also written a very thoughtful book on Education, has deliberately and emphatically pronounced against the circular as uncalled for and unjustifiable. Looking at the question from the loftiest point of view he considers the work upon which the students have been engaged in connection with the Swadeshi movement as religious work, and he is of opinion that students can no more be prevented from taking part in the Swadeshi movement than they can be forbidden to perform their religious duties. A pronouncement so clear and so definite from a man so cautious and so highly esteemed as Sir Gurudas Banerji practically settles the question. A meeting of students has been held, presided over by Babu Rabindr Nath Tagore, at which resolutions were passed declaring that students declined to follow the circular of the Bengal Government, and that if it came to a push they preferred leaving the University. The president supported this view and was followed by other leaders of public opinion, who spoke to the same effect. The Government can do nothing worse than threaten schools and colleges with stoppage of grants-in-aid and disaffiliation, but the students and their guardians are evidently quite prepared for such a contingency. If the course outlined in the circular is persisted in, the only result can be that there will be a complete rupture and the Calcutta University will have no schools and colleges under its control. Besides, it has yet to be established that the University will take the same view as the Local Government without hesitation, and enforce the threats employed in this ill-timed circular.

CENTRAL HINDU COLLEGE MAGAZINE;
November, 1905.

The Central Hindu College Magazine on the Swadeshi movement.

10. The Central Hindu College Magazine (Benares), for November says:—For the last twelve years I have been exhorting Indians to use their own manufactures, and to set their faces against the foolish craze for foreign goods. I am therefore naturally glad to see the present movement, which, if wisely persisted in, will give back to India her financial prosperity. But for the movement to be healthy and durable, it must be founded on love, not on hatred: on reason, not on passion. In every case, let a man give the preference to home-made over foreign-made goods, when both are before him, but there is no reason why things that are not yet made in India, but are useful, should not be bought. At present the C. H. C. has only carpentering workshops, but we are preparing to open others. We have secured land, and are about to set up the shops.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th November,
1905.

The Swadeshi movement in the Punjab.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th November, referring to the alleged crusade of the Government authorities against the Swadeshi movement in Bengal, says:—In the Punjab the use of the Delhi Town Hall was refused for a Swadeshi meeting. In Lahore the District Superintendent of Police refused sanction to a Swadeshi procession, but he has since then thought over the matter and has no longer any objection to a procession. Every one will find out his mistake in due time, for the Swadeshi movement is a process of passive resistance and cannot be suppressed by active interference.

AL BASHIR,
7th November,
1905.

Al Bashir on the Swadeshi movement.

12. Al Bashir (Etáwah), of the 7th November, referring to the Swadeshi movement and the boycott of European goods, says that this movement has undoubtedly been set on foot in resentment against the partition of Bengal, and not out of pure patriotism. Such being the case, no Muhammadans, as some of them have foolishly done, should take part in the agitation of the Bengalis. The partition of Bengal is calculated to prove beneficial rather than harmful to the Muhammadans, and there is therefore no reason why the latter should join the Bengalis in their agitation, and thereby mislead the authorities into considering them also to be angry at the measure in question. The editor is no doubt fully convinced that the encouragement and promotion of indigenous industries is the surest and best means of removing the poverty of a country, a practical proof of his conviction being that he has long since been using India-made cloths exclusively, but he would strongly advise his co-religionists to keep themselves strictly aloof from the Bengali agitation on the subject, while they should quietly promote and further the cause of indigenous industries as much as they can.

ADVOCATE,
4th November,
1905.

The working hours in the Bombay mills.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th November, says:—The State wheel has at last been set in motion. Mr. Brodrick has been induced by Lancashire to move in the matter of the hours of work in Bombay mills. As Secretary of State he has drawn the attention of the Government of Bombay to the allegation made in the local and English Press on the subject of mill labour in the Bombay Presidency. Then comes a much more diplomatic move—a request to be furnished with the results of any enquiries that may have been made, so that Lancashire voters may have the pleasure of suggesting in what direction the State mill should move to grind down the Bombay millowner, his capital and labour, and all. Thus is the thin end of the wedge sought to be introduced. The rest is plain enough, though that may not be plain sailing.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th November,
1905.

Memorial to Lord Curzon.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th November, says:—For ourselves, we have never for a moment doubted that there will be the slightest difficulty in raising a memorial to the one but greatest Viceroy of India. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce could do it alone so far as the question of funds is concerned. Then there are others who ought to contribute very handsomely to a memorial to Lord Curzon. Sir Andrew Fraser, for instance, should subscribe a month's salary; so should Mr. Fuller as also Messrs. Hewett and Baker, all in the fullness of their gratitude. That would bring the memorial in sight. As regards trying to make the movement representative or popular, the organisers may whistle for want of thought—and funds. The Nawab Salimulla of Dacca, we dare say, will contribute handsomely, for he has been just nominated to the Governor-General's Legislative Council as the representative of East Bengal and Assam. That new Province has no local Legislative Council yet, but that makes no difference. Then comes the Mahárája of Kuch Behar. Poor man, his little State has been bundled oft to the new Province and now he has to pay tribute, perhaps, for the privilege of being permitted to live in Calcutta instead of being ordered to Dacca or Chittagong. Next comes Rája Benoy Krishna, one of the wonders of Calcutta and a man who has played many parts in his time. It was Lord Curzon that made him a Raja and he is bound to be grateful. But Rája Benoy Krishna had better look out for an effigy of himself for his own memorial, for effigy-burning is the order of the day in Calcutta. What shape is the memorial to Lord Curzon himself to take? Is it to be an equestrian statue? May we venture to suggest that His Excellency riding the whirlwind would be a most appropriate design for a memorial?

ADVOCATE,
9th November,
1905.

Proposal to raise a memorial to Lord Curzon.

15. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th November, says:—After the flattering messages, comes the much more flattering proposal for a memorial. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has taken the lead in the movement for raising a memorial to Lord Curzon, and has drawn the Maharaja of Kuch Behar, the Nawab of Dacca and the Maharaja of Shabha Bazar into it. There is nothing to wonder at this trinity joining the Chamber on a purpose that means name to them, though in the service of the setting sun. Only care should be taken that the memorial be not in the name of the Indian public.

ADVOCATE,
5th November, 1905.

The Imperial Institute in London, and the contribution made by India towards its expenses.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 5th November, says :—The "White Elephant" of Kensington still feeds upon Indian revenues to an inordinate extent. This country pays towards the funds of the Imperial Institute £1,655 or about Rs. 25,000 in round numbers. The benefit that India derives is the examination of samples of Indian products sent there in order that capitalists in the British Isles may be attracted to India for the exploitation of her resources. Since the 'show' meetings were given up, the Institute has to a greater extent justified its existence. But we would very much prefer to have it in India, while completed results may be reported to, and exhibits kept in, the museum attached to the institution in London. If the research work be carried on in this country, there is every reason to expect the training of a few Indian graduates in the art of scientific investigation into our economic products. There is an impression among many retired Anglo-Indian friends of India that the latter pays more than she should. Economy is, we are told, possible if only the Indian Section be merged into the general organisation. The Colonies have done theirs and are gainers thereby, while India has been on the losing side all along Why not have a little more economy ?

The proposed Medical College at Lucknow.

17. The Indian People (Lucknow), of the 9th November, says:—A correspondent writes to suggest that Allahabad being the seat of the Government of the United Provinces the proposed Medical College should be established here rather than at Lucknow. The plea appears to us more sentimental than equitable. As Lucknow and Oudh are raising the funds, clearly they are entitled to the College. Neither Allahabad nor the Province of Agra has yet subscribed very substantially to the College. Besides, there is a fine hospital already in existence in Lucknow and most probably it will be attached to the College. The Local Government also is hardly disposed to favour Allahabad at the expense of Lucknow. We all remember the excitement over the proposal to remove the High Court to Lucknow, and it was lucky that the scheme was ultimately dropped. A thing of far more importance than the Medical College is the administration of justice, and the High Court, nominally of the United Provinces, has no jurisdiction over Oudh, and the Talukdars are quite content with the Judicial Commissioner's Court, and would probably resent any proposed extension of the jurisdiction of the High Court to Oudh. While provinces without a High Court are agitating for one, our sister Province of Oudh will have nothing to do with a High Court, unless it can be taken to Lucknow. And if feeling runs high Lucknow may ask to be partitioned altogether from Allahabad, and partition appears to be so easy nowadays that the United Provinces may at any moment be disunited with a snap. The fact that Lucknow is included in the Royal tour while Allahabad is omitted, shows that this city must be content to yield the precedence to other cities in the United Provinces.

Non-admission of the Indian general public to the railway station platform at Allahabad.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th November, says :—The outside public, we understand, is not admitted to the platforms of the Allahabad railway station during the arrival and departure of trains. We are not aware whether this regulation originates with the Station Master or any higher railway authority. A great deal of positive inconvenience is caused by this regulation. People are prevented from receiving or meeting friends arriving by trains on the platform. Sometimes there are parties of ladies and their relatives are not allowed to go on the platform to meet them. Of course this regulation applies to Indians only. Europeans or Indians wearing the European costume and the European hat are exempt from this restriction. The practice on the East Indian Railway is opposed to a regulation of this kind. At the Howrah railway station, which we suppose is more important than the Allahabad station, people come and go without any restriction and the platforms are always open to the general public at all hours, independently of the arrival and departure of trains. At Allahabad, it is stated, people are permitted to go on the platform to meet friends arriving by trains with the permission of the Station Master, but in order to obtain that permission people must go on to the platform and into the Station Master's office, and this is difficult as their way is barred by the policemen on duty. On other railway lines there is a system of platform tickets, to which no objection can be taken. The practice at the Allahabad station is arbitrary and inconvenient as well as inconsiderate and should be done away with.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
12th November,
1905.

The Prince of Wales's first speech at Bombay.

1. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th November, says:—It has fallen to Bombay to say the first word of welcome to the Prince and Princess of Wales, and that word has been said in a manner worthy of Bombay and worthy of the Royal visitors For this year particularly Sir Pherozshah Mehta had been elected President of the Bombay Municipality, as no name stands higher on the records of that body than his. The foremost citizen of Bombay welcomed the foremost representative, next to the King-Emperor, of Royalty. It is noteworthy also that on the conclusion of his reply, the Prince of Wales cordially shook hands with Sir P. M. Mehta, who presented the Prince and Princess with bouquets and garlands of flowers. The speech of the Prince of Wales has been highly praised, and justly. Its most prominent notes were sincerity and simplicity. There is one passage in the speech to which we should like to draw the special attention of our readers:—"I have inherited from my father and from our last beloved Sovereign, your first Queen-Empress, a love for India and for Indians from my youth. I have associated the name of India with qualities of kindness, loyalty, courtesy and bravery; and I doubt not that these early ideas will be confirmed and strengthened by the experiences which await me in the next few months......We both hope to carry home with us not only a warm sympathy and affection for the people of India, but increased and abiding interests in India's wants and problems, and an acquaintance with the various classes of officials and non-officials, British and Indian, which under God's Providence are labouring to one end—the well-being of India and the happiness of her peoples." These are noble words and nobly spoken, and the Prince has won the hearts of the people of this country by his first speech.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Alleged cold reception of Lord Curzon at Bombay.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th November, says:—When Lord Curzon arrived in Bombay to receive the Prince and Princess of Wales it was noticed that none of the natural leaders, except a few wealthy men, were present on the railway platform to receive him. The officials do not count, for it is part of their duty to be present when the highest official in the land comes among them. But Sir P. M. Mehta was not there, neither Sir Bhalchandra Krishna nor the many distinguished citizens of Bombay with whose names we are familiar. It was a cold reception, and it mirrors the feeling of the whole country. Neither the address from the Chamber of Commerce nor any other function can make up for the deliberate abstention of all the prominent citizens from this last appearance of Lord Curzon in Bombay as Viceroy of India. The feeling is not confined to Bengal or any particular province, but is universal that Lord Curzon has wrought ill to the country and the people, and the only thing left to them is let him pass in silence, without greeting or word of farewell.

CITIZEN,
13th November,
1905.

Lord Curzon's administration of India.

3. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 13th November, says:—When Lord Curzon came to India, he awakened great hopes in the public mind, for his fame as a man of great ability, and of the experiences of a traveller in many an Asiatic country, had reached these shores long before he set his foot on Indian soil. He was younger than any of his predecessors in the great office which he came to fill, and even this circumstance was made the foundation by many to build their hopes for a spirited administration of India, spirited from the point of view of a ruler having independence, courage of his opinion, and the desire to act with liberality and sympathy towards Indians. It was, however, not long before the people were disillusioned. It was soon made evident that Lord Curzon was an imperialist politician, and as months and years followed one another, it was discovered that his imperialism was of a type the virulence of which was only matched by its uncompromising character. There was now and then a momentary break as was evidenced by his action towards British soldiers, violating the modesty of Indian women, and his measures to preserve the ancient monuments of India. Otherwise his career has been one simply to carry out a policy of aggressive imperialism, the sole aim of which is coercion and perfect repression of any progress in political life, that might in time qualify the people for actual self-government. We have throughout the departing Viceroy's régime discussed in detail the acts of his administration and demonstrated how opposed they were to a wise and liberal policy.

We need not go through those details to-day over again, but what we wish to impress on His Lordship is the fact that he carries with him no blessings of the naturally loyal and devoted Indian subjects of his Sovereign whom he could not serve better as an Indian Viceroy than by earning the same. After seven years' rule of this great dependency of Great Britain, Lord Curzon leaves her, crushed in spirit, sad of heart, and despondent and disconsolate. If he is endowed with a feeling heart and with a conscious conscience, the grim truth of his being the cause of our national retrogression ought to weigh upon his inner being and fill his mind with remorse. We do not know what the real feelings of Lord Curzon are on the eve of his quitting our shores. But he is after all a human being, possessing, we trust, a heart, and, as we all know, a cultivated intellect. Surely, he ought to be conscious of the cruelty of his policy of Russianization and of its probable consequences. The present state of affairs in Bengal, and the rapid spread of their influence through the Empire, must have convinced him that India has passed the stage, when it could silently and tamely submit to a policy of repression. She has tasted the sweets of political life and has partly realised what political emancipation means. The grim determination of Bengal to wear her life out in making a struggle to get back her lost rights ought to be a revelation to Lord Curzon. He must not now fail to see that it is not his policy of Russianization that will strengthen the position of Britain in India, but just an oppoiste policy, the policy of true English constitutionalism, allowing free growth and progress in every department of national life. This is a revelation which has come at the very close of Lord Curzon's viceregal career; and if he has not had his mental vision absolutely blinded, he must have perceived it. What must now be the course of action that Lord Curzon should, in all conscience, adopt towards India? If His Lordship is a responsible and dutiful servant of the Crown, he should now, on his return home, do all that lies in his power to undo the evil that he has wrought by his policy. He has well nigh transformed Bengal, the most important and advanced Indian Province, into a second Ireland, and has also encouraged other provinces to follow her example. The discontent that he has created by his numerous measures of retrogression has prepared the ground for the universal adoption of the boycott scheme initiated by Bengal. This will inevitably create a deep anti-British feeling, the embers of which may eventually kindle into a flame of rebellion. In the face of such a contingency it becomes the bounden duty of Lord Curzon to exert his influence with the Government in England in favour of a change of policy which may be sure to re-establish the old cordial and friendly relations that existed between the Government and the Indian people during the régime of such Viceroys as Lord Canning, Lord Northbrook and Lord Ripon. Our parting words to Lord Curzon are those of an humble supplication that he may realize the serious nature of the consequences which his policy is leading to, and may leave no stone unturned in counteracting them. This would, of course, involve the sacrifice of his spirit of vanity at the altar of the lasting welfare of his own country and of the country which he came to govern, but which he woefully misgoverned throughout his extended term of seven long years. Let Lord Curzon show that he is possessed of the high virtue of a true statesman that faints not at the admission of his administrative errors and blunders.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th November,
1905.

The last days of Lord Curzon as Viceroy in India.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th November, says:—Can any one fail to be impressed by the manner in which Lord Curzon is passing his last days in India? He is said to be the greatest Viceroy after Lord Dalhousie, but we do not remember any other Viceroyalty that had such a termination. Look at it as we may, there is hardly any doubt that Lord Curzon has gone into retirement at Agra prior to his retirement from India. And Agra has been chosen not because it is the loveliest place in India, but because of all large cities, it is the quietest, and the pulse of public feeling beats the feeblest. The memory of Mogul supremacy still broods over the place, and Agra is more a city of the past than the living present. There Lord Curzon is practically forgotten for the moment. It is not only because the Prince and Princess of Wales have absorbed all public attention, but because the public can only associate the name of Lord Curzon with bitterness and it is much better that it should be put aside altogether. Is he making his exit at all like a great Viceroy? At not a single place that he has visited during this his last tour has there been any enthusiasm. Municipalities came and presented addresses because they were compelled to do so, officials came because they were bound to do so and because several of them have been favoured by Lord Curzon. And there are one or two others who belong to the class of people who are always to be found among a fallen people, men who have neither self-respect nor any sense of shame, who have titles and wealth but who are unfit to be touched by the boots of men who know what self-respect is and to whom the cause of their country is dear. The address presented by the Chamber of Commerce in Bombay was the tamest of tame affairs. The citizens of Bombay practically refused to recognise Lord Curzon. Whether they are wanting in enthusiasm has been sufficiently demonstrated by the reception they have given to the Prince and Princess of Wales. There will be time to compare notes also on the occasion of Lord Minto's arrival and Lord Curzon's final departure, which is not very far off. If greatness consists in unpopularity of the most intense kind, then Lord Curzon has been great. Otherwise he has not a single admirer among Indians or Anglo-Indians except those upon whom he has conferred favours—admiration of a kind which can be classed as affection or esteem.

Under ordinary circumstances there would have been no need for Lord Curzon to vegetate at Agra pending Lord Minto's arrival. His course was perfectly clear. After receiving the Prince and Princess of Wales Lord Curzon should have returned to Calcutta and awaited the arrival of his successor there and made over his office to Lord Minto in the historic hall of Government House. The only thing that stood in the way of carrying out this project was the state of public feeling in Bengal. It is no longer possible to disguise the fact that Lord Curzon was reluctant to return to Bengal after partitioning that Province. There would have been a demonstration against him in the streets of Calcutta. The fact would have been cabled to England and would have created a great sensation. It would have hardly done to call Lord Curzon a great Viceroy after that. It would have jarred upon his nerves and wounded his self-love most grievously. By avoiding Calcutta that probability has been avoided. The Agra Municipality has presented him with an address, and a deputation from the Delhi Municipality has presented another. Are not these a sufficient indication of the greatness and popularity of Lord Curzon? The Municipalities of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras have not presented any farewell addresses, because they do not understand how great Lord Curzon is. It has been said that there is precedent for the Viceroy of India handing over his office to his successor in Bombay. But is there any precedent for a Viceroy avoiding both Calcutta and Bombay and waiting at Agra for his successor to arrive in Bombay? Lord Curzon is far too sensitive by nature not to feel the bitterness of his present position. He has stayed longer than any Viceroy of India; it was only a Governor General who stayed as long or longer. Is there anywhere any sign of regret at his impending departure? On the contrary, there is general relief at the prospect that his administration has at length drawn to a close. The news of his resignation was received with every sign of rejoicing and his departure is being awaited with some impatience.

Public opinion about his Indian career is emphatic and unmistakeable and the bitterness of feeling is marked. Whatever might have been the promise of his Indian Viceroyalty Lord Curzon has wrecked it completely. His departure from India will not be regretted but will be hailed as a relief The evil that he has done will not be soon forgotten, and the one single consolation is that out of that evil good has come and the country has entered upon a new phase of progress and advancement. Lord Curzon has done harm both to the Government and the people, for it is due to him that a change has come over the relations between the Government and the people. And now, on the eve of his departure from India, he stands aloof from the people, unregretted and unhonoured.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Expulsion of the representative of the Mysore Standard from the Representative Assembly At Mysore.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th November, says:—We have received a letter from a Mysore correspondent strongly protesting against the action of the Mysore Government in expelling the representative of the Mysore Standard from the Representative Assembly. He mentions one or two instances that happened during the time of previous Ministers in which also some newspapers were either punished or ill-treated, and he says that repression of this kind is utterly opposed to the liberal and enlightened policy of the Mysore Darbár. As a rule, newspapers, unless they happen to be fast supporters of the Government, are not in the good books of the Government. But in British India the spirit of the English law has to be followed to a certain extent and hostile newspapers cannot be suppressed out of hand. In Native States newspapers are still less welcome and Political Residents are keener than the Darbárs about putting down the nuisance of newspapers. But the Mysore Government ought to prove an exception, as it is conducted on lines which are entirely aboveboard, and the Administration has nothing to fear from the light of public opinion. It may be that the Mysore Standard proved a hostile critic of the Mysore Government, but that is hardly a reason why that Government should try to wreak its vengeance upon that paper by an unseemly exhibition of temper. The great virtue of statesmanship is patience and the Minister of Mysore should have an abundant supply of this quality. If only the Mysore Government remains what it is represented to be, newspaper attacks or criticism can do it no harm, whereas such sensitiveness as the Minister has just been displaying has given rise to a suspicion that there must be something rotten in the State of Denmark Complaint against native officials in Bareilly holding their court till 10 p.m. while in camp.

6. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th November, complains that certain native officials in Bareilly while they are on tour during winter hold their court till 10 o'clock in the night, which causes great inconvenience and discomfort to suitors and others. Again, these touring officials too frequently adjourn cases on such flimsy grounds as press of work, indisposition, &c., which obliges the suitors to go back to their homes and then attend the court again as often as the dates for hearing their cases are changed. The District Magistrate had better issue a circular letter to his subordinate officials directing them to make a point of finishing all their court work during the day time while they are on tour, just as European officers do at headquarters.

SAHIFA,
12th November,
1905.

Protest against the new Municipal rules for the regulation of the sale of meat at Bijnor.

7. Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 12th November, protesting against the new rules made by the Municipal Board, for the regulation of the sale of meat at Bijnor, and confirmed by the Local Government, says that these rules are either quite unnecessary, or too impracticable for the butchers and the Musalman residents of the town in general to carry out. Rule 2 provides that none but a license-holder shall sell, or expose for sale, any meat: this is almost impracticable, for a butcher, who takes out a license for the purpose, cannot work alone in his shop the whole day long, but must get some relatives (or employ servants) to assist him in his business, and as these men are liable to be changed every now and then it is not practicable for the butcher to take out a license in the name of every one of his assistants, and every time that he has occasion to take in a new man. Clause 1 (a) of rule 3 is perfectly useless, inasmuch as no butcher can, according to his religion, sell the flesh of any animal which has died from natural causes, but even if he does so he makes himself liable to be punished under the Penal Code. Similarly clause 2 (a) of rule 3, which prohibits the sale of any meat which has been blown up or artificially stuffed, is hardly needed in the interest of the health of meat-eaters. This clause further insists on meat being kept in or on a clean basket or board, covered with a clean cloth: no butcher can afford to keep the basket and cloth clean at all hours of the day, for no sooner meat is placed in a basket, &c., than the latter gets stained, and the cloth put on it becomes dirty in a short time. All that a butcher may reasonably be required to do is that he should wash the basket in which he places meat and put a clean cloth thereon once every morning. Clause (c) of rule 3, which requires the butchers to have the floor of their shops paved with bricks, cannot be easily carried out, the shops themselves being made of mud. Clause (e) of rule 3, which forbids a licensee to "sell meat at any place other than that mentioned in the license" will cause great inconvenience to the Muhammadan residents in general. The latter hardly celebrate a ceremony in which beef is not indispensible, and hence it is necessary that on such an occasion they should get a licensed butcher at their own house to weigh them out as much meat as they require for one rite after another. The population of Muhammadans at Bijnor is comparatively large, numbering more than ten thousand; and it is not just that the Municipal Board should practically give its Hindu members a free hand to pass what rules they please, without any regard for the convenience of their Musalman fellow-citizens. Rule 8, under which "no one shall carry meat through any street or public place except in a clean receptacle and covered with a clean cloth," is simply ridiculous; for as it stands, it is not only applicable to butchers, but to purchasers also, which is evidently absurd.

ADVOCATE,
16th November,
1905.

A complaint regarding the selection of text books in History and Geography for the Entrance Examination of the Allahabad University.

8. A correspondent writing in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th November, says:—I venture to say that sufficient care is not bestowed on the selection of books in History and Geography. First there was the "Citizen of India"—a book said to be thrust on our boys out of supreme imperial consideration, but a book the language and subject-matter of which the smartest boy in the class could not comprehend. Happily the book has been omitted from the course of studies, but its place has been taken by another and more important book, Mr. de la Fosse's "History of India," a book which again is so pedantic in style, so stiff in language, so intricate in the manner of presentation that its continuance in the curriculum of studies for three successive years has been a matter of real surprise to teachers and guardians alike. And this book is placed in the hands of the boys who have just passed the Middle Stage and have not yet learnt how to string two sentences together! Then comes Geography, a subject to which much importance is sought to be attached. But from the way in which the Course of Geography is distributed in the lower classes any better or more satisfactory result can hardly be expected. Up to the Middle Class the boy has to confine himself to India only, and then all at once, when he is in the Preparatory Entrance Standard, the whole world is unfolded before his bewildered gaze, and that by means of either Clarke's Geographic Reader or by Wood's General Geography—two books standing in a relation of marked antithesis—the latter is as disgustingly bulky and voluminous as the former is obscurely brief, the one leaving only indistinct impressions behind by too much brevity and conciseness, and the other confounding the beginner by saying and describing too much and too many things. I leave the sensible public to judge how an Indian boy whom experience shows to entertain for the study of geography an aversion which may be termed almost instructive, can be expected to kindly take to the study of a subject in which books of the above description are placed in his hand.

Establishment of a Medical College in the United Provinces.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th November, referring to the present proposal for the establishment of a Medical College in the United Provinces, says:—With regard to the locality there are some important considerations to which sufficient weight has not been given. We have already said that, as most of the money is being found in Oudh, Lucknow may fairly claim to have the Medical College in that city. It must not be forgotten, however, that there is no instance in India in which a Medical College is located elsewhere than the seat of the University. There may be several Arts Colleges at different centres, but there is usually only one Medical College in a Presidency or Province, and as it is an essential part of the University it is usually located at the headquarters of the University. This is the case in Calcutta, Bombay, Madras and Lahore. It is not a case of Allahabad versus Lucknow, but the all-important consideration of a central educational locality, from which the many-rayed influence of education may radiate. It is immaterial whether that centre happens to be at Lucknow or at Allahabad. It must be remembered that, at the time the late Mâháraja of Vizianagram promised to contribute two lakhs of rupees towards a Medical College the idea was to have the College at Allahabad. The case is much stronger now with the Muir Central College at Allahabad. That institution is a splendid monument not only to local munificence, but to the public spirit and generosity of the Native States in Central India, and we are sure that a Medical College at Allahabad would appeal to their liberality as strongly. The Muir College is fitted up with one of the best laboratories in India and there is excellent accommodation for research work. Both might prove of great use to medical students. It also seems to us that contributions to such an institution as a Medical College should not be guided by considerations of locality, and it is of the very greatest importance that the highest educational institutions in these Provinces should be located in a single central place.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
October-
November, 1905.

Partition of Bengal, and the Swadeshi movement.

10. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad), in its joint issue of October-November, says:—When Lord Curzon ultimately decided upon the division of Bengal—there is reason to apprehend that he had set his heart upon it at the time that Sir Andrew Fraser was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of that Province—he could not have had the slightest inkling of the startling developments that have now taken place. He must have been prepared for that sort of opposition which an unpopular measure calls forth: the public meetings and demonstrations, the memorials of protest and the appeals to the Secretary of State for India. These occasioned him no trouble as they could be contemptuously brushed aside. There was also no fear of violent opposition as violence is not resorted to in this country and can be put down by the superior strength of the Government. But this kind of passive resistance could not have been foreseen by Lord Curzon, and even if he had foreseen it he would not have stayed his hand. There was no urgency whatever for the partition of Bengal. The reorganisation of the Military administration, which was considered far more urgent by the Ministry and which brought about the defeat and resignation of Lord Curzon, has been allowed to stand over till the arrival of Lord Minto. Before the Resolution and Proclamation for the Partition of Bengal had been issued, Lord Curzon had resigned and his successor had been nominated. Considering also the attitude of the House of Commons, Lord Curzon might have very well and very wisely left the question for his successor to settle. The manner in which he has carried out the Partition has justified the belief that he wanted to strike a last blow before he left India. Frustrated ingloriously in his attempt to oppose Lord Kitchener he took his revenge upon Bengal. It is useless to consider whether this view is right or wrong. This is the view that people took in Bengal and they acted upon it. As soon as the Proclamation was issued, the leaders of Bengal discontinued further representations or protests to the Government of Bengal or the Government of India. They concentrated their whole energy upon the Swadeshi, or rather the boycott movement, for the latter had to be carried out first in order to impress the British public. They have succeeded and the import trade of Manchester has been paralysed.

Who will minimise the importance of the success that has been attained? The earliest relations between England and India were commercial and now England does more trade with India than with the rest of the world put together. If any one had said six months ago that the Bengal leaders had the power to cut off the important trade of Manchester, he would have been looked upon as being out of his senses. This is not mere talk but substantial and almost incredible work. Opinions may vary as to the nature of the work: some people may call it mischievous and wicked; the people of Bengal will retort that the partition of Bengal is still more mischievous and wicked. Further, it would be a mistake to suppose that the news from Manchester will help to abate the enthusiasm in Bengal. On the contrary this record of an assured success will give a great and general impetus to the movement. Bengal, East and West, will be jubilant and will push on the movement with redoubled vigour and zeal. The whole of India has been following the struggle with the keenest interest and the utmost sympathy, and the enthusiasm of Bengal has been shared by Poona and the Punjab. The history of progress in India now enters upon another stage, and Lord Curzon has made himself immortal by putting the extinguisher upon the trade between England and India.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

The Swadeshi procession at Lahore.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad, of the 12th November, says:—The remarkable success of the Swadeshi procession at Lahore is due, we suspect, as much to the enthusiasm which the movement has inspired in the Punjab as to the mistaken attempt of the local police to hinder and delay the procession. If the District Superintendent of Police had at once given the sanction originally applied for, it is probable that the procession, being the first of its kind, would not have swelled to such enormous numbers. But the curious letter of the Police Superintendent served as an excellent advertisement, and by the time the procession came to be arranged people were determined that it should not fail to be a conspicuous success for lack of number or enthusiasm. The result is that our correspondent is in a position to say justly that the demonstration was as remarkable and as impressive as those held in Calcutta. The example of Lahore should be followed in all the principal cities and towns of the Punjab so that the importance of the Swadeshi movement may be brought home to the minds of the people.

Apprehension of Government legislating for putting down canvassing for the Swadeshi movement.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th November, says:—There are signs visible on all hands that if the Government of Lord Minto be found willing, an attempt will be made to introduce a measure in the Legislature to put down canvassing for the Swadeshi movement. If a man restrains another in the free discharge of his right of personal choice, it is a technical assault, even if no violence is used. But no formal complaints of even such assaults have been made so far. It is the picketing and the persuasion that have now become distasteful, and the question is whether the law can be made so elastic as to treat these as offences. We have had repeated assurances that the Government is nowise opposed to the Swadeshi movement, and it is only abuse and illegalities that are sought to be put down. If so, why was a Swadeshi preacher arrested, and why was not sanction given to a Swadeshi procession? The authorities and not the Government might be to blame, but what has the Government done to show that it disapproves the action of the authorities? The opinion is gaining ground that whatever conduces to the real improvement of the country, whether it is the Swadeshi movement or anything else, is likely to be opposed by the Government so long as it is guided by the influence of Lord Curzon. In this case, however, the Government is perfectly powerless, and, if only the people will, the Swadeshi movement is bound to make headway.

ZUL QURNAIN,
14th November,
1905.

Suggestion for including the last Friday of the Muhammadan month of Ramzan in the list of public holidays in the United Provinces.

13. The Zul Qurnain (Budaun), of the 14th November, says that while Hindu employés in courts and public offices get holidays for almost all their important festivals, the Musalmans get a few only. The last Friday of Ramzan, the fasting month of the Muhammadans, is a very important day, when he Muhammadans are required to gather together at the Jama Masjid of their espective localities, and say their prayers. But while the Government of the Punjab has lately seen the necessity of including the day in question in the list of public holidays to be observed in the Government offices, &c., the United Provinces Government has not yet thought fit to do the same. The writer urges that Sir James Digges LaTouche should recognize the necessity for granting a holiday for the said lay to Muhammadans employed under his Government also, and have it included in he list of public holidays of his province.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th November,
1905.

Alleged abuse of section 110 of the Indian Criminal Procedure Code by the police and District officers, and a suggestion for a suitable modification of the law.

14. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th November, in a long article, bitterly complains that for some years past, section 110 (of the Criminal Procedure Code) has come to be very much abused by the police and District officers, so that nobody, however well-behaved and law-abiding he may be, can now consider himself safe from being hauled up before a magistrate any time under this section. Formerly only a person who was actually a robber, thief house-breaker or receiver of stolen property was liable to be so chalaned and punished. But now any person, however rich, respectable, or dignified, with whom a Police Sub-Inspector, Inspector, or a District Magistrate happens to be displeased, may be sent up to court and required by it to furnish security for his good behaviour, or go to jail for any period up to three years. What is still worse is that men who are willing to stand security for a person so hauled up are generally dissuaded from doing so by the police holding them out threats. If a zamindar is willing to become a surety, the tahsildar prevents him from doing so, reporting that his property is a joint one or encumbered with debts, &c. If the accused person offers cash security it is refused. Thus a person once chalaned for bad livelihood, seldom escapes being relegated to jail; and when a man has once been in jail he becomes a prey to a life-long tyranny of the police. If a statement were prepared of all the cases tried under section 110 (of the Criminal Procedure Code) in a year in a province, showing the number of the persons (1) acquitted, (2) released on bail, and (3) convicted and punished, the writer could say that 99 per cent. of the accused would be found to have been convicted. Such being the case, if the section continues to be so freely and rigorously applied there will hardly be left a family some member or other of which has not been convicted under this section at one time or another. In no other part of the world does there exist a law under which a person can be punished, on mere suspicion, for a crime which has not been proved to have been committed by him. In England there are cleverer thieves, swindlers, &c. as well as men who are in league with these bad characters, yet the law does not provide the police there with such an engine of oppression as section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code does in India. The section is certainly capable of any amount of abuse by the local authorities, and the Government would do well to take the opportunity for modifying the law suitably in honour of the gracious visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to India at the present time.

Need for issue of platform tickets at the Railway Station, Allahabad.

15. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 13th November, says:—Complaints reach us every now and then of heart-burning constantly caused by the conduct of the local railway officers, dressed in their brief little authority. When a train arrives, they would not for love or money, allow anybody to enter the Allahabad railway platform and see friends or relations off to distant lands. We do not understand why platform tickets are not issued in Allahabad, while at many other important stations they are at the disposal of the public. Station Masters and their Assistants on duty are often too busy or too much wanting in discretion or courtesy to attend to the requests of Indian gentlemen for the issue of platform passes. Mr. Peddie has the reputation of being an able officer. Would he care to apply to the higher E. I. R. authorities, and by their permission, arrange from an early date for the issue of platform tickets? Not only would such arrangement prevent much sorrow and chagrin, but it would bring in a decent revenue to the railway.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Illegal exaction of fares from two Indian boys on the railway station platform at Allahabad.

16. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th November, says:—We have already referred to the inconvenience caused to the public who have to go to the Allahabad Railway station to meet friends or see friends off, on account of there being no platform tickets, and the difficulty in obtaining permission to go on to the platform. We have now an instance as to how the present system works. On last Sunday afternoon two boys, who live in Mr. S. Sinha's house and are under his charge, went to the Railway station to see some friends off who were going down to Gaya. They went to the Station Master's office to apply for platform passes. He was not in his office. There was some Assistant or Ticket Collector, who did not give them passes. The train was in by this time and the boys went and saw their friends off. When they were coming out they were promptly detained and required to produce their passes. They had of course none. They were then threatened with arrest unless they paid the fare from Moghal Serai to Allahabad. The result was that one of the boys was detained in custody at the station while the other was allowed to go home to fetch the money. Mr. Sinha was away from Allahabad on a professional engagement, and the boy took the money—two fares from Moghal Serai to Allahabad—after which they were let go. In the receipt in their possession they are charged the fare from Moghal Serai to Allahabad, while the train was proceeding from Allahabad to Moghal Serai. On the receipt it is further stated that they were found on the platform without tickets after the arrival of a train. As one of the boys was sent home to bring the money the station people cannot allege that they were unaware that the boys belonged to this place and were not travelling by rail. On his return Mr. Sinha was informed of what had happened. He has requested the Station Master to refund the money illegally obtained from the boys and to be furnished with the names of the men concerned in the wrongful restraint of the boys and the illegal recovery of fare from them. Any fresh development of this matter will be awaited with interest.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th November,
1905.

The Prince of Wales in Indore and the retired Maharaja Holkar.

1. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th November, says :—After a busy and doubtless gratifying time in Bombay Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales have left for Indore. From one of the most important cities in India to an important Native State the change will be striking and suggestive and will appeal strongly to the imagination of the Royal visitors. The sight of the young Holkar may remind the Royal visitors of the actual ruler who has been forced into retirement. We do not know whether the retired Maharaja will seek, or will be granted an audience of the Prince of Wales. The likelihood is that the shady side of the relations of the Government of India with the Native States will be kept from the knowledge of the heir to the British Empire. Else the Prince might wonder why a ruler in the vigour of life and the full possession of all his faculties should have abdicated his powers or been put aside in favour of his young son. The Prince of Wales doubtless knows that it is not for him to probe the inner and more mysterious problems of the Indian administration, and he must take men and things as he finds them. The loyalty that greets him is real and the welcome sincere, and with these His Royal Highness will have to rest content.

ADVOCATE,
19th November,
1905.

A suggestion for making some special concession to the Indians in general in commemoration of the Prince of Wales's visit.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th November, says :—The Gujrati has drawn attention to the necessity of making the visit of the Prince and the Princess of Wales understandable by the masses. In Asiatic countries such visits have ever been associated with boons conferred on the people. Even now Indian Princes and Chiefs make their tours in unfrequented parts of their territories memorable by deeds of charity that touch all people. It is quite natural under the circumstances that the masses should like very much to see the present visit associated with the grant of certain concessions that would be enjoyed by all classes of people without any distinction. It was at one time given out that the Salt Tax would be abolished to commemorate the Royal visit. The rumour has been contradicted. It were well if some way could be found out to satisfy the popular expectation.

ADVOCATE,
23rd November,
1905.

The Advocate's review of Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty of India.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd November, says :—Lord Curzon left India Saturday last at 8 A.M. and Lord Minto succeeded to the Viceroyalty an hour after. The late Viceroy left our shores practically unwept and unsung but for his own weeping at the parting and his own singing of his praise. But in a land of varying and even mutually conflicting interests Lord Curzon had the advantage of being honoured with valedictory addresses and banquets. This was good in one way. His Lordship got a number of opportunities to vent his feelings—of gratefulness to his admirers, of wrath against his critics and of adulation of himself. The pity of the whole thing is that seven long years' strenuous labour and devoted work have failed to win him the good-will of the Indian people from the national point of view.

A ruler is and should be judged not so much by the number of measures adopted during his time as by the spirit engendered by his administration as a whole. Individual measures may be good, bad or indifferent ; certain persons or communities may be benefited and some others deprived of a few privileges; but the enhancement of or decrease in the moral prestige hitherto enjoyed by the Government is the real index of the success or failure of a ruler. Judged by this standard it goes without saying that Lord Curzon has grievously failed. The loss of this prestige has resulted in the lessening of the confidence of the people in the British sense of justice. Educated Indians have refused to accept, in the case of the officials, the wish for the deed ; and, what is more, they look upon the promises given and platitudes indulged in by high officials as but rank verbiage—words, words and words. And Lord Curzon is responsible for this unfortunate attitude in the people.

His foreign policy has made the frontier agog with excitement. If no serious wars broke out in any part, we were not strangers to other methods of warfare such as blockades, punitive expeditions and political missions. And the greatest of England's great soldiers is now busy fortifying the frontier with forts and strategic railways and making it alive with a plethora of soldiers. Internally we fared no better. The Official Secrets Act and the Universities Act, the exclusion of Indians from high offices, the partition of Bengal are measures that have brought the moral influence of the British Government to its lowest ebb. Even the giant intellect of the brilliant autocrat could not conceal under the folds of exuberant language the real motif of his régime. To every step taken he wanted to see Indians bow submissively and accept it cheerfully. Quite the reverse took place. Hence the supreme indifference to the feelings and arguments of the people that chiefly characterised the later years of his administration. Lord Curzon has not been a sympathetic administrator. He has failed to exhibit qualities that mark the statesman and distinguish him from the mere politician. We are therefore in spite of ourselves very much in doubt if the people will accept Lord Curzon's offer in the spirit in which he has given it, namely that on his return home it would be his duty to see that "Indian interests are not bartered away or sacrificed or selfishly pawned in the financial or economic adjustments of the Empire." Let us hope Lord Curzon may yet come to realize his mistakes and live to do this country and its people the justice he failed to give them while here. To his Lordship, Lady Curzon and their children we wish a safe voyage home and happy life among their friends and relatives.

ARYA MITRA,
16th November,
1905.

Objection taken to the appointment of an European tutor to the minor Maharaja Holkar.

4. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th November, states that the late Political Agent in Bharatpur has been appointed tutor to the minor Mahárája Holkar. Surely none but a man who is a follower of the same religion as a minor chief, and is well acquainted with the manners and customs, &c. of the latter's family, should be appointed to be his tutor; and it is difficult to understand why Government should invariably appoint Christian (European) tutors to minor Hindu Chiefs.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th November,
1905.

An English printed sheet in circulation, containing very serious charges against the Nawab of Rampur.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th November, says:—Some one who signs himself Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq, but who has doubtless taken care to conceal his identity, is circulating a printed sheet containing a number of abominable and unmentionable charges against His Highness the Nawab of Rampur. The name of the press, where the document was printed, is not given, so that some detective ability will be necessary to trace the writer and the printer. The composition makes it evident that it is the work of a man with hardly any education. It is quite possible that it is a barefaced attempt to levy blackmail, and the real author is known to the Nawab and his officials. No serious notice can be taken of an anonymous and scurrilous attack of this kind, but if a fraction of all that this writer alleges were true the Government would be bound to make a careful inquiry into the Nawab's character and administration, for his officers are as roundly maligned as himself. The position of a Native Prince is such that he cannot well appear as a complainant in an action for libel in a court of law, but the same disqualification does not apply to his officers. The broad circulation of calumnies so gross and so numerous calls for some action. Either the Government should order the detection of the offender, or the officers of the Nawab should endeavour to bring him to book in a court of law.

HAFIZ-UL-MULK,
November, 1905.

Rumour regarding Government proposal for the creation of some permanent posts of Partition Amins in the United Provinces.

6. The Háfiz-ul-Mulk (Hapur), for November, says:—It is rumoured that a number of the Partition Amínships are to be made permanent Government appointments in the United Provinces. If this be true, of those men who are at present employed as Amíns, preference should be given to such of them as have learnt surveying and passed the Departmental Amíns' examination over others who have not done so, when the newly created permanent posts come to be filled up. The certificated amins should also be held eligible for the posts of Patwáris without the necessity of their passing the Patwáris' examination, their Amínship certificate being held quite sufficient for the purpose.

SAHIFA,
19th November,
1905.

New Municipal rules for regulating the sale of meat at Bijnor.

7. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 19th November, in continuation of its article in the last issue (vide paragraph 7, page 379, of the "Selections" from the Native newspapers in the United Provinces for 1905) says that the new Municipal rules for regulating the sale of meat at Bijnor are calculated to virtually prevent the Muhammadans generally from eating beef in future. Under these rules the butchers are required to take out a license for carrying on their profession on payment of a fee. The Municipal Board further proposes to build pakka shops to be rented out to butchers for sale of meat. All these things will necessarily raise the price of beef, which has hitherto been selling comparatively cheaper, and was thus available even to the poorer classes of the Muhammadans. The fact of the matter is that the Municipal Board is mainly composed of Hindus, there being only three Musalmans out of the total number of the 12 members on the Board, and the inevitable result is that the Hindu members being naturally inclined to stop cow-slaughter as far as possible, are able to have their own way in the administration of all municipal affairs and get what rules framed they like. But Government should give due consideration to the rights of both Hindus and Musalmans, and see that equal treatment is accorded to them in all matters. In conclusion the writer quotes some of the Urdu verses which one Maulvi Maula Bakhsh composed and recently recited at a feast. The poet deplores that the Muhammadans should have become extremely weak under British rule on account of their inability to obtain (a free supply of) beef for their food owing to the high-handed policy of the local Municipal Board.

ADVOCATE,
19th November,
1905.

The East and West Bengal Provincial rulers and the participation of students in the Swadeshi movement.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th November, says:—We sincerely regret to find that two provincial rulers—of old Bengal and new Eastern Bengal and Assam—attach undue importance to the participation of students in the Swadeshi movement. Both have begun the issue of hasty circulars that show little grasp of the situation and less warmth of the hearts that beat under the official waistcoats. If the students of the Rungpur Zilla School have in a body left the institution and the elders of the town have taken upon themselves the education of the young, if the Hindu and Muhammadan residents of the place have not thought it their duty to present an address of welcome to Mr. Fuller, even if they go on singing Bande Mataram on the streets, surely it is not within the power of the District Magistrate to set up a reign of terror by making the leading citizens Special Constables. He might be satisfied at seeing Vakils, Zamindars, Municipal Commissioners and Honorary Magistrates thus disgraced, but does he know with what feelings these extreme proceedings will be looked upon by the populace? It is high time that such repressive measures should be at once repressed, as it must be known to the over-zealous officials that such proceedings cannot kill the Swadeshi movement.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
19th November,
1905.

The attitude of the two Lieutenant-Governors in Bengal towards the Swadeshi movement.

9. Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th November, says:—We were premature in the anticipation that Mr. Fuller, the Lieutenant-Governor of the new Province, was displaying more tact than Sir Andrew Fraser. He has made matters much worse. It is just a month that Mr. Fuller has blossomed forth into a Lieutenant-Governor and he has already set the Brahmaputra and the Ganges on fire. He has been issuing circulars and proclamations with an absolute disregard for law, intending evidently to terrorise the people. The ball was started by Sir Andrew Fraser. That circular about schoolboys and the enrolment of schoolmasters as special constables is as mischievous as it is unlawful. So far it has not been followed by action. In East Bengal a Magistrate has already enrolled several special constables among people who are not connected with education. We shall hear something more about it by and by. Mr. Fuller has threatened that boys of schools and colleges, who take part in the Swadeshi movement, will not be admitted into the public service. In answer, the boys of the Dacca school and college have left in a body. The shouting of Bande Mataram has been forbidden. Mr. Fuller has no power to issue such an order and it will not be obeyed. If the police make any arrest the High Court will see that the law is not exceeded. The people have not offended against the law anywhere, and they will not be coerced by Mr. Fuller's or Sir Andrew Fraser's up-country, unlawful methods. They have threatened the boys, and all Government schools and colleges may become empty at any moment. If the cry of Bande Mataram is forbidden, people will shout louder than ever. These two local rulers, between them, are clearly importing an element of danger into the situation; for while they are thinking of suppressing the popular feeling, the consequence will be a rupture and increased bitterness. The Local Governments just now are a far graver danger than the people of the province, and it is folly of this nature that precipitates a crisis. The sky is rapidly darkening in Bengal, and people are already speaking of holding aloof from the celebrations during the Royal visit. And if the two Lieutenant-Governors persist in their present course that will be the inevitable result, though the people of Bengal have so far been most anxious to loyally welcome the Prince and Princess of Wales. The misrule in Bengal will be complete if the two Lieutenant-Governors, by their combined wisdom, succeed in driving the people to give the Royal visitors a cold reception. Deeply as such a consequence is to be deplored, Mr. Fuller and Sir Andrew Fraser are doing their level best to bring about such a consummation.

ADVOCATE,
23rd November,
1905.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fuller, and the Swadeshi movement.

10. Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd November, says:—It was expected that Mr. Fuller in inaugurating his new adminstration in East Bengal would take steps to reconcile the people to the new change and try to appease the wrath of the Bengalis who he himself admits have been administratively divided against their wishes. But Mr. Fuller has tried to achieve by repressive measures what he could have done by means of friendship and good-will. Mr. Fuller has little cause of resentment. It is true that the Bengal Municipal Commissioners and Members of the District Boards have offended him by not offering him welcome on his arrival in the new districts, but nothing could be lost by Mr. Fuller's waiting for a few months more in order to see what course the present feeling of strong resentment takes. One may regard the action of the Municipal and District Boards which refused to present him with formal addresses as objectionable, as surely nobody could have construed the addresses to mean that people had accepted the change. But however objectionable might have been the attitude of the leaders in the Eastern Bengal, there can be no excuse for Mr. Fuller's setting up a reign of terror. The British Government is too strong to have recourse to Shaista Khan's barbarous methods, whom Mr. Fuller's threatens to follow. Nobody will read the account of his doings at Barisal with any feeling but that of indignation and shame. The appointment of leading residents of Rungpur as Police Constables, forcing them against their will to attend the Police lines are extreme measures which can be taken only at times when it is impossible to quell disturbances with the aid of the ordinary police force. There has been practically no breach of peace. When nobody's limbs have been broken, when no riot has taken place, such proceedings can signify one lesson: that the Government has become panic-stricken. Does the Government of the new Province desire to be told that the belief will grow in the people that Mr. Fuller failing to find any excuse for the suppression of the Swadeshi or boycott movement as a disloyal or criminal one is affording provocation to the Bengalis to give an opportunity to the Police to interfere? This is a double-edged process which can cut both ways.

For the time being the movement may be suppressed, but it will increase the want of confidence in the professions of high officials. The belief that the British Government's methods are constitutional will be shaken with disastrous results. Mr. Fuller took the other day much trouble to assure the people of Eastern Bengal that all the regulations by which they had hitherto been governed would remain in force in the new province and their liberties protected. But does he know what will be the effect of the indiscreet actions in the matter of the publication of circulars to the effect that no meeting in support of the Swadeshi movement should be held in public places, no person is to sing Bande Mataram on public roads, no student is to attend political meetings? The impression will be created that the character of the British Raj has been changed and instead of the rule by laws they have the rule of no-laws, and that what they feared they have come to realize, that is, the new province will be a non-regulated province. The people will see that from the very beginning an effort was made to kill the Swadeshi movement by ridicule. But an earnest people, an indignant nation, has never been cowed down by mere ridicule. So use of force is to take the place of ridicule. This may succeed for some time. For instance, the leaders at Barisal have been forced to withdraw the proclamation which they had issued to the people. But these proceedings, however temporarily successful, would be more injurious to the State than any amount of sedition talked and written by an excited people. We can only hope that the very first action of Lord Minto on assuming office will be to see how far it is possible for him to heal the wounds and to put an end to the rule of terror. Our advice to the leaders in Eastern Bengal is not to take to any method which may give the least chance to Mr. Fuller's subordinates to interfere with their liberty. No circulars and no brow-beating can undo what they have achieved in the past and none can prevent them from following the course of passive resistance towards a policy which they believe threatens their very existence as a separate unit in the Indian polity. In their sufferings they have the sympathy of the rest of India. The persecution to which they have been subjected, the insults which have been heaped on them can serve only one purpose, and that is to strengthen their nerves. They have to guard only that their opponents should not get a chance of poisoning the ears of their friends. It should at every turn be made abundantly clear that they bear no ill-will to Government, but that their hatred is confined to the policy of certain rulers.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
23rd November,
1905.

The Swadeshi movement and the alleged reign of terror established by the Hon'ble Mr. Fuller in East Bengal.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd November, says:—There is only one theme of conversation now throughout India as all eyes are turned to only one part of the country. The reports that come from Bengal and East Bengal day by day are scanned with the most feverish excitement throughout the length and breadth of the country, and every new development is followed with the most breathless interest. It is difficult as yet to get at the exact truth. There are rumours that telegraph wires have been closed to newspaper correspondents. Wild rumours are in hourly circulation all over the country. Mr. Fuller is now personally engaged in establishing a period of terrorism, doubtless to crush the Swadeshi movement. The law does not trouble him and Russian methods are not repugnant to him. He is evidently determined to justify the choice of Lord Curzon as speedily as he can and to prove himself a strong ruler. There is one incident reported from Barisal, which if true, must be regretted. Mr. Fuller is reported to have sent for certain leaders and bullied them into withdrawing a certain proclamation they had issued about the Swadeshi movement. All the leaders in Bengal and East Bengal must remember that the eyes of all India are upon them as the most earnest sympathy of all India is with them. Let them be cautious by all means, but when once they take up a position they must not recede on any account and no power on earth should move them. Everything that they are doing is perfectly constitutional and within the four corners of the law. If they are persecuted in violation of the law they must be prepared to suffer. Mr. Fuller threatened the leaders of Barisal that he would bind them down to keep the peace. He could have only ordered a Magistrate to do so as he has no magisterial powers himself. And if a Magistrate had bound them down by order there is an appeal to the High Court. If the proclamation itself is open to objection it should not have been issued at all, but no one will take Mr. Fuller's authority for it. Mr. Fuller is furiously angry because the people are not showing him sufficient respect. If he goes on at this rate he will lose more respect. The special constables at Rungpur, seeing that the only object was to humiliate and insult them have refused to serve and rejected the batons and belts served out to them. Their prosecution has been ordered and now the matter will be properly tested. The Magistrate has been carefully chosen with an eye to conviction, but he will not have the last word by any means, and the matter will come up to the High Court for final disposal. The Gurkhas sent to a peaceful town are oppressing the people, well knowing that they have been sent for that purpose and not for preserving the peace which was never in danger. It is incumbent on the leaders in Bengal to have these things telegraphed to England day after day and encourage their countrymen in East Bengal to hold firm. Mr. Fuller is attempting the impossible and he is bound to fail. The Swadeshi movement has not originated in force and will not be put down by force.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

1905.

Impressment of carpenters by the tahsil peons to repair the bungalows of officers at Allahabad.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th November, says :—Will it be believed that here, in the heart of Allahabad, a system of begár or forced labour is in full swing ? Several years ago Mr. S. S. Thorburn, late of the Punjab Civil Service, denounced in scathing terms the employment of the begár system during the Tirah Expedition and pointed out the deep discontent to which it had given rise in that Province. We believe strict directions have since been given in the Punjab to discontinue the employment of forced labour. There is no military expedition being equipped at present at Allahabad, nor is the city to be honoured by a Royal visit. All that has happened is what usually happens about this time every year, namely, that the people who had gone up to the hills are now coming down to the plains. Vacant bungalows are being re-occupied and are being whitewashed and repaired for that purpose. It appears that in the case of officers—we are not certain whether it is also the case as regards other Europeans—orders are given to the tahsíl officials to have the work carried out in the bungalows. Just at present there seems to be a great demand for carpenters. It is the practice of tahsíl peons to enter some small carpenter's shop—the large furniture establishments being carefully left alone—and impress any carpenters they find into the work assigned to them. After being compelled to do all the work that may be necessary the carpenters are told to go about their business and no wages are paid to them. We do not think that the officers and others who require houses to be put in order for them are aware of this oppressive practice. They must be under the impression that the work done must be paid for ; only somehow the carpenters never get their wages. The result is that in every small carpenter's shop in Colonelganj and Katra the doors are closed and barred throughout the day, and ordinary people find it difficult to get carpenters to come and work in their houses. Batches of tahsíl peons carrying big lathis, go about from shop to shop, knocking at the closed doors loudly and long, but the shopkeepers invariably refuse to open their doors. The men are poor and afraid to make a complaint, and so the authorities do not know what is going on. In one case a carpenter was severely assaulted and was then dragged away to do some work in a bungalow. If this happens unchecked in the city of Allahabad, we can imagine the state of things in the mufassil. The facts can be very easily ascertained. The employment of tahsíl peons on this kind of work, the impressment of artisans, carts, thelas, &c., should be put down by order of the District Magistrate, and officials and others, on coming into Allahabad, should make their own arrangements for their comforts and not through the tahsíl officials.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
23rd November,
1905.

Forced labour in the United Provinces.

13. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 23rd November, says:—It seems that the system of forced and unpaid labour is a much more widespread evil in these Provinces than what we were led to imagine from what we have seen of it in the city of Allahabad. It appears to be the usual practice to impress carts, hackney carriages, ekkas, labourers and artisans without paying them fares and wages, whenever they are required for official, or pseudo-official purposes. We have stated how tahsil peons are impressing carpenters in Colonelganj and Katra. Men of all trades and professions, conveyances plying for hire are similarly impressed everywhere by peons or policemen. The people are under the impression that it is the hukum of the sircar, and consequently there is no redress, unless they conceal themselves or avoid impressment by some other means. The strange thing seems to be that the matter has not attracted the attention of the Local Government and no attempt has been made to put down an evil of such wide extent and so mischievous in its effects. If the elected members of the Local Legislative Council will make an independent and careful enquiry they will find that we are under-stating the facts, instead of exaggerating them. A few questions in the Legislative Council, or some correspondence might attract the attention of the Local Government, and then we are certain a serious and earnest effort will be made to suppress the "begar" system in these Provinces. The people make no open complaint because they are under the impression that complaints will be useless, but there can be no denying that they deeply resent the summary manner in which they are impressed for work, without any remuneration. Even in a distant province like the Punjab the system of forced labour has been suppressed, and there is no justification for its existence here particularly as it brings the Administration into discredit.

ADVOCATE,

The Indians, and the various branches of the public service in India.

14. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd November, says:—A grandson of an Irish soldier regrets that his countrymen stand no chance of getting fat berths in this land, though he quotes a traveller—not a historian, mind you—to prove that "India is conquered by Irish soldiers and governed by English statesmen for the benefit of Scotch planters." The last two he can and must inevitably tolerate, but not "the Indian at the expense of the European." He is sure that with the present system a few short years more and all the engineers in Government employ will be natives. The results of the Roorkee examinations of 1904 and 1905 justify this conclusion. The superior Grade Accounts will soon be in the hands of the natives alone. Study the results of the examinations of the last five years and this point is settled. Was it not this fear that principally brought about the change in the superior Police Department? To what else can the change in the Provincial Civil Service be attributed? Why is open competition not permitted in the Opium Department? He cannot bring himself to see open competition for service between the sons of England's heroes and the sons of boycotters.

ADVOCATE,

Waiting accommodation needed for second and first class passengers at the Kashi station on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

15. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th November, says:—To meet the convenience of passengers travelling in higher classes in connection with the next Congress and Conferences, we are glad to note that the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway authorities have set up a temporary waiting room at the Kashi station. So far so good. But Kashi is an important station and badly needs waiting accommodation for second and first class passengers. The morning trains arriving between 3 and 5 A. M. put down several passengers every morning who in these winter months cannot go to the city at such early hours for want of conveyance and divers reasons. We think a good waiting room is a great necessity at Kashi, and till such time that one is built, the temporary one should not be removed after the Congress is over. We hope the Traffic Superintendent will be good enough to continue the present arrangement.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
23rd November,
1905.

Admission of Indians to the railway station platform at Allahabad.

16. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd November, says:—An inquiry is being made into the illegal recovery of railway fare from two boys living in Mr. S. Sinha's house, and pending the result of that enquiry the further discussion of this particular incident may be suspended. But the real cause of complaint at the Allahabad railway station continues unabated. People are not allowed access to the platform without a pass, and a pass is not always easily obtained. We have not heard that an attempt has ever been made to turn the platform of the station into a promenade, or that people go there out of simple curiosity. The station is not very close to the city and has no particular attraction that we are aware of. Besides travellers, people go either to see their friends off or to welcome or meet others, and for these purposes free access should be allowed at all railway stations. The East Indian Railway is a single system and the practice at every railway station should be uniform. If free admission to the platform is deemed undesirable, the railway authorities are at liberty to introduce a system of platform tickets, which would be a sufficient check. At Mirzapur, we understand, which is quite close to Allahabad, platform tickets have been introduced and there is no complaint of any kind from the public. A system of passes, for which personal application must be made, and which may be granted or refused not merely at the discretion of the Station Master, but at the whim or caprice of every Jack in office, is both irritating and offensive and has not a shadow of justification for it. We think it is absolutely necessary that some prominent citizens should address an official protest to the railway authorities so that the present absurd and annoying practice may be done away with.

Need for an increase in the number of postmen at Pilibhit.

The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhít), of the 20th November, complains that as there are only four postmen for the whole town of Pilibhít, letters, &c. are not delivered to the addressees promptly, so that the latter are not generally able to send urgent replies by return post. The postal authorities had better appoint one or two more postmen.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th November,
1905.

European Powers, Macedonian affairs, and Turkey.

1. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 16th November, referring to Reuter's news that negotiations for an agreement were on foot between England and Russia, says that the object of the British Government in making a friendly advance towards Russia at this time is evidently based on sheer selfishness. Troubles have for some time been brewing in Macedonia, and England, who seems bent on being first in the field, wants to be friends with Russia in order that she may have a free hand in doing what she pleases in Macedonia, and prevent Russia, beaten by Japan, from entering into any possible alliance with Turkey and thereby spoiling her political game in the Near East. But Turkey cannot possibly be thinking of entering into an alliance with Russia or any other Power. It is the so-called civilized, brave and powerful nations of Europe that are ever following the cowardly policy of entering into agreements with one another; but Turkey, notwithstanding that she is, as it were, within the very nest of hornets, has never solicited the friendship of any Power, while she has (occasionally) tried to pull down the "up-turned nose" of certain Powers with the tip of her shoe. However, Russia will not probably care, in her present mood, to conclude any kind of agreement with England at any rate, while she might, with her deep diplomacy, cause England to be involved in a war with Turkey in connection with Macedonian affairs. But the writer is quite sure that if England seriously meddles in the affairs in question, she will simply meet with humiliation and discomfiture, without she or any other Power being able to injure Turkey to a hair's breadth.

HINDOSTHAN,
27th November,
1905.

A tribute of admiration paid to the Rajputs by the Prince of Wales.

2. The English Hindosthân (Kalakankar), of the 27th November, says:—All the Rajput world will be gratified to learn the fitting tribute of admiration which the Prince of Wales has paid them in his speech at Udaipur. The terms in which this unsolicited tribute is couched are so sincere, so spontaneous, and so gracious that they cannot fail to produce a deep, touching, grateful and pleasant impression upon the responsive Rajput mind. The time and place chosen for the expression of these kindly sentiments do a great credit to the Royal tact and insight. We can assure His Royal Highness that the Rajputs, who are second to none in their loyal devotion to the Throne, will gratefully appreciate his gracious compliment, and will reciprocate his generous sentiments of regard for their 'chivalry' and 'freedom' by an unflinching loyalty and ever increasing love to his Royal father and himself.

The Prince seems to have been extremely gratified by his reception and other pleasant experiences at Udaipur. Says his Royal Highness:—"From the moment we arrived in your State this morning to this hour one charming impression has been quickly followed by another. We have heard much of the Rajputs, and have had the pleasure of meeting these clans in England, but to realize the splendid traditions of chivalry, freedom and courtesy which are the proud possessions of the Rajput, one must see him in his own home." Let us say that the Royal Prince has seen the Rajput in his own home. Mewar is his own home. It is the cradle where the foster-nurse has fondled him, pouring forth wild passionate melodies of the Sakhas (sic.) into his infant ears; it is the nursery where the anxious mother has brought him up amusing his boyish curiosity by pathetic stories of the johurs (sic.); it is the fatherland where the singing minstrels have called forth a flood of tears from his eyes by their touching ballads; and above all, it is the seat of those Indian Thermopylæs which have won immortal fame and never-dying reputation for the house of the Ranas.

The Prince says further on that "great traditions grandly maintained form what we see here in our host." This touching reference to the traditions of Mewar could not have failed to move the Maharana who inherits the proud dignity of his illustrious forefathers. We are also aware of the heroic manner in which they have been preserved, and need not dilate upon that subject here. But we must say in passing that the Rajputs are a glorious remnant of fallen greatness, and the house of Mewar is, sociably at any rate, the head of the Rajputs. The origin of this dynasty merges into a hoary mist of antiquity, and there is something sacred, something solemn, something romantic about its greatness and reputation which makes it so pre-eminently respected among all the princely families of India, and which appeals irresistibly to one's imagination and elicits admiration. The Prince of Wales was no exception to this magic influence and gave utterance to it by his fine sentiments contained in his speech at Udaipur, which will immensely endear him to all the Rajputs.

OUDH AKHBAR,
27th November,
1905.

A suggestion to abolish the slaughtering of kine in India in honour of the Prince of Wales' visit.

3. One Habib-ur-Rahman, a Bombay schoolmaster, writing in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 27th November, says that though very many memorials are being and will be established in honour of the Prince of Wales' visit to India, none of them can endure but for a definite time. The writer, on the other hand, has to suggest the establishment of a very superior kind of memorial the benefits of which will be far-reaching both to the Government and the people, and add undying lustre and glory to the fair name of His Royal Highness for ever and ever. Let the paternal and benevolent British Government abolish cow-slaughter throughout India, in honour of the Prince of Wales' visit, and it will perpetuate His Royal Highness' name to eternity; while earning the everlasting gratitude of Hindus, and making the supply of bullocks for agricultural purposes and the production of ghi and milk much larger and cheaper. As regards the Muhammadans, they cannot resent the prohibition of cow-slaughter, inasmuch as it is not necessary for them to eat beef, it being simply declared to be one of the lawful foods by their religion. There are some leading Maulvis living also at the present time, who have collected much matter in support of the abolition of cow-killing in India, and the writer earnestly prays Government to have the slaughtering of kine abolished once for all in honour of the Prince's visit.

ADVOCATE,
30th November,
1905.

Revival of the question of making India pay for a portion of British troops stationed in South Africa.

4. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th November, says:—Mr. Brodrick means to avenge the wrongs he suffered from on account of Lord Curzon upon the new Viceroy. Lord Minto has come to carry out what his predecessor refused to do and for which refusal he resigned. This is no instance of taking revenge, for the Secretary of State and the last Viceroy differed and parted company as officials. Mr. Brodrick's pride was wounded successfully just after the close of the Boer War. As War Minister he submitted a scheme of military reorganization of which appeared as a part the proposal to make "South Africa a centre with a view to holding troops in readiness for India." The opposition it evoked in England and this country among the Government and the people was such that Mr. Brodrick dropped it as a hot potato. This he did, not without putting on record the threat that what India then refused to have at half-cost, she would have to pay for to the full exent afterwards. It seems that the sanction accorded up to date to the schemes put forward by Lord Kitchener was rather so many covert attempts at reducing the threat to practice, though the Sirdar's ideal had all along been the independence of the Indian Army as a complete organization by itself. Now that this aspect is getting its almost finishing touches, up comes back to life the old scheme to station troops in South Africa for India. It means the upsetting of the equitable principle of the Empire paying India whenever the latter's troops are employed abroad, and vice versa. We do hope that Lord Minto will not prove himself, what his critics represent him to be, the mere henchman of the present Secretary of State the days of whose party in power have been numbered.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th November,
1905.

An astrologer's prediction of the outbreak of a war between Afghanistan and the British Government in 1906.

5. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th November, says that a Pandit of Lahore, who has been publishing an annual calendar for the last ten or twelve years, has made an astrological prediction that in 1906 a war will break out between the British Government and "Turkistan;" that the King of Turkistan will die and his successor will find himself in great trouble, and that Turkistan will (finally) be ruined. Commenting on this prediction, the editor thinks that the Pandit is not only an astrologer, but something of a politician to boot, and that by "Turkistan" he probably means Afghanistan. It is not difficult to conceive what the feelings of Russia are likely to be now after her severe struggle with Japan in the Far East. There is every reason to believe that Russia considers England to have induced Japan to declare war against her, and hence she probably harbours a deep grudge and deadly spite against the British. With such feelings rankling in her breast, it would be no wonder if Russia endeavoured to set Afghanistan and England by the heels, and thus gratify her revenge on the latter by involving her in a war with a warlike and brave people. But should such an unfortunate contingency arise, which the editor would fain hope was far distant, the British Government would find the Afghans, who are born brave warriors, much better armed and trained now than they were some years ago, and hence not easy to be overcome.

ADVOCATE,

Suggestion for an inquiry as to the local Tahsildar being at the bottom of the late Gorakhpur defamation case.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th November, says:—The judgment in this unfortunate Defamation Case has been delivered. Mr. Alfred Nundy has been convicted and sentenced to pay the heavy fine of Rs. 2,000. We sympathise with Mr. Nundy in his trouble, because we think he has been the victim of his own over-enthusiasm and played in the hands of interested persons. The local feeling appears to be divided. There is a deal of sympathy for Babu Achal Bihari Lal, Sub-Judge, in so much that, whatever may be his private character, his judicial honesty is said to be above board. It is held that his enemies wanted to injure him through Mr. Nundy. Now that the case is over, will the Government inquire whether it is a fact that Mr. Nundy wrote the letter which has brought him to trouble at the instance of the Tahsildar of the place? If so, does not this official deserve a censure for his creating all this mischief? There would have been no washing of all this dirty linen in public if Mr. Way had acted with greater prudence, and instead of forwarding Mr. Nundy's letter to Mr. Tudball, District Judge, had consigned it to the w. p. b. Mr. Nundy's letter was a private note and it ought to have been treated as confidential. It was a sad mistake on the part of Mr. Way to have made the letter public and thus created a sensation for his district which will do no good to anybody.

PRAYAG
SAMACHAR,
26th November,
1905.

Complaint regarding reckless driving by ekka drivers at Allahabad.

7. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 26th November, referring to two late accidents at Allahabad in which the shaft of an ekka went through the abdomen of a doctor's horse in one case, and the leg of another European's horse in the other case, complains that ekka-drivers generally drive recklessly on the public roads, and hence serious accidents not unfrequently occur in the town. There is no fixed stand for ekkas at Allahabad as is the case in other towns, and the result is that ekka-drivers keep driving about the roads, which causes much inconvenience to the public. The Municipal Board had better fix a stand for ekkas, and warn the drivers against driving fast within the crowded parts of the town.

ARYA MITRA,
24th November,
1905.

Comments on Mr Fuller's doings at Barisal re the Swadeshi movement.

8. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th November, says that, according to a correspondent of the Bengalee, Mr. Fuller sent for five Bengali gentlemen to his steamer off Barisal for an interview, and, then rating them a good deal for their Swadeshism, forced them to withdraw a proclamation they had recently issued to their countrymen for exclusive use of Indian goods, warning them that if the Hindus did not soon change their present attitude, he would be obliged to revive the days of Shaista Khan. Surely not Hindus alone, but a considerable number of Muhammadans too are in favour of the Swadeshi movement—a movement which can hardly be called disloyal to the British Government in any sense of the word. Similarly there is nothing in the cry of Bande Mataram which could possibly be taken to smack of disloyalty; so that it is difficult to understand why Mr. Fuller has prohibited its use on the public streets. The calling in of a Gurkha detachment by His Honor is equally incomprehensible, there not having occurred any disturbance or breach of the peace anywhere. So far as the editor is able to gather from the reports hitherto received, the Bengalis have not to date done anything hostile to Government. They made repeated respectful representations to Government against the partition of Bengal, but finding them all to no purpose, they resolved to promote the exclusive use of India-made goods (in protest), which cannot certainly be called hostility towards Government, and the latter has therefore no reason to be displeased with the Bengalis for what they have done. If there be any people who have any real cause of complaint against the Bengalis in the matter, it is British manufacturers who are likely to be made losers to some extent by the Swadeshi movement. On the whole, the editor thinks that Mr. Fuller would be well advised if he tried to conciliate the people, giving them contentment and peace, and not spread dissatisfaction among them.

ADVOCATE,
26th November,
1905.

The District Magistrate and the people of Barisal re the Swadeshi movement.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th November, says:—A detachment of Gurkhas have been stationed in Barisal to preserve the peace—to disturb the peace of the people, some say. The Magistrate has given them the carte blanche. Mr. Magistrate Jack—for that is the name of the Barisal huzur—is reported to have said to one gentleman whom he sent for:

"I have given your name to the Gurkhas. I advise you to leave the station, at least for a fortnight. You know the circular that no meeting will be allowed to be held in any public place, and although you can hold meetings in private places, they become public as soon as the crowd comes to the street, and, mind you, if anything happens in the town whether you are present or not in those places, the Gurkhas will treat you as they like and they will treat you in a way which will not be liked by any of you. I will not be responsible for any outrages committed by the Gurkhas."

To another the advice given is said to have been thus worded:

"Leave the town for a fortnight. I have given your name to the Gurkhas. They will overtake you and oppress you. Do you understand me? You will be held responsible for disturbances that will take place in the town, no matter whether you take part in it or not."

One may be loth to put any faith upon the words said to have been uttered by the Magistrate of Barisal. But considering Mr. Fuller's reference to Shaista Khan and the Gurkhas, Mr. Jack may aptly take to illustrating the theory that the disciple invariably exceeds the teacher.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th November,
1905.

Certain questions asked in the Bengal Legislative Council regarding public servants taking part in public movements disallowed.

10. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th November, says:—Some searching questions put at the last meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council were evaded by the simple device of ruling them out of order on the ground that they were against the public interest. They related to the position of public servants in regard to public movements. It appears that certain over-zealous Government officers in Bengal have issued a circular calling upon a section of the community to support the Partition of Bengal, to decline to support the Swadeshi movement, and so on and so forth. The questions were intended to elicit information as to whether the Government approved of Government servants taking public part in such matters and taking sides in political questions openly. It was entirely in the public interest that such questions were put and it was also in the public interest that they should have been answered. But the whole business was very awkward, and so simple, if not very straightforward, way was found out of it. The matter thus comes to this, that when a movement is directed against a Government measure it is a political movement, and public servants must take no part in it, but when a movement is in favour of a Government measure it is either a religious or social reform movement and public servants are free to join it. Thus, the anti-Partition movement is a political movement, but the pro-Partition movement is a religious or social reform movement; the Swadeshi movement is a political movement or worse, but the anti-Swadeshi movement is a religious or social reform movement. If these propositions look absurd, the credit or the blame belongs to the Government alone and it must face the situation it has created.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th November,
1905.

Mr. Fuller and the leaders of the Swadeshi movement in East Bengal.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th November, says :—If Mr. Fuller has succeeded in intimidating a few leading men in East Bengal, he has not been able to win or compel the respect of the people of that province. Wherever he is going the municipality refuses to give him an address. The unkindest cut was at Dacca, the prospective capital of Mr. Fuller's new kingdom, where hardly any one came to meet him. At places even the porters have run away, so that His Honour's baggage has to be carried by constables. It has not been suggested whether this work is to be done by special constables, but the Gurkhas might be well employed on this important duty. By the way, it seems these troops are at present doing field duty against "Bande Mataram," and in seizing papers containing those terrible words as prizes of war. Further, if the reports are to be believed, the district officers threaten people with a Gurkha visitation unless they leave the town for some days. Such monstrous abuse of authority cannot go on for ever, or for very long. Mr. Fuller and his myrmidons are engaged in dragging the good name of the British rule through the mire. The question is how long they will be allowed to do so unchecked.

ADVOCATE,

A Delhi Muhammadan preaching Swadeshism at the late bathing fair at Garhmuktesar, district Meerut.

12. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th November, says :—A correspondent from Garhmuktesar writes to say that during the last bathing fair the preachers of Swadeshi Vastu Prachar availed themselves of the opportunity and had a good demonstration. One significant fact to which our attention has been drawn was that Saiyid Haidar Raza of Delhi was permitted from the dais reserved for Ram Chandra to preach Swadeshism and appeal to the Hindus and Muhammadans as sons of the same land to do what they could to promote their own industries.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th November,
1905.

The Swadeshi movement affairs in East Bengal and the coming Congress.

13. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th November, says :—There is every indication that the next session of the Congress at Benares will be of unusual importance. The President-designate is returning from a brief but most successful mission in England and is certain of a very enthusiastic welcome home. Fresh from his recent experiences in England, particularly those of Lancashire and Manchester, he will have a great deal to tell his countrymen. And it so happens that the most important part of his English tour has a direct bearing on the question which is most agitating India at the present moment. Between the 16th October and the present day events have moved with a rapidity that is almost breathless, and it is impossible to foretell what will happen in the month that yet remains to the Congress. One of the most remarkable signs of the growing solidarity of India is the manner in which the whole country has been affected by the Partition of Bengal. To the outsider it looks nothing more than a detail of provincial administration. The Government says that a certain province is overgrown and must be divided into two for the sake of administrative convenience. The people of the province concerned do not like the measure. They protest against it, but the Government does not pay any heed to their protest and carries out the partition. The people proceed to emphasize their protest by boycotting British goods. Seemingly, all this has no concern with the rest of the country, but we can see for ourselves that the reality is very different. The effect of the Partition of Bengal is felt in the remotest corner of the country. The feeling of indignation is shared everywhere, and the sympathy with Bengal is earnest and genuine. To say now that the Partition of Bengal is a provincial measure would be to shut our eyes to events all over the country. The intensity of the feeling may not be so great elsewhere as it is in Bengal, but the depth is everywhere the same. Not only the measure itself but its nature and the manner in which it has been carried out have aroused the indignation of the whole country and every province has joined hands with Bengal.

There can be no doubt, therefore, that the Partition of Bengal will occupy the most prominent place in the deliberations of the Congress. And in its train will come many questions, to which much thought has not yet been given by the country at large, but which will have attained portentous proportions by the time the Congress meets. The only parallel that can be found to what is now going on in East Bengal was the events that happened in Poona and the Deccan during the Viceroyalty of Lord Elgin. But the parallel cannot be carried any further. On that occasion, however mistaken or unwise the policy of the Government, there was at any rate the shadow and semblance of some justification for it. Newspapers were prosecuted and convicted of sedition. One of the most prominent leaders of public opinion, a member of the Governor's Legislative Council, was arrested on a charge of exciting disaffection and sentenced to a long term of imprisonment. The Natu brothers were imprisoned without trial. About the same time a European officer, a civil servant, was murdered. If the Government was in a panic there was some reason for it, though the whole thing originated with the unwise and dangerous plague policy of the Bombay Government. In East Bengal the circumstances are wholly different. There is absolutely nothing to which objection can be raised, or which can be taken as a transgression of the law. The Government is not in a panic but a paroxysm of rage. The cry of "Bande Mataram" which is raised everywhere, must be put down in East Bengal. Swadeshi notifications are issued everywhere, but they must be withdrawn in East Bengal. There are no signs of a breach of the peace, no allegation that the police force is not sufficient, and still special constables must be enlisted! And, strangest of all, there is the curious sight of a ranting, fuming Lieutenant-Governor, who is personally doing the work of the police and the magistracy. In almost everything that the Government has been doing, the law has been violated. Is the Government a Government of law or of lawlessness? The question will doubtless be put to the Congress and a reply will have to be formulated. It is not a provincial question, for it affects the entire administration. It affects the Government as much as it affects the people. And whatever action the Government may take, the people must do all they can to put an end to official lawlessness in East Bengal.

INDIAN PEOPLE
26th November, 1905.

Need for an early declaration by Lord Minto of his Government's policy re the Swadeshi movement affairs in East Bengal.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th November, says:—Under ordinary circumstances, it takes some time for a new administrator to familiarise himself with the routine of work and the details of the administration, but it is an exceptional crisis that Lord Minto will have to face at once. If things are allowed to go on as at present in East Bengal, a grave crisis will be precipitated. Elementary principles of Government are being set at naught by the authorities, and an early declaration of policy by the head of the Government will become necessary if the present crisis is to pass.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
30th November, 1905.

A suggestion to Lord Minto for ordering an immediate enquiry into the repressive measures taken by the Local Government against the Swadeshi movement in East Bengal.

15. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th November, says:—As was to be expected very earnest and persistent appeals are being made to Lord Minto by the Bengal Press to intervene in East Bengal and put an end to the lawlessness that has been established there by the newly created Local Government. We trust there will be no disposition to judge the new Viceroy in a hurry. It is a most delicate as well as a most serious thing to interfere with a Local Government during a local crisis. The Viceroy cannot direct the Lieutenant-Governor of East Bengal off-hand to withdraw his repressive orders, as that Government may at once declare that it will not be responsible for the safety and peace of the province. It must be remembered that the lawlessness in East Bengal has been introduced on the pretext of maintaining the law. Of course the country fully understands that there is not the slightest apprehension of a popular rising or an outbreak of lawlessness if the orders of Mr. Fuller are withdrawn. On the contrary, that would be directly and immediately conducive to the restoration of order and peace. We think, however, the country may reasonably expect that, in view of the serious position of affairs, Lord Minto will order an immediate investigation. It has to be ascertained, for instance, whether troops are to be employed on rubbing off inscriptions of "Bande Mataram" and assaulting inoffensive people, including old women and children. The appointment of special constables at Rungpur already stands as a self-confessed piece of unwisdom, and will involve the principal police officer in several suits for damages. People are leaving towns and villages where the new order of misrule has been introduced. Government officers are publicly going about ordering shopkeepers to sell foreign articles on pain of having the Gurkha troops let loose upon them. The established policy of the Government is being defied and mocked by the servants of the Government. All these denote a state of things which cannot be prolonged with safety, or in the interest of the good name of the Government. What is needed, therefore, is an immediate and a searching enquiry into the present administration of East Bengal, and it is an imperative duty from which, it is to be hoped, the Viceroy will not shrink. The Local Government is busily engaged in sowing the wind and the process must be stopped before the harvest of the whirlwind ripens for the gathering.

ADVOCATE,
30th November,
1905.

An appeal to Lord Minto to put an end to the state of things created by Mr. Fuller in connection with the Swadeshi movement in East Bengal.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th November, says:—The Hon'ble Mr. Fuller "has been off his head," as a sober journalist put it some few days ago. He began his rule as a pacca Lieutenant-Governor with an admirable principle in one particular but made himself thoroughly ridiculous by breaking the rule soon after. Knowing the feeling of the people in the newly severed districts he ruled that no address of welcome would be accepted that had not the unanimous approval of those who would vote the address. He stuck to it for a time only. At Dacca he got no address. On the other hand, while his reception was attended by some hundreds, Babu Bepinchandra Pal's lecture that very day got an audience of much more than as many thousands. In dudgeon he left for Barisal, after changing the programme. No welcome address there too. His sense of virtuous fortitude had by that time well nigh worn off. The proclamation of the Barisal leaders on the Partition and Swadeshi movement added fuel to the fire; and the turning of Barisal into a miniature Boston of 1773 exhausted the fund of patience of the Lieutenant-Governor. He called the prominent leaders on board his steamer and brow-beat them into a promise to withdraw their circular. Then has begun Gurkha rule in that ill-fated town—where life and property are said not to be safe, and British administration on British principles is alleged to have ceased giving place to the Russian system. Outrages on boys, men and public women in broad daylight have become the order of the day; caning of boys and intimidating shopkeepers against selling Indian in place of belaiti goods have been inaugurated in Barisal and neighbouring districts by District Superintendents of Police. Humiliation of respectable people in a northern district by appointing them Special Constables was resorted to by the Magistrate simply because they refused to present an address to Mr. Fuller on his expected visit to the place. Stoppage, if not suppression, of press messages, too, added to the list of official vagaries committed. Assuredly a veritable reign of terror has been established in more than one district of Eastern Bengal and Assam. And this on the very eve of the Royal visit to Bengal!

Now, what does all this prove? What will be its effect? One great objection to the Partition scheme was that partition would inaugurate the seriously backward personal rule of a non-regulation province. The ways of administration adopted by Mr. Fuller and his subordinates have sooner—much sooner—established the truth of the people's argument as against Lord Curzon's dream of a better and more efficient administration. Mr. Fuller, being on the spot and enveloped in the heated fumes of the situation, does not and perhaps cannot realise how he has shaken the confidence of not only the people under his charge, but of those of neighbouring provinces in British India in the noble principle of justice and fair-play that used to be convertible terms with British rule. This is the most disastrous consequence of his foolishly losing temper when quite the reverse state of mind was the demand of the occasion. His circulars show him in a frame of mind quite unsuited in a ruler—an alien ruler—of millions of people smarting under a sense of deep wrong. He has, in a fit of temper, sought to close the great safety-valve, and may be said to have unwittingly sunk subterranean mines that may spring any day to envelop his administration and the province in an unwholsome air. The doings of the Gurkhas, to be believed as no contradictions have yet appeared of them, have been without parallel in the annals of British rule in any country enjoying its blessing for more than, say, fifty years. To him our request is to go back to Shillong and take counsel with himself and his God for some time after removing all causes of irritation as is within his power to do. To the leaders in the affected districts our friendly advice is to stop shouting Bande Mataram at Europeans or Eurasians even by boys, and strictly confine themselves to methods of persuasion in the propagation of the Swadeshi movement. To Lord Minto our appeal is to make his personality felt in Bengal by taking his stand in the avoidable breach created and throwing oil over troubled waters surging and seething at present but liable to calm down easily.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Suggestion for appointing members of the Imperial Cadet Corps as commissioned officers in the British Army.

17. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th November, says:—It is a standing grievance of the country that Indians, however deserving or capable, are not admitted to the commissioned ranks of the army, and the most veteran non-commissioned officer, holding a record of which a General may be proud, may be placed under a young lieutenant fresh from Woolwich. This undeserved slur on the Indian army, it has been declared, has been partially removed by the selection, from the Imperial Cadet Corps, of commissioned officers who will be attached to the Indian section of the army. The cadets are drawn from princely houses and belong to the highest families in the land. So far three young cadets have been selected as officers and are 2nd Lieutenants in the army. In the last Gazette of India there are two notifications relating to two of these officers. One, a Muhammadan, is attached to the Hyderabad Imperial Service Lancers, and the other to the Bhavnagar Imperial Service Lancers. The two officers belong to these two States, respectively. We confess we were not prepared for an arrangement which has the effect of shelving these officers very cleverly. All the cadets of the Corps come from Native States, and if after serving their probation and occasionally figuring in the body-guard of the Viceroy they are sent back to their own States as officers of the Imperial Service troops, the Imperial Cadet Corps becomes a delusion and a mockery. There has been no difficulty in officering Imperial Service troops. If the cadets are to be treated as real commissioned officers they must be taken in the British army and kept there so that they may have a chance of distinguishing themselves and rising in the army.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
26th November,
1905.

A specific instance of forced labour at Allahabad.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th November, says:—On the morning of the 21st instant, a little after 9 o'clock, Lopi, a young carpenter boy of about 16 or 17, living in Colonelganj, was cooking his meal inside his shop. His father, Dunge Mistry, was not at home. The door, old and rather loose in the jambs, was fastened from inside for fear of the tahsîl peons. About the time named the door was violently pushed open and three tahsîl peons entered the place. They at once caught hold of the boy, abused and struck him, picked up the tools that were lying in the shop, and dragged him out. Outside, a Native Infantry man was standing in undress. He took no part in the violence offered to the lad. The boy was dragged to the infantry lines and compelled to work on a table in the workshop there throughout the day. He received one anna for food, but no other wages. He was let go in the evening, but his tools were not returned to him, in the expectation that he would return for them the next day and would be again compelled to work. Some people, who are taking interest in this matter came to know of what had happened the same evening, and advised the boy not to return to the infantry lines, and accordingly he was kept at some other place the next morning. Later, he went and begged for his tools which were returned to him. It is quite evident that this state of things cannot go on, once that it has come to light. It is no justification whatever to say that the wages of these impressed men are paid, because they are not paid, else the carpenters would go willingly and not lock themselves up. The man so impressed can prosecute the peons under several sections of the Indian Penal Code, and a conviction will be had in the ordinary course of the law. The carpenters and others so impressed would also be perfectly justified in resisting the tahsîl peons by force in the exercise of the right of private defence. Or, finally, the District Magistrate might prohibit the employment of tahsîl peons on unlawful work of this kind, and put an end to the Begar system. We are aware that its prohibition in Allahabad will not put an end to the system, for it is much worse in the mufassil and is widespread throughout the provinces, but the existence of an evil does not justify its continuance. Forcible and unpaid employment of labour is against the law, and the servants of the law cannot be employed on such work. Begar has been discontinued in other provinces and it has only to be properly tackled to be put down in the United Provinces.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
30th November,
1905.

Forced labour at Allahabad.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th November, says:—Evidently it is not the practice in these Provinces to take any notice of what appears in newspapers until attention is compelled from a higher quarter, or the newspaper itself is caught tripping. Detailed facts have appeared in these columns regarding the prevalence of the Begar system in the city of Allahabad itself, to say nothing of the mufassil. A specific instance of forced labour has been mentioned. A case for enquiry has certainly been made out and the immediate discontinuance of the employment of Tahsíl peons on the unlawful work of compelling labourers and artisans to work without wages. By and by, this crying grievance will have to be carried elsewhere so that it may be heard and the Local Government may be called upon to make an enquiry and to put an end to this iniquitous system. Meanwhile, the matter has entered on another phase. The Tahsíl peons are still employed to get hold of carpenters and compel them to work wherever they may be wanted and then to turn them out without any wages. But the carpenters now understand that they also have some rights and that the Sircar does not require that they should work without wages. The other day some Tahsíl peons entered a carpenter's shop and wanted a carpenter. The men refused in a body to go. The peons expostulated, abused, threatened but the carpenters would not budge. Then the peons went away and brought back reinforcements in the shape of a large number of other peons and tried to intimidate the carpenters without effect. The next thing we shall hear of will be a breach of the peace and an affray between the peons and the carpenters, who are determined to resist by force all attempts to impress them. The authorities might still see their way to prevent this by directing the Tahsíl peons not to enter the shops of carpenters and intimidate the men, or attempt to impress them.

ADVOCATE,

Need for the introduction of platform tickets at the stations on the East Indian Railway line.

20. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th November, says:—The inconvenience to which persons who go to the Allahabad Railway Station are put for want of platform tickets is one which is not confined to that station alone: it is equally shared by all persons having anything to do with the stations on the East Indian Railway line. Only the other day we drew attention to what happened at the Cawnpore East Indian Railway Station. Many gentlemen to avoid insults go first to the Oudh and Rohilkhand Station, and thence travel to East Indian Railway in order to receive their friends. This means additional expense that has to be borne. A memorial was sent from Cawnpore some time ago, but no heed has been paid to it. We agree with the Indian People in thinking that an official protest should be entered into, and the present absurd practice removed.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Clerks in the Postmaster-General's office in the United Provinces.

21. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th November, says:—With the rapid increase of work in the Post Office there has not been a corresponding increase in the number of clerks in the Postmaster-General's office in these Provinces, and there is a general complaint of overwork. Men have to attend on Sundays and holidays and cannot even then cope with the work. When they are ill and apply for leave on medical certificate it is resented. We are sure the Postmaster-General himself is not aware of all the grievances of his clerks, who would incur the displeasure of their immediate superior officers, if they were to make a representation to the Postmaster-General. But an inquiry seems to be called for both as regards the allegation of overwork and the difficulty in obtaining leave.

AN NAZIR, August 1905.

Complaint regarding a book published by a Hindu against the Quran.

22. An Nazír (Meerut), for August, received on the 25th November, complains that one Pandit Bhoj Dat of Bahraich has published a very objectionable book, entitled the Dáwa-i-Islám (lit. claims or pretensions of Islám). In this book the writer calls the Qurán an agglomeration of false stories picked up here and there, and strung together; a portmanteau, as it were, of a conjurer; a mere note-book of its author, and no divine revelation; a record of myths invented by an illiterate man; a great fraud, and so on. Verily, such vilification of the divine book of the Muhammadans and their prophet is certainly calculated to severely wound their religious feelings. But the Muhammadans are neither the rulers of the country at the present time nor are they a rich people, so that they are utterly helpless to do anything in the matter, though they must suffer severe pangs in their hearts at the religious offence thus given them. It is really too much for the Muhammadans to hear their true and holy prophet called a compiler of stories from different quarters, and other such names; but they are powerless and can do nothing else but appeal to God to punish the vilifier of their religion.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR, 26th November, 1905.

Predictions of 1906 made by an Indian astrologer.

23. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 26th November, publishes the predictions made by Pandit Ram Narayan, a well-known astrologer of Cawnpore, regarding the coming year 1906. The papers relating to the partition of Bengal will, the astrologer says, be laid before Parliament, and the partition cancelled before the end of June. A terrible war will break out about the same time in Europe and certain parts of Asia. This war will last three years at the end of which victory will be on the side of the British. Lord Minto, the new Viceroy of India, will, owing to the special state of things in the country, have his mind always distracted with anxiety. King-Emperor Edward VII will suffer from some slight ailment. The Prince of Wales may meet with some accident during his visit to India, but he will experience no harm therefrom. The Swadeshi movement will continue to progress gradually, and will have achieved full success by the end of 12 years. Many parts of India will be affected with famine. There will be a heavy fall of rain at the close of the year. Much damage will be caused by fire, rain and earthquake. A peculiar kind of disease will break out in Europe and several parts of Asia. Two Indian chiefs will be divested of their ruling powers by the British Government. After much discussion in Parliament, a General Election of members will take place. Disquiet will spread in Afghanistan, Tibet and some other countries. Several distinguished men will die in Europe and Asia. The Indian National Congress will achieve a marked success.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st December, 1905.

International naval demonstration against Turkey, and the Indian Musalmans.

1. THE Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st December, referring to the present attitude of the European Powers towards Turkey re Macedonian affairs, says that it is really very remarkable that while none of the said Powers is raising a finger to check the most serious riots, disturbances, bloodshed and anarchy prevailing in Russia at the present time, all of them are on the qui vive to coerce the Sultan into complying with their demands in Macedonia by holding out threats of a naval demonstration. Some time ago the Sultan was called upon by the European Powers to put the finances of Macedonia into the charge of European officers to be delegated by them; and His Majesty has now plainly declined to do so. This has greatly enraged the European Powers, and they threaten to blockade the Dardanelles with their combined warships. Surely such high-handed proceedings were never adopted before against any other country by the combined Powers of Europe, and one might well wonder why justice-loving Europe should be disposed to be so hard upon Turkey. The reason is, however, not far to see: the Christian inhabitants of Macedonia no longer like to remain under Turkish rule, and, knowing well, as they do, that their complaints will be readily heard by most of the European Powers, appeal to these (for help) again and again. Russia has already received a good lesson from Japan; and would that the other European Powers let Russia and Austria measure swords unaided with Turkey, in connection with Macedonian affairs! The Indian Musalmans, at any rate, strongly desire that the British Lion should not take any part in the international demonstration against Turkey, for they would never like to see England, whose subjects they are, go to loggerheads with Turkey. May God allow their heartfelt wish to be fulfilled!

HINDOSTHAN,
6th December, 1905.

Joint naval demonstration of the European Powers against Turkey re Macedonian affairs, and its probable effect on the minds of Musalmans in the British Empire.

2. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 6th December, says:—The Indian Daily News in an article on the attitude of the Sultan of Turkey with regard to the joint demonstration of the Powers in the matter of Macedonia, very pertinently remarks, "that it may be a noble rôle to play the international policeman, that policy should at least be consistent." We aver there is much more need at the present moment for a combined demonstration of the fleets at Cronstadt and Sevastopol than at Constantinople, or the parading narrow seas before the Golden Horn. All recognise that outrages against humanity such as are now being carried out in Macedonia and Russia are revolting and should be suppressed; but why, we may ask, should Great Britain feel it her duty to act as leading policeman to suppress them. King Edward rules over a very much larger number of Musalmans than the Sultan of Turkey, every unit of which is as much attached to Abdul Hamid as head of the Musalman community as every unit of Britain's subjects is to King Edward their sovereign. There is a certain amount of danger attached to the Empire, if Great Britain leads in this enterprise, and we sincerely hope the tax-payers at home will rise as one man and oppose any such adventure. That Britain, France and Italy are capable of doing all they assert, is probably quite true, but what will the after effects be to Great Britain—this is a point worth serious consideration, and we earnestly trust ere it is too late it will not be lost sight of.

HINDOSTHAN,
6th December, 1905.

The Madras Muhammadans' disapproval of England's participation in the naval demonstration against Turkey.

3. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 6th December, says:—The Muhammadans of Madras propose to hold a meeting shortly with a view to give expression to their disapproval of the participation of England in the naval demonstration against Turkey. A resolution will be passed to this effect and sent to the Government at home. Of course, it is certain that nothing will come out of this protest, but the procedure serves to show that wherever the follower of the Prophet may be, he looks up to the premier Muhammadan ruler as the boná fide leader of his religion, and under whatever flag he may be politically, his religious enthusiasm does not allow him to forget the significance which attaches to the "Green Flag" in the eyes of every true Moslem. In fact, this forms part of his religious instruction. We admire this phase of Islam very much, because it is a very potent unifying factor in the national life of all Musalmans.

CENTRAL HINDU COLLEGE MAGAZINE, December, 1905.

Proposal to construct a Technical Institute in the Central Hindu College at Benares in commemoration of the Royal visit in February next.

4. The Central Hindu College Magazine (Benares), for December, referring to the visit which the Prince and the Princess of Wales are going to pay to the Central Hindu College at Benares in February next, says:—In memory of this auspicious event, a Fund will be raised to erect the long-planned Technical Institute, for no better way can be found to commemorate the visit of the Prince and Princess than the building of an Institute to train some of their future subjects in knowledge which will enrich both the Empire and themselves Donors of Rs. 5,000 and upwards will have their names inscribed in the list placed with the address in the casket.

CITIZEN, 4th December, 1905.

The Citizen's advice to Lord Minto re his administrative policy in India

5. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 4th December, says :—We offer a loyal and cordial welcome to our new Viceroy, Lord Minto. When a Viceroy is new to his office, the people of India think well of him, believe him to be a paragon of all virtues, and, indeed, the repository of all the high qualities that go to constitute an ideal ruler, and a true representative of the British throne and British constitution. We are now full of hope and expectation as to the results of the new régime. Perhaps we Indians are more optimistic by nature than any other race, or it is our characteristic not to think ill of a man who is untried. Be that as it may, we look upon Lord Minto with the kindliest and most respectful feelings. We pray to God that our (such) feelings may be fully justified by the course of the policy His Excellency will adopt, and the acts that will mark his administration.

The first and great truth which it behoves the new Viceroy to realize is that he is not bound to follow the policy of any of his predecessors, to tread the path trod by any one of them. Every Viceroy in recent times has been as new to his work as Lord Minto is. It has of course not been the lot of the majority of India's Viceroys to start with any experience of India, worth the name. The same is the case with Lord Minto. We were concerned to read in one of His Lordship's recent speeches remarks to the effect that he could not do more for India than Lord Curzon had done, and that he would have to follow him. This indicates a spirit and frame of mind in His Excellency which he should lose no time in shaking off. He ought to enter into every question brought before him for consideration or solution with an open mind. The responsibility henceforth for governing India will be his ; and why should he see things through Curzonian spectacles and thus shirk his own responsibility on to the shoulders of his predecessor ? Unless he rules the country according to the ideas and principles which may appear to his conscience and reason to be the best, he will be playing false to himself. Viceroys like Lord Ripon had the courage of their own opinions and convictions, and did not care a pin's head to overturn the policies and acts of their predecessors. Mintonian rule may be worse than Curzonian rule ; but on principle if it be thoroughly independent, it may be welcomed instead of a slavish imitation of Curzonian principles by His Excellency. For, if independence in a Viceroy be maintained, we may some day have a better, kindlier and more sensible administration than the Curzonian one ; but if imitation be the rule, we shall have to prepare ourselves for a ceaseless continuance of the retrogressive and degrading Russianizing policy of Lord Curzon.

The next thing against which the new Viceroy must put himself on guard is the Anglo-Indian prejudices against the children of the soil, and the bureaucratic methods and principles of administration. He must have heard and read of that stubborn fact that Anglo-Indian civilians who practically carry out the Government, and who are credited with an experience of the land and the people are inebriated with the spirit of the conqueror, and that it is this spirit which colours all their views and opinions. Lord Minto has attained an age when the average man attains the capacity to judge a thing impartially, and after a due consideration of all that may be said for and against it. He must be able to distinguish between right, unbiassed opinions and prejudices. By his age and his experience he is entitled to do so. To weigh properly the pros and cons of a subject or a proposition is a power which, though rare, is, we think, the sine qua non in the Indian Viceroy. Those who have lacked this power have failed. Let not His Lordship be found wanting in this capacity. We warn him earnestly against the influences around him that will always prompt him to swerve from the path of the golden mean.

He should chalk out for himself this path, unaided; for his Anglo-Indian ministers will ceaselessly draw him to their own path, which is certainly not the path of the golden mean. It has been thought impossible for an Indian Viceroy to satisfy all parties, but this notion is, in our opinion, a mistaken one. No doubt it requires great thought, great tact, great patience, and a great sense of duty—a sense of duty that will include the thorough consciousness and appreciation of what he owes to himself, the people and the princes, the non-officials and officials, and to his sovereign. We trust Lord Minto may be guided by this sense of duty, and possessed of a temperament that frets not when the enforcement of strict impartiality offends his councillors and advisers.

Lord Minto must be familiar with the fact that the Royal Proclamation of 1858 is regarded by the people of India as their Great Charter. In fact, it is on the strength of the liberal promises contained in that document that, after the great mutiny of 1857, the sovereign of England assumed the direct administration of India, and it is also on their strength that the Pax Britannica has been maintained in this vast continent. Lord Curzon deceitfully called this royal charter to be the golden rule of his policy and actions; for while in theory he upheld the supremacy of the Proclamation, in practice the late Viceroy violated it most wantonly. Let Lord Minto study without any bias the history of Lord Curzon's administration and he will come to the conclusion that the Royal Proclamation has never been more clearly violated than it was by some of the most prominent acts of His Excellency's predecessor. It is one thing to follow the Proclamation in its integrity, and it is another thing to pervert its meaning and follow it in its perverted form. Lord Curzon made himself guilty of the latter offence, and what we beseech the new Viceroy to apply his serious attention to, is to do the former act. Plain and straightforward explanation of the Victorian Proclamation as offered to the princes and people of India, Lord Minto will find in some of the speeches of almost all the Viceroys who preceded Lord Curzon, and more prominently in those of Lord Ripon. We pray Lord Minto to read the speeches of Lord Ripon, the most popular Indian Viceroy who ever ruled India under British domination, for in them is given the very mind and heart of Queen Victoria, the first British sovereign of India. It behoves Lord Minto to realize the full significance of the great fact that the people of India have, for close upon fifty years, sincerely, devoutly and passionately cherished the Proclamation as their Magna Charta. The tendency to under-rate it, nay to nullify it, betrayed in recent years, cannot be persisted in without making the breach between the rulers and the ruled in India, wider and deeper, and helping to bring in a state of things that will conduce to the welfare neither of England nor of India.

A mistaken notion which is uppermost in the hearts of all Englishmen who have anything to do with the Government of India is that India was conquered by England and, therefore, Indians should be treated as a conquered people. We invite the attention of the new Viceroy to the chapter on "How we conquered India," in that well-known work of Professor Seeley, "The Expansion of England." It is a shame, indeed, on the part of England, to claim to have conquered India, when the English proportion of the so-called conquering English army was only one in five, and the remainder was all Indian. Professor Seeley laughed to scorn the idea and has demonstrated its untenableness. That being so, that is, India not having been a country conquered by England, but India having in a manner voluntarily placed herself under English protection, the English rulers must never treat Indians as a conquered people, but consider them as pupils of England, placed under her care to be trained in the principles of self-government.

6. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 4th December, says:—

At the St. Andrew's Dinner, which came off on the 30th November, His Excellency Lord Minto made a 'pleasant speech' in reply to the toast of his health. In view of the fact that the affair is entirely a social function, His Excellency carefully avoided making any reference to politics. In fact, he said that the patron Saint whose festival they had met to celebrate, would hardly advise him to enter upon any discussion of the vexed questions of politics. Though the audience who, perhaps, expected rather eagerly an expression of the Viceroy's views on the political questions of India, must have been greatly disappointed, we frankly admire His Excellency's reticence on this point. Blustering about politics, in season and out of season, and parading his plans and intentions of what he will and what he will not do, is not at all compatible with the high and responsible position of a Viceroy, and we heartily agree with Lord Minto when in his speech he decides in favour of "a taste for haggis monopolizing the attention of the guests and excluding the consumption of those political dishes supposed at other times to be so palatable to the canny Scot."

Politics at the late St. Andrew's Dinner at Calcutta, and Lord Minto.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 7th December, says :—No one can have the slightest objection to different nations celebrating their national festivals wherever they may be. The Scotch are a remarkable people, successful in almost every undertaking, and it is perfectly right that they should celebrate the national festival of their patron saint wherever a few Scotchmen may be gathered. The difference of opinion arises when we come to the manner of the celebration. All over the world, as Lord Minto pointed out the other day in Calcutta, St. Andrews's Dinner is a non-political function, and Scotchmen come together in obedience merely to an ancient sentiment that holds them in a bond of unity and brotherliness. If the function is non-political elsewhere there is all the greater reason why it should be so in India, where political functions are circumscribed by many restrictions and limitations. For instance, Government servants are prohibited from taking part in political movements, or to be present at political meetings where their presence is liable to misinterpretation. Officials, except the highest few, are forbidden to receive addresses or to reply to them. In England a Government servant is seldom taken to task if he criticises the Government. Matthew Arnold was an Inspector of schools when he severely criticised the Liberal party, which was then in office, but no explanation was called for from him, while Mr. S. S. Thorburn who ventured to criticise the Government in this country was compelled not only to apologise, but practically to resign his appointment as Financial Commissioner in the Punjab. The standing orders of the Government are quite clear on the subject. Most officials hesitate to be present as visitors at the sessions of the Indian National Congress lest it may be put down against them that they are in sympathy with that movement. Political movements may be of different kinds, but no distinction can be made between them so far as the position of the Government and Government servants is concerned. And if a distinction is sought to be made, the invidiousness becomes all the more marked when officials openly avow their sympathy with a particular class of political opinions.

It is difficult to say how the conversion of St. Andrew's Dinner into a political function has been brought about in India.

* * * * * * * *

The inappropriateness of converting the banquet hall into a political platform becomes glaringly apparent when the Viceroy happens to be a new arrival and present at the dinner. Usually, political speeches are made in proposing the toasts in the hope of eliciting political replies. But Lord Minto had not been even three weeks in India when the dinner came off. No attempt seems to have been made to ascertain whether His Excellency would express any political views so soon after his arrival in the country. In accordance with the established custom the Chairman, in proposing the Viceroy's health, travelled largely and at pleasure over the wide range of politics, not overlooking the Partition and Swadeshi questions.

* * * * * * * *

Lord Minto has, however, in a manner, expressed his disapproval of political speeches at such gatherings, and if he will only decline to attend such dinners in future if such speeches are made, the political and objectionable character of the banquet will be quickly changed.

The ratepayers' protest against the Lahore Municipality presenting a casket with its address to Lord Curzon on the eve of his departure.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 7th December, says :—We should like to learn whether any definite action has been taken by the citizens of Lahore in connection with the costly casket presented to Lord Curzon out of the ratepayers' money. The law on the point is so clear that it does not admit of any doubt as to the ultimate result. When the ratepayers do not object, such a thing may pass, but the moment any ratepayer raises an objection no municipality has the power to buy a casket out of the funds it administers. There is absolutely no provision in the law for expenditure of this kind, and in the single test case that was instituted at Dacca a decree was at once given against the Municipal Commissioners in their individual capacity. The protest at Lahore was as emphatic and representative as could be desired. To that the Municipality paid no heed, though they forfeited the right to speak on behalf of the ratepayers. Well, the citizens owe a duty to themselves and also to the ratepayers on whose behalf they acted. They owe it to themselves to bring it home to the Municipal Commissioners that they are not independent of the ratepayers whatever the Government and Government servants may do. Any ratepayer, as we said before, has a full right to sue the Municipal Commissioners as individuals for the money spent on the casket, and so long as he is properly backed he is bound to get a decree, whether in the first court or in appeal. It is a misuse of public funds for which the law does not provide and the Commissioners, including the official president, will be compelled to make good out of their own pockets the amount they have spent upon a casket presented to a Viceroy to whom the ratepayers would not vote an address.

An Honorary Magistrate at Muzaffargarh (in the Punjab) threatened to be divested of his magistracy for sending no one to prison last year.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd December, says :—The following significant and suggestive paragraph appears in the Pioneer:—"Magistrates in this country sometimes have a curious conception of their responsibilities. The District Magistrate of Muzaffargarh remarks that last year one member of the local bench 'seems to have sworn that he would send no one to prison during the year,' and he kept his oath. He will probably find it unnecessary to make such a vow in future." Divested of figures, the sentence means that the Honorary Magistrate in question did not send any one to jail during the year under report and will probably be deprived of his magisterial powers in consequence. We have no means of analysing the District Magistrate's opinion by examining the records of the cases tried by the Honorary Magistrate. It is not even known whether he sat singly for the disposal of cases, or along with another magistrate. It is not stated whether the cases that came up before him were such as to necessitate a sentence of imprisonment, or whether the ends of justice could be properly met by the infliction of a fine. All these facts ought to be ascertained before the work of the Honorary Magistrate is condemned, but that is hardly likely, while the suggestion has been already made that he should be summarily deprived of his powers. People who are so anxious for the honour and glory of being appointed Honorary Magistrates may profit by this typical case, and remember that at any moment they may be given very short shrift.

Protest against the continuance of the income-tax.

10. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 8th December, says :—The income-tax, the most iniquitous of all taxes ever imposed in any country, was abolished by Lord Mayo, and reimposed by Lord Dufferin as the result of the annexation of Upper Burma in 1885-86. At the banquet in 1886 presided over by the late Lord Dufferin, the writer was present and on that occasion Lord Dufferin asserted that the income-tax would only be imposed until the expenses of the war were recouped. Burma has over and over again repaid the expenses of the war, a war which was undertaken in opposition to every protest on the part of India, and from which she has never been benefited one iota. Still the tax is continued and collected in many instances most arbitrarily.

Suggestion for opening to the public the meetings of the Text-Book Committee in the United Provinces.

11. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 4th December, says:—May we venture to enquire why representatives of the Press and other members of the public who take interest in educational matters should not have free access to meetings of the local Text-Book Committee, and why this Committee should continue to work in the dark? The Director of Public Instruction, who is now all in all so far as the Text-Book Committee is concerned, has various other functions to discharge; and surely he will be able to perform his part of duty all the better, if the Committee over which he presides works in concert with the spirit of public criticism that may be brought to bear on it. We understand the Punjab Government has appointed a journalist as a member of the Text-Book Committee in its own province; and we think that Government has in this direction set an example which heads of other administrations may with advantage follow.

Fee charged by the Allahabad University for a duplicate copy of an examination certificate.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 7th December, publishes the following letter from a correspondent:—Lately I came across a case in which for a duplicate copy of the Intermediate Examination certificate of the Allahabad University was demanded a fee of Rs. 40. I know different and much lower rates are charged in the Punjab University where, too, the fees rise higher with the different examinations of a Faculty. I fail to see what principle governs the procedure in such cases at the different Universities and why the procedure is not uniform, when uniformity is being enforced in all other matters.

Evidently this fee of Rs. 40 is exorbitant. The task of preparing a duplicate copy and the incidental worry to the Registrar and his office, are not much and surely not worth Rs. 40.

If a high fee is charged to defeat the possibility of illicit deal in the University certificates, that purpose can be better served by granting the certificates through and on the responsibility of recognised and respectable Government officers of the Education department as in the Punjab.

Again, it is not understood why a higher fee should be charged in case a duplicate copy is given of a higher Examination Certificate, than in the case of a lower one. As the Examinations rise higher, the number of examinees becomes lower and consequently the ease in preparing the duplicate copies greater and the possibility of fraud less. There is thus no reason why this unjust impost should be raised higher in case of higher examinations.

Need for adopting famine measures in the western districts of the United Provinces.

13. One Jugul Kishor, a zamindar in the Bulandshahr district, writing in the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 6th December, expresses surprise that the authorities should not have yet taken notice of the great distress which both men and cattle have begun to suffer in Meerut, Bulandshahr, Aligarh, Muttra and other districts in the western part of these Provinces on account of the outbreak of famine. All kinds of food-grains have become very dear, while bhusa and karbi have grown almost scarce. The result is that the peasantry are being ruined, and the cattle are dying. Government would, therefore, do well to (1) arrange forage being despatched at once to the affected districts mentioned above, from other districts where they may be available; (2) suspend or remit land revenue as may be found necessary after due enquiry; (3) afford facility to land-owners in the payment of Government land dues; (4) start relief works at some places; (5) direct its officers to make as little touring in the mufassil this year as possible so that the peasantry may not have to endure the trouble of supplying provisions to the camps of touring officers, in addition to the distress of famine with which Providence is pleased to visit them; and (6) require its officers to see that sufficient time is allowed to cultivators re the decrees of ejectment obtained against them on the ground of arrear of rent).

Swadeshism; alleged to be a seditious movement.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd December, says :—Give a dog a bad name and hang him. Our friends on the other side have waited till the dog was hanged and have then given him a bad name. One or two Anglo-Indian papers of Calcutta have discovered that one European or Eurasian was threatened or assaulted in a remote village in East Bengal, and they have further found out that "Bande Mataram" is shouted to annoy Europeans. These weighty facts make it quite evident to them that whatever the Swadeshi movement might have been at the outset it is nothing but sedition now. These foolish newspapers hardly ever weigh what they write or circulate. Granting that the Swadeshi movement is seditious, what is its extent and how far has it spread? Practically, then, the whole of India is seething with discontent, for the Swadeshi movement is everywhere and is rapidly spreading to such parts of the country as are not yet affected by it. There is really nothing to distinguish the Swadeshi movement in Barisal from anywhere else in Bengal, or even the Punjab. Is the Government prepared to adopt the same steps everywhere as those that have been taken in Barisal? On the contrary, if the Government keeps its head, the chances are that official lawlessness will be put down in East Bengal very soon. Not a tittle of evidence has been produced for the employment of military police, or Gurkhas, anywhere in East Bengal. They have been assaulting inoffensive people and trespassing into houses for pulling down or rubbing out "Bande Mataram" mottoes. The words are quite innocent, it is said, but they can be used for a dangerous object, and it now transpires that the captain of the Gurkhas has been doing a great deal of mischief without orders. All the sedition is on the part of the authorities and none on that of the people. Sedition is a thing that can be very easily suppressed by the Government. Swadeshi is a movement that cannot be suppressed, and all that is being done by Mr. Fuller's Government will give it added strength and energy.

ADVOCATE,

Alleged official scandals re the Swadeshi movement in East Bengal.

15. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 3rd December, says:—It is natural for people to fasten all the vagaries of the officers of the new province on Mr. Fuller whose temper got the better of him at a time when he was expected to keep it under perfect control. The placing of a young civilian as Magistrate of Barisal and at the head of the Gurkha Military police has been the signal for a series of escapades which put to shame any educated men, much more a responsible ruler. Mr. Emerson of Rungpur has been a veritable terror and even while parting he bit. In his latest ultimatum he writes:—

"Misbehaved students are allowed to join the Zilla school till the 30th November, otherwise their and their guardians' careers shall be ruined. The fine is reduced to eight annas."

The words italicised by us gives sure symptoms of something having gone awfully wrong with the author of the dictum. Mr. Fuller has, we learn, been called to Calcutta to see Lord Minto. His expected visit to Rungpur has not been dropped as was rumoured.

A suggestion for the United Provinces to express their sympathy with East Bengal re the Swadeshi movement.

16. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd December, says :—May we venture to suggest that the duty of expressing sympathy with Bengal is incumbent upon these Provinces as being the closest to the afflicted Province? Inside a month the Congress will meet in these Provinces and the grievances of Bengal will be knocking loudly at our doors. Do we not owe it to ourselves, as much as to our countrymen of Bengal, to condemn the measures adopted in East Bengal and to sympathise with our countrymen in their distress?

Swadeshi meetings held at private houses for the benefit of Bengali ladies at Allahabad.

17. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd December, says :—Very quiet and commendable work is being done among the Bengali community of Allahabad. Weekly meetings are held in different neighbourhoods in the house of some gentleman who kindly lends it for the purpose, and all Bengali ladies in the locality and also from a distance are invited, parda arrangements being made for them. The gentlemen sit down on carpets laid in the yard and the ladies are accommodated behind chicks. Short speeches in the most simple and homely Bengali language are delivered explaining the objects and aims of the Swadeshi movement and its claims upon householders and housewives. There is absolutely no occasion for using impassioned or excited language, and the whole question is explained in a most matter-of fact way on economical grounds. It is a most effective and unostentatious method of spreading the Swadeshi movement, and may be well introduced with advantage all over the country and in every section of the community.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

An appeal to Lord Minto to interfere with the measures adopted by the Local Government re the Swadeshi movement in East Bengal.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd December, says :—It is no longer either expedient or statesmanlike to let the present state of things in East Bengal continue without an attempt at inquiry or improvement. It is quite true that Lord Minto is new to the country and some time must elapse before he can familiarise himself with the details of administration. But, as we have already said, there are times when a problem presses for solution and delay is a grave danger. Lord Minto is nowise responsible for all that has happened and is happening in East Bengal, but the country is as it has pleased Lord Curzon to leave it, and the new Viceroy has no option but to face and grapple with the difficulties that have been created by his distinguished predecessor. Even if the state of things in East Bengal were purely local and provincial, it could not be overlooked by the Viceroy; but behind the trouble in that remote province is a sentiment which is not confined to any particular part of India, but which has spread to every part of the country. Irresponsible critics and newspapers may say that the Swadeshi movement is seditious: they are the same wise people who were bawling out that the boycott movement was dead even while it was becoming powerful and really effective. We do not think the Government is likely to endorse the opinion of these wiseacres. It is not a movement that falls within the province of Government nor can the Government deal with it. The discretion of the people as to what they will use and what they will not is absolute and cannot be interfered with. Even if they choose to boycott certain goods they are at perfect liberty to do so. This has been recognised from the outset, and if it had not been for the mistaken zeal of certain provincial rulers who have no conception what statesmanship is, the present crisis would never have arisen, and there would have been no occasion for the Government to be faced with a serious problem of administration.

The agitation that is convulsing Bengal is not a provincial question at all. There is no need whatever to conceal from the Government the fact that the whole country is interested in the present crisis in East Bengal and sympathises deeply with the people of that province. If there were a really seditious movement going on in that part of the country, would the whole country have sympathised with it? If the movement in Bengal is seditious, then all India is seditious because all India has been admiring Bengal sincerely and openly, and all India is now in earnest sympathy with that province. Any province in India, we say without hesitation, would be proud to do to-morrow what Bengal is doing to-day. Is then, all India seditious? It was only the other day that the Prince of Wales, on landing in Bombay and receiving a right royal welcome, said he felt he was among his own people. On every public occasion we are told a great deal about the loyalty of the people of India. Now, Bombay, which welcomed the Royal visitors so warmly, is absolutely at one with Bengal. It was in Bombay that a meeting of 7,000 students was held and the interference with students in Bengal was most strongly deprecated. Bombay is in full sympathy with Bengal. So is the Punjab and every other province in India. Is it to be implied that the whole of India is in sympathy with a movement of sedition. That is what the whole thing comes to, and evidently it is a reduction to absurdity. The Government is not prepared to say that all India is seditious, and there is absolutely no ground for any such supposition. The next question is, what has happened in East Bengal to justify the measures that have been taken, and whether the people or the authorities are really to blame?

The feeling of insecurity which has spread over East Bengal is being shared by all India. Everywhere the question is being asked what has happened that justifies the Government of that Province to adopt such harsh repressive measures? Absolutely nothing. How is it an offence to put up "Bande Mataram" mottoes in houses and shops, or to shout the words in streets and houses? It is alleged that Europeans were threatened and assaulted. If so, have there been any prosecutions or convictions ? Were the local police insufficient that military Gurkha police were imported from Assam ? Had the two provinces been under the same Lieutenant-Governor, such a step would never have been taken. The feeling throughout India is that measures of this kind may be taken anywhere any day on the flimsiest pretext and without any justification. In Bengal the indignation is so great, that there is already a talk of asking the people to abstain from the festivities in honour of the Royal visit by way of protest against the rule of lawlessness in East Bengal. Such a course would be deeply regretted, but the people there have been exasperated beyond measure and may not be disposed to listen to wise counsels. There is absolutely nothing like sedition anywhere in the country, but what there is no amount of repression can suppress, because it has not had its origin in methods of violence. People have been terrorised and ill used, but we have nowhere heard that they have given up the Swadeshi movement. Neither Mr. Fuller nor his methods will be there for ever and the Swadeshi movement will survive them. But he is responsible for serious injury to the cause of British rule in India. He has wantonly brought about a crisis which must be averted if the faith of the people of India in the justice of British rule is not to be shaken. The time has gone by when each province of India was independent of the rest. What now touches Bengal touches Bombay and Madras ; what affects the Punjab enlists ready sympathy in Bengal. The appeal goes to Lord Minto from every province in India that it is high time a curb were put upon the official lawlessness in East Bengal.

CITIZEN,

Alleged need for Lord Minto's interference in the Local Governments' measures re the Swadeshi movement in Bengal.

19. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 4th December, says :—The impression that forces itself on the minds of readers of newspapers as to the present state of administration in Bengal is that a rule of anarchy has been started there in right earnest, and that the present rulers being weighed in the balance have been found wanting. It was, we submit, high time for Lord Minto, the new Viceroy, to step in and relieve the two Governors of Bengal, old and new, of at least a part of their duties. The Hon'ble Mr. Fuller, blinded, we fear, by the possession of unlimited authority which he knows not how to wield, has in thick succession been making blunders which even a Statutory Civilian would blush to acknowledge. The bitterness of feeling in Bengal has indeed reached its climax, owing to the arbitrary conduct of Sir Andrew and Mr. Fuller, who have degraded themselves to a ridiculous position, befitting that of their late chief, whose creatures they are, and the spirit of whose mandate they are now carrying—probably in the vain hope of being admired by him from beyond the seas, and patronised in the fulness of time. Happily, we of the United Provinces are at a respectable distance and beyond the reach of infection ; but we can fully realise the mischief these two rulers of the people have been making. The Government of India has a greater responsibility than the Local Governments, and it behoves that Government to vindicate its authority, its legitimate rights and its supreme sense of duty, when matters have come to such a crisis. It is a fallacy to argue that Lord Minto's interference with the lawlessness that has been created by the wanton acts of aggression on the part of maddened executive Governments, will jeopardise the safety and peace of the land. On the other hand, His Lordship's immediate withdrawal of the various repressive orders will not only stop the troubles, but the peaceful and law-abiding people of Bengal will owe him a debt immense of endless gratitude, such as they owe to no other Governor-General, probably Lord Ripon alone excepted.

Alleged high-handed practices of the Gurkha soldiers re the Swadeshi movement at Barisal.

20. Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 4th December, observes that while the Indians of the present day have but heard the terrible name of Nawwábi (high-handed practices of a Nawab or Governor under the late Muhammadan rule in India), anybody, who may desire to know what it can be in actual practice, may go to Barisal in East Bengal, where it is in full swing in these days, and satisfy his curiosity. Gurkhas (who are let loose at Barisal), freely enter the inner parts of the houses of the people and do there what they please. Fully-armed they roam about the streets and lanes, and no sooner they hear the shout of Bande Mataram proceeding from a house, than they enter it at once, and take to beating the inmates. The people are preparing to leave the town. This Nawwabism is verily something more terrible than even the plague. But one is taken aback to find that such horrible things can be permitted under the Pax Britannica. Lord Minto would do well to take speedy steps to put a stop to this most unseemly state of things in Barisal.

The Bhárat Jiwan's advice to the Bengalis to give up their proposal to establish a National University, but continue to quietly promote the use of Indian goods.

21. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 4th December, referring to the partition of Bengal by Lord Curzon in the face of the strong opposition of the Bengalis, the setting-up of the Swadeshi movement by the latter to emphasize their protest, the issue of a circular by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal for preventing students from active participation in the movement, the steps taken by Mr. Fuller to put down the cry of Bande Mataram, &c., in East Bengal, and the present state of things at Barisal, says that the Bengalis appear to have become so possessed with the spirit of Swadeshism that they no longer seem to care whether the partition scheme is cancelled or not. What they now want is to establish a National University of their own, so that they may be able to educate their children in their own way. But granting that they are able to provide money for the purpose, can they establish such a University without first obtaining permission from the Government to do so? And if Government does not recognise such a University, of what use will be the education received by students under its auspices? Again, if Bengali boys cease to seek admission in Government schools and colleges, it is not likely that these institutions will be abolished in consequence, but they will be kept up for the benefit of European and Eurasian boys. Under such circumstances, Indians would lose the benefit of the Government educational institutions while public money would continue to be spent on their maintenance. Taking all these facts into consideration, the editor strongly advises the Bengalis to give up their short-sighted proposal to establish a National University, and continue to have their children educated at the Government educational institutions. As regards the Swadeshi movement, they should promote the use of India-made goods quiety and peacefully without causing any offence to, or incurring, in any way the displeasure of the authorities.

HINDOSTHAN,
6th December,
1905.

The Hindosthán's approval of the partition of Bengal.

22. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 6th December, says:—The cry of Bengalis against the partition being based upon sentiment, but not injury, will soon disappear when experience shows, as it must show, that the partition of Bengal is a step in the right direction which will keep the administration in pace with the growing needs of progress and population, and therefore it is no more a blow to the national feelings of the Bengalis and the people of Bengal than to anybody else. The first separation of Assam took place forty years ago, and now it was absolutely necessary that the official staff should be improved and instead of one Lieutenant-Governor, two should be appointed to rule the Provinces adequately and efficiently.

Subscriptions to the Curzon Memorial.

23. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd December, says:—So far it seems something like rupees thirty-six thousand odd have been subscribed to the Curzon Memorial Fund. An analysis of the list of subscribers is wonderfully instructive. The largest amount, Rs. 21,932, is subscribed by European firms. This is perfectly intelligible, as they are under obligations to the departed Viceroy. The next largest sum, Rs. 13,760, is subscribed by members of the Indian aristocracy and title-holders, Hindu and Muhammadan. Some of these probably owe their titles to Lord Curzon and others are always anxious to figure on such a list, in the hope of getting some other title on some future occasion. Non-official and official Europeans between them subscribe about three thousand rupees, and all the rest, Hindu, Muhammadans, Parsis and Jews put together, about rupees five hundred! That for your greatest, or nearly greatest, Viceroy of India. A much larger sum was subscribed for the late Sir John Woodburn in a much shorter time. We dare say the amount needed for Lord Curzon's statue will be found in due course, for the Native States are yet to be beaten up; but by what manner of reasoning can this wretched and ragged movement be called a public memorial?

Certain complaints against the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

24. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 6th December, publishes a letter from a correspondent, complaining that many of the promises that were made, sometime ago, by the management of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway for adding to the comfort and convenience of passengers, have not yet been carried out. The third and intermediate class carriages of the passenger train that starting from Bareilly reaches Lucknow at dusk at present are generally so overcrowded that, not to speak of sitting comfortably, the passengers are hardly able even to remain standing with ease. The booking clerks at the Cawnpore and Lucknow stations refuse to supply change to passengers in payment of their fares. Railway tickets were to be sold at all hours of the day at the larger stations: but the writer finds that even at such a large station as Lucknow tickets are not to be had but at the time of the arrival of trains. The railway peons were to cry out the name of the station and the halting period on the arrival of every train: but this order is being more honoured in the breach than the observance.

Suggestion for improving the present insanitary condition of the Hindu sacred tanks at Benares and other places.

25. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 1st December, says:—It is an open secret that the sacred temples and tanks the devout Hindus periodically visit are in most cases found unclean from a sanitary point of view. For the bathing of millions of healthy and unhealthy persons, as well as the offerings of leaves and rice after being decomposed, makes the water of the narrow and small kunds (tanks) at Benares and other places nothing but stagnant. The devout pilgrims eagerly bathe in this water, sip and sprinkle it all over their body. This practice is, in our opinion, responsible for spreading diseases among the pilgrims who happen to visit those sacred tanks and dive in them; and therefore we suggest that they may be repaired on scientific method with inlet and outlet so that they may continually receive fresh water and allow the old to escape.

Need for starting steam navigation companies to ply steam-boats in all the navigable rivers in India.

26. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 3rd December, says that, as old-fashioned Indian boats that are generally plied in the rivers in India are too wretched, unreliable, (being dependent on oars and sail), slow, and liable to easily capsize during the rainy season, it would add both to the convenience of passengers and traders, if some Indian or European steam navigation companies were started to ply steam boats in all those rivers that were found navigable. Such companies if started will, the writer believes, prove a very profitable concern, especially in those parts of the country which have not yet been tapped by a railway line.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th December,
1905.

England's participation in the naval demonstration against Turkey, and its effect on the feelings of the Egyptian and Indian Musalmans.

1. THE Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th December, observes that it is under the influence of religious prejudice that the European Powers have made up their minds to bring pressure to bear upon the Sultan of Turkey in favour of His Majesty's turbulent Christian subjects in Macedonia, and have accordingly despatched a combined fleet to force the Porte to adopt their proposed reforms in the latter country. It is much to be regretted that the Emperor of Germany whose subjects the Sultan has, for some years past, been so much patronizing in giving them his orders for supply of war material, and right of constructing railways in Asia Minor, in preference to the people of other countries, should also have been so led away by prejudice as to forget all these favours of the Sultan, and join the other European Powers in their coercive policy against Turkey. This much, however, must be said to the Kaiser's credit, that he has excused himself from deputing any warship to join in the combined naval demonstration against Turkey, on the ground of his not having any of his warships in the Mediterranean sea at the time. But what can be said in mitigation of the conduct of Mr. Balfour who has thought fit to send British warships to participate in the demonstration, notwithstanding the fact that England counts a larger number of Musalmans among her subjects than any other country in the world? To adopt a hostile measure for such a Power against Turkey who is the greatest Musalman Power on the face of the earth, is certainly a very short-sighted policy. Before Mr. Balfour gave his consent to England taking part in the naval demonstration, he should have well considered what effect his action would probably produce on the minds of the British Musalman subjects in Egypt and India, and how much grieved and chagrined they must feel to find the British Government taking a leading part in coercing the Sultan in utter disregard of their religious feelings.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
8th December,
1905.

Combined naval demonstration of the European Powers against Turkey.

2. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th December, referring to the coercive policy which the European Powers have adopted towards Turkey re Macedonian affairs, and to the International fleet which these Powers have already despatched to blockade the Dardanelles with a view to compelling the Sultan to accept the reforms they have proposed for Macedonia, says that the object of this high-handed proceeding is evidently to gradually force the Sultan to withdraw his sovereignty from Macedonia altogether. The Sultan is, however, not likely to part with Macedonia so easily: he must fight and fight hard to retain the country, so that if Turkey is after all compelled to wage a war with the combined Powers of Europe, the struggle is sure to prove a very fierce and protracted one. But Russia, who has been terribly beaten by Japan, is not likely to be very anxious for fighting with Turkey at the present time; while Austria is too much occupied with her internal troubles. Italy has joined the international naval demonstration only half-heartedly. Germany has sent no warship to take part in the demonstration, which is significant. As regards England, it is not very probable that she would readily consent to endanger the lives of thousands of her soldiers for the sake of Macedonia. Taking all these facts into consideration the odds are against the European Powers finally going to actual war with Turkey on account of Macedonia; and it is to be hoped that the catastrophe will be warded off by diplomacy. But if diplomacy fail, and Turkey be forced to fight for her existence in Europe, it will be a very deadly struggle indeed, in which the Turks will sell their lives very dearly, and God knows what will be the ultimate issue.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
14th December,
1905.

A Muhammadan meeting held at Lahore to protest against the joint European naval demonstration against Turkey.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th December, says:—The Muhammadan meeting held at Lahore last week was different from the public meetings usually held in this country. As a rule, meetings are held to deal with local questions, or to ventilate local grievances; but in this case the meeting was called to deal with the affairs of another country. It will be best to reproduce here the text of the first and most important resolution:—"As some European Powers, on account of the manufactured disturbances and fictitious complaints of some turbulent subjects of His Imperial Majesty the Sultan of Turkey are making preparations for taking improper action against the Porte and as it is feared that they may induce the British Government to join them, the Musalmans of Lahore request the said British Government, which exercises its sway over the largest number of Muhammadan subjects, to keep in view the respectful representations of its Muslim subjects before participating in any action against the Sultan of Turkey, the Commander of the Faithful." The Muhammadans of Lahore have more than once given practical proof of their sympathy with their co-religionists in Turkey, by raising funds for the Hedjaz railways and Turkish sufferers. But it seems to us that the words of the Resolution are open to objection. The Muhammadans of Lahore, for instance, have no evidence to show that the disturbances in Turkey are manufactured and the complaints fictitious, and the Christian subjects of the Porte are turbulent. Christians give a very different version, and statements like the above may lead to a Christian-Muhammadan feeling which should not be encouraged on any account. The sympathy for the Sultan and his Government is perfectly natural and the Resolution could very well have been confined to that. Among the Powers, however, the sympathy with the Christian subjects of the Porte is not very active, and the demonstration must have other objects in view. But whatever action the European Powers may take, though severe measures need not be apprehended, England can hardly hold aloof from the concert of the Powers. The Boers are as good Christians as the English, but that did not prevent the last Boer War and the loss of Boer independence.

ARYA MITRA,
16th December,
1905.

The European Powers, and the present lamentable state of things in Russia.

4. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th December, referring to the news of increasing disturbances, riots, bloodshed and general anarchy throughout the Russian dominions, says that if a similar state of things were prevailing in "Russia" (Turkey) or China, all the European Powers would have at once combined to take the sovereign of the latter country to task for the same, and to call upon him to mend the affairs under the threat of their interference, but that no European Power takes upon itself to ask the Czar why he allows the anarchy referred to above to go on unchecked in his empire. The Indian proverb is verily true that "the wife of a poor man is everybody's sister-in-law (to be freely flirted with), while that of a rich man is everybody's mother (to be paid reverence to at a distance)."

AL AZIZ,
7th December,
1905.

A suggestion to impose a municipal tax on cock and quail fighters and pigeon flyers.

5. Al Aziz (Agra), of the 7th December, says that as cock and quail fighting and pigeon flying are demoralizing (and cruel) amusements, the Municipal Boards at such places as Delhi, Lucknow and Agra (where people so largely indulge in these amusements) had better impose a tax on the persons who keep the birds in question for the purposes of gambling and sport, the amount assessed varying according to the number of birds possessed by each individual. If such a tax were imposed, it would not only bring an additional revenue to the Municipal Boards, but would gradually lead the people to give up the useless and vicious amusements in question.

A suggestion to the Government to give an extension of term of office to the retiring Mr. C. E. Welby, an Inspector of schools in the United Provinces.

6. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 11th December, says:—We learn with great regret that Mr. C. E. Welby, Inspector of Schools, Agra Circle, will retire on pension about the middle of this month.

* * * * * * *

He has rendered eminent service to the country; and his name will ever be held in grateful memory of the people. And may we not appeal to Government that an official, who has so faithfully discharged his duties and been popular with all sections, be allowed an extension of his term of office, specially when he is in a fit state of health to continue his work ably? We would respectfully pray to Government not to replace such a veteran worker by some favourite fry, merely on the technical ground of his having attained to the age of superannuation.

ADVOCATE,
10th December,
1905.

Impressment of country carts for the use of troops on march in the United Provinces.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 10th December, referring to the gloomy agricultural prospects on account of the failure of rain in the United Provinces, says:—This was surely not the time when the military authorities should have undertaken the transfer of troops from one part of India to another or arranged to hold camps of exercise. If these transfers were necessary, these ought to have been done by rail. The spectacle of carts being impressed and of bullocks being driven from field to tahsil is painful. His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor is aware of the agricultural situation of the Province, and we beg of him to issue orders that no more people should be molested by tahsil officials. The affairs have reached a stage when a public protest was necessary against the oppressions of the Begar system.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
10th December,
1905.

Impressment of labour in the United Provinces.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th December, says:—For about a week or so the carpenters of Colonelganj and Katra have not been troubled with the unwelcome visits of the tahsil peons. We do not know whether this is due to orders issued by the authorities, or whether the need for impressed labour has ceased for the present, or whether the tahsil peons themselves have been warned by the firm attitude of the carpenters. But the evil is of too wide and general an extent to be put down by the orders of the Magistrate of a particular district, assuming such orders have been passed. "Begar" in almost every form is common throughout the Provinces. Civil and military officers find it most convenient to requisition the tahsildar for labour and conveyances of every kind, because their needs are promptly supplied. These officers do not pay the men employed themselves, but through the tahsil. Wherever the money may go it certainly does not reach the men who are impressed into work. Consequently, the whole system needs overhauling. Either the men employed must be paid on the spot by their actual employers, or the practice of finding men through Tahsil peons must be discontinued. No other alternative is open if the present system is to be suppressed, and we fail to see how it can be continued. We are sorry to learn from the Punjabee that the system of Begar has not been wholly discontinued in the Punjab, but the instance mentioned by our contemporary is not half so bad as in these provinces. The Prince of Wales does not visit any place every day, and we can fully believe that as arrangements had to be made under high pressure, impressed labour had to be employed in the Punjab. The case here is quite different. Begar is habitually practised in these Provinces all round the year under normal conditions, and the example of Allahabad is sufficient to show that the system is in full swing throughout the provinces. It is a work of some labour and patience, but if our local and Punjab contemporaries would collect some definite facts about the practice of impressed labour and getting work out of men without paying their due wages, we think friends in England may easily be induced to take up the matter, and bring it forward in Parliament. Irregular and evil practices always die a hard death; but all the greater reason therefore that they should be resolutely and persistently dealt with until they are discontinued.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
10th December,
1905.

A debate on the Swadeshi movement under the presidency of the Principal, at the Muhammadan College, Aligarh.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th December, says:—At a debate held at the Siddons Union Club at the Aligarh Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College on the 2nd instant, at which a large number of the students of the College were present, a motion was brought forward to discourage the Swadeshi movement. After a prolonged debate the motion was lost by an overwhelming majority, almost all the students present declaring themselves in favour of the Swadeshi movement. Mr. Archibald, the Principal of the College, presided. The matter was discussed in its non-political aspect.

CITIZEN,
11th December,
1905.

The Swadeshi movement affairs in Bengal, and Lord Minto.

10. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 11th December, says:—Lord Curzon did not conceal his daring opinion that India being an Oriental country should be governed by Oriental methods. He was of course not quite outspoken about the particular character of those methods; but what he plainly meant was that not constitutionalism but autocracy should be the soul of British rule in India. Now, the enunciation of this principle came as a most shocking surprise to all Indians; for had not they been always assured of being governed according to British constitutionalism only occasionally modified by the exigencies of particular and special cases? But Lord Curzon came and openly said that this was not to be; and proceeded to carry out his newly propounded doctrine. We are all aware how he did so. But since he has left our shores, his disciples in Bengal, viz., the Hon'ble Mr. Fuller and Sir Andrew Fraser have outdone their guru.

The question which everybody is asking is—What have the people of Rungpur and Barisal done that they should be so inhumanely and despotically dealt with? They have done nothing disloyal, nothing illegal, for which they may be said to merit such treatment. If some students with the permission of their guardians have attended public meetings, they cannot be said to have done anything to which the officials can take exception. If they have been persistently shouting Bande Mataram they cannot be accused of having done anything that is not sanctioned by the law of the land. The words "Bande Mataram" do not mean anything derogatory or disrespectful to the authorities, and they are not in the least seditious. Why should then students be rusticated, fined, and threatened with exclusion from Government service? And even if it be admitted that students might be so punished, where is the justification for putting the indignity on respectable citizens of making them work as special constables, or for letting loose brutal soldiers on the peaceful inhabitants of a town?

The conclusion to which the public, not only in Bengal, but in other parts have been driven is that, however enthusiastic a supporter the Government may profess to be of the growth of indigenous arts and manufactures, at heart and in fact it is not so. The only reason for which it has degraded itself by adopting Czarish proceedings is that it is apprehensive of a rapid decline of British trade in India if the Swadeshi movement receive an impetus either by means of public meetings or from the inspiring cry of "Bande Mataram." We fondly hoped that the promise of always extending a helping hand to those who wanted to improve and develop the indigenous arts and manufactures would not prove a false one. But simple-minded as we have been, we are now being disillusioned. The Czarish proceedings of the two Governments in Bengal have, indeed, brought despair to the minds of all Indians—despair about the success of British rule in India. For can a people be kept attached to an alien Government by the shadowy nothing of promises made only to be broken? We put the question to our very rulers. They are not men without intelligence and a knowledge of human nature. Cannot they realize the danger they are running into? The people of India expect to be governed according to the principles of British constitutionalism, but they are now ruled according to Czarish methods. Has political insight been extinct in Britain and Anglo-India ? Are the Britons in power at home and in this country all shallow-minded, superficial politicians, and are there no true statesmen among them ? We must say that we are astounded, we are dumbfoundered to hear of the recent tyrannical doings of the two Governments in Bengal. And, indeed, the amazement caused by such doings is not confined to Bengal, but has spread throughout the empire. All Indians are sighing and raging by turns at what has been happening in Bengal. Madras has held a monster meeting to condemn the Czarish reign inaugurated in the most advanced sister province in the country. And, we are sure, the feeling of Madras in regard to this affair is shared by Bombay, the Punjab, the Upper Provinces and the rest of India.

The whole of India is keenly expectant that Lord Minto will adopt some means which will put an end to the rule of anarchy that the actions of the Bengal authorities seem to have given a sanction to. His Excellency is being flooded with petitions and memorials, not only from the down-trodden and humiliated districts of Barisal and Rungpur, but also from other parts of the province, and not only from individuals of a representative character, but also from Associations, about whose influence and popularity there can be no question. There is a widespread desire that Lord Minto should hold a consultation with the representative Bengalis upon the subject before coming to a conclusion about the best means to deal with the present situation. The elected members of the Bengal Legislative Council have applied to His Excellency for an interview. There is also a report that a deputation consisting of a number of representatives of all the districts of East and West Bengal is to wait on Lord Minto. A consultation too is being held between members of the British Indian Association and those of the European Chamber of Commerce to conjointly draw up and submit a petition to His Excellency to the effect that the partition be withdrawn and Bengal be reunited under the rule of a Governor. All these are signs of healthy and vigorous activity on which we must congratulate our countrymen in Bengal.

But the question is how far these efforts will be successful. We ought to have every confidence in Lord Minto, and yet the information that has reached us from a reliable source leads us to be rather pessimistic about the matter. In the first place, Lord Minto is disinclined to have free intercourse with Bengali leaders on grounds which we may imagine and need not specify. The other day, we are informed, the editor of a leading Bengali newspaper waited on the Private Secretary to the Viceroy and enquired if he could obtain an audience of His Lordship so that he might fully represent to him what he, as a publicist, knew to be the situation in Bengal. Now this was a very good opportunity for both the Viceroy and the Private Secretary to learn all particulars. Somehow, however, His Excellency did not avail himself of it. The Private Secretary too was apparently not inclined to talk about the matter, but the editor was inexorable and did all he could to communicate to the gentlemen the turn affairs were taking in Bengal. The result of the interview between the editor and the Private Secretary established the fact, if it did establish anything, that Lord Minto was already prejudiced against the Bengalis, and that he was resolved not to annul a measure which had been enacted by his predecessor, for whom he entertained profound respect amounting almost to awe. What, however, people all over the empire wish Lord Minto to do in this knotty, and, to him, delicate, matter of the partition of Bengal is to throw off all consideration for the views of his predecessor, judge for himself the troubles to which it has led and which it is most likely to create in the future, and then come to a conclusion such as he may himself deem to be just and wise, and at the same time expedient. If Lord Minto follows a manly, independent course, he will come to be respected and loved, even if his solution be not quite according to the demands of the popular voice. But if, on the contrary, he only endeavours to keep intact the status quo out of an undignified submission to the views of his redoubtable predecessor in office, he will lose public confidence and his Viceregal career will possibly be blighted.

V.—Legislation.

GURU KUL SAMACHAR,
November, 1905.

A suggestion to legislate against the practice of people making a present of their children to Sadhus to be brought up as such.

11. The Guru Kul Samáchár (Sikandrabad), for November, giving two specific instances in one of which certain Sádhús lately killed two inmates of a house while committing theft therein at night in Lahore, and in the other a Sádhu kidnapped some years ago a boy the bones of whose legs he broke to conceal his identity, bitterly complains that these so-called Sádhús (devotees) are mostly rogues and useless mouths, kidnapping, or receiving as present from their parents, young children, and freely preying upon simple, unwary people with a religious turn of mind. Surely there is no reason why the British Government, that has thought fit to penalize slavery, sati and similar other inhuman customs and practices in India, should not make it equally penal for any person to make a present of his minor child to a Sádhú to be brought up as such, under the false belief of acquiring a religious or spiritual merit by that cruel act. It is high time that Government legislated in the matter.

Suggestion to stop forced labour and professional beggary by legislation.

RIYAZ UL-AKHBAR,
12th December,
1905.

12. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 12th December, says that begár (forced labour) and beggary are two of the greatest curses of India. The labouring and artizan classes are freely seized by Tahsíl peons and policemen to do work for which they are paid nothing. This is a most oppressive and high-handed practice, and the sooner it is put a stop to by legislation the better for the welfare of the lower classes of the country. The other great evil of beggary by which myriads of idle persons, stout and well able to work for their own livelihood, live on the incomes of others, is not only demoralizing but tends to aggravate the poverty of the country; and the writer does not see why professional beggary should not be stopped by law, poor-houses being established in every town for the benefit of the lame, crippled, and others otherwise incapable of earning their living.

VI.—Railway.

Non-admission of two Indian gentlemen to the railway station platform of the Bareilly Junction.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th December,
1905.

13. A correspondent of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th December, says that on the 2nd idem two Indian gentlemen went to the booking clerk at the Bareilly Junction of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to purchase platform tickets so as to be present on the platform on the arrival of the 29 up-train, but were curtly told by the booking clerk that the tickets were not available at the time. Thereupon, the gentlemen requested the Station Master either to ask the ticket collector to admit them to the platform without platform tickets, or to order the booking clerk to supply them with the tickets. On enquiry, the Station Master found that the clerk in whose custody platform tickets were kept had not issued the tickets on that day, and then he also simply told the gentlemen that the tickets were not available, and ordered the ticket-collector not to admit anybody to the platform without platform tickets. This must have put out the two gentlemen a good deal, and Mr. Pope, the Traffic Superintendent, would do well to make an enquiry into the discourteous conduct of the railway officials at the Bareilly Junction.

Need for introducing platform tickets at the Allahabad and all other stations of the East Indian Railway.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
14th December,
1905.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th December, says:—A letter largely and influentially signed by the leading Indian residents of Allahabad, is being forwarded to the Traffic Manager, East Indian Railway, requesting that platform tickets should be introduced at the Allahabad railway station and all other stations of the East Indian Railway. We have already referred to the anomaly that at present exists on the East Indian Railway of there being no restriction on certain platforms, platform tickets at some other stations, and the most objectionable system of passes as at the Allahabad station. Things have come to such a pass at the Allahabad railway station that Indian ladies arriving by rail and expecting to meet their male relatives on the platform are bewildered and frightened when they find no one and have to make their way out by themselves. Friends have missed friends, and new arrivals have great difficulty in finding their way. It is absolutely nothing less than a scandal. If any other railway line were available to the travelling public the passenger traffic to and from Allahabad would pass out of the East Indian system altogether. We can only hope the Traffic Manager will put an end to the present difficulty by directing the issue of platform tickets which would remove all cause of complaint. The present system is absolutely intolerable, and reflects the greatest discredit upon the railway administration. It would have never been thought of except on a State railway.

POCKET AKHBAR,

Suggestion for prohibiting the private manufacture of post-cards bearing prostitutes' pictures.

15. The Pocket Akhbár (Agra), for November, says that certain publishing firms in India have taken to print pictures of beautiful prostitutes on post-cards manufactured by them for public sale. This no doubt makes the post-cards attractive, especially to young men, but is calculated to have demoralizing effect on them. The Government, the writer thinks, had better prohibit the manufacture of post-cards with such objectionable pictures.

KASHMIR DARPAN,
November, 1905.

A pessimistic view of the Prince of Wales' visit to India.

1. The Kashmír Darpan (Allahabad), for November, referring to the grand receptions that have been, and are being, given to the Prince and Princess of Wales in Native States and other places, expresses regret that before some of the Native Chiefs have been able to recover from their expenses in connection with the late Coronation Darbár at Delhi, they have again to spend lakhs of rupees in welcoming their Royal Highnesses to their States. It is true that, according to Oriental ideas and customs, the Indians should leave no stone unturned to give a right royal reception to the Prince of Wales. But those ancient Oriental sovereigns, who were accorded such receptions, did not confine their visits to making a bare display of pomp and grandeur and enjoying expensive hospitality, &c., but went out at night incognito and roamed about the streets and lanes of the towns to find out the true condition of their subjects. There are a lot of popular stories of such disguised visits of Rámchandra, Vikramájít, Akbar and Hárun-Rashid current on the tongues of the people. The system of Government is, however, now entirely changed. The sovereigns of the present day neither care to acquaint themselves with what is doing among their people, nor are they in a position to benefit the people even if they did know their real condition. For instance, of what use will the tour which the Prince of Wales is making in India at present prove to the people? How can he know of the distress of the four crores of the people who do not get even a single meal every day? And even if he did manage somehow or other to know something of the distress of the people, he commands no means to redress it. Such being the case, the writer is afraid lest the Prince's visit, far from bringing any benefit to India, might cause His Royal Highness, in view of the most splendid and showy receptions given him, to carry an impression to England that the stories of the fabulous wealth of Ind current in Europe in the 17th and 18th centuries were not much far from truth even in the 20th century.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
December, 1905.

The Royal visit to India, and the loyalty of the people to the British Crown.

2. The Hindustán Review (Allahabad), for December, referring to the Royal visit, says:—In his first speech the Prince said that he and the Princess were among their own people. No occasion will ever arise throughout the tour for the royal visitors to change this first impression. They are among their own people—a people that, through all changes and all vicissitudes, have remained steadfastly loyal to the sovereign and the royal family—a people whose quality of loyalty is unsurpassed by any other people in the world. But this great quality is never appreciated at its real worth by the rulers of the country and the people belonging to the ruling class. From the evidence that is forced upon our attention every now and then, one feels a doubt about the sincerity of the frequent professions of a firm faith in the loyalty of the people of India. They are more often than not merely lip-deep. Whenever there is the least sign of irritation or agitation, ominous murmurs are heard that disloyalty and sedition are abroad, and next follows a loud demand for repressive measures to which the authorities frequently and weakly yield. To-day one hears a Viceroy or a Governor loudly praising the loyalty of the Indian people. Six months later the air is said to be charged with sedition, and summary methods are devised for its repression. The educated classes, because they are articulate, are charged oftenest with disloyalty, and yet the first welcome to Royalty was extended by one of the most distinguished representatives of the educated classes. Our rulers and their countrymen in India have absolutely no conception of disloyalty or sedition because they cannot be now found in India. Therefore they invent and imagine the existence of these dangers and shout and sing by turns. But the truth is known on an occasion like the present one, when the heir to the British Empire is in our midst. Is it to please the Government or the Anglo-Indian community that the people, led by the educated classes, are turning out in their thousands to welcome the royal visitors, wherever they go? The Government knows perfectly well that it is never spared either in the press or on the public platform, and the Anglo-Indian community is aware that no love is lost between itself and the educated classes, but all differences are forgotten when Royalty is in our midst, and the people of India, loyal to the core and loyal by teaching and tradition, welcome the scion of the reigning house with a full heart. Nevertheless, the croakers are even now at their work, crying themslves hoarse that sedition and disloyalty are abroad, while the Prince and Princess of Wales are gliding smoothly down the full tide of loyalty.

Significance of Indians being put forward to read the Municipal addresses to the Prince of Wales in all places.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th December,
1905.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th December, says:—It must have been noticed that even in the case of Municipalities which have official European Presidents the honour of reading the address to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has usually been conferred upon an Indian. This is not due to a mere accident, but to careful deliberation. As a rule the Collector or the Deputy Commissioner, who happens to be the President of a Municipality, never yields precedence to any Indian member of the Municipality, or stands on one side and allows an Indian to act as his spokesman. On the contrary, cases without number might be mentioned in which friction has occurred and an official President has tried to act as an autocrat. But on the present occasion it has been felt that the word of welcome to Royalty comes with the best grace from Indian lips, particularly when Municipalities are supposed to be self-governing bodies. In Bombay it was not by favour but by full right as Chairman of the Corporation that Sir Pherozshah Mehta read the address of welcome. In the metropolis of India the Chairman is a European Civilian and the Municipality itself has been reduced to a practically official body. On the present occasion it has been decided that the Calcutta address to the Prince and Princess of Wales should be read by the Vice-Chairman, who is a paid official of the Corporation. At other places also the official Presidents have stepped aside for the moment—in obedience to a hint from higher quarters, and the addresses have been read by Indian gentlemen. This, if anything, serves to accentuate the lamentable state of local self-government in this country. Indian Municipal Commissioners are put forward as the spokesmen of our Municipalities when the time comes to greet Royalty, but they are thrust aside again when the Royal visitor passes, and the official Presidents resume all power and control. This travesty of local self-government calls at least for a word of protest.

A suggestion for the Prince of Wales to present a gift to some Hindu temple also.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
21st December,
1905.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 21st December, says:—The precedent of a Royal gift to the Amritsar Golden Temple has not been followed at any Hindu or Sikh shrine in the Panjab; but His Royal Highness has presented Rs. 1,500 to the Juma Musjid, Delhi, being precisely the same sum as that offered at Amritsar. It is to be hoped that His Royal Highness will make a similar gift to the Visheswar temple at Benares or the shrine at Kalighát in Calcutta, so as to ensure equal treatment for the principal religious communities in India. The Hindus are numerically the largest as well as the most ancient community in India, and their claim ought not to be overlooked on such an occasion. It is not the amount of the gift, but its association with the heir to the Empire that makes the gift valuable, and all communities should be treated alike. We remember that when Lord Curzon paid a visit to the temple at Kalighát the officiating priest brought some sugar and sweets for His Excellency's acceptance. His Private Secretary wanted to take the gift, but Lord Curzon promptly stretched out his own hands and accepted the gift and the priests were greatly pleased. The Prince of Wales having made a gift of money to a Sikh temple and a Muhammadan mosque, the claim of a Hindu temple comes next, and we hope it will be recognised either at Benares or in Calcutta, as we have ventured to suggest.

Satisfaction expressed at the appointment of Mr. John Morley as Secretary of State for India in the new British Ministry.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th December,
1905.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th December, referring to the constitution of the new British Ministry, says:—The leading papers agree in thinking that the Secretaryship of India is the position of honour and danger, just as it was twenty five years ago, when Lord Hartington was chosen for the post and signalized his assumption of office by the prompt repeal of the Vernacular Press Act. Now, as then, the danger was created by the Viceroy of India. Then it was the Vernacular Press Act, the Afghan War and a host of other measures; now it is the Partition of Bengal, the Official Secrets Act, the Universities Act and a host of similar measures. The new hand must be prepared to undo the mischief made by the old one. Our wise seers in the Anglo-Indian Press will be somewhat chagrined to find that the English Press does not at all share their view of the incompetence of Mr. John Morley. Every paper, from the Times downwards, has a high opinion of him as an administrator. The Daily News very justly says that India is fortunate in the selection. Never was a more urgent need for a strong and sympathetic hand at the helm of affairs, and the hope is everywhere shared that Mr. Morley will prove himself equal to the anxious task before him. There should not be any difficulty in Lord Minto serving under the new Government and in helping the new Secretary of State in arriving at a correct estimate of the present position in India. Things are rapidly drifting from bad to worse, and it is high time that the little great men in Bengal were smartly rapped over the knuckles.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
December, 1905.

A cursory view of Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty in India till the day of his departure.

6. The Hindustán Review (Allahabad), for December, says:—The exit of Lord Curzon from the Indian stage is almost tragic in its pitifulness. Brave it out as he might, the consciousness of his unhonoured departure from India could not have failed to move him powerfully. Let the reader take a rapid bird's-eye-view of the six years and over that Lord Curzon was Viceroy of India: his magniloquent speeches, the open profession of undertaking the task of a second Hercules, the playing of the Great Mogul at Delhi, the theatrical grandeur that never deserted him, the first slip of the foot, the first slow and next accelerated descent, the wild clutching of the air and the last final great fall. The Ministry that appointed him Viceroy for the second time also drove him into resignation, and with very little ceremony. He knew of the difference of opinion that existed between him and His Majesty's Government and yet he eagerly accepted the Viceroyalty for a second term. The keen instinct of the true politician, the foresight of the real statesman had passed from him absolutely. He submitted to the Ministry when he ought to have resigned, and he broke with them when he was hopelessly wrong. He tried to get behind the decision of the Ministry while apparently yielding to it, and nominated an officer to a new appointment created by the Home Government, which had decided to make its own selection. So fully had the Ministry lost faith in Lord Curzon that when he finally resigned he was allowed no time for reconsideration, and the announcement of the appointment of his successor followed on the heels of the acceptance of his resignation. On the one hand, he damaged his future career with his party in England; on the other, he wrecked his reputation in India. He found the country at peace and content when he took over charge of the administration; he left it distracted, agitated and profoundly irritated from one end to the other. He found the country on his arrival disposed towards him most favourably; he stayed long enough to alienate it wholly. He began by saying that the agitation against the partition of Bengal was artificial and confined to a few persons, and he finished by realizing the intensity and extent of that agitation which forced him to give Bengal a wide berth at the time of departure. He began by giving rise to the most lively expectations in the country and he ended by finding the whole country arrayed against him.

The actual incidents connected with his departure are pitiful in the extreme. Never in very robust health he fairly broke down, as he himself confessed, in the unequal and losing struggle with the Ministry. He insisted on carrying out the partition of Bengal against every dictate of prudence and statesmanship; but the excitement in that province haunted him like a nightmare, and he had a horror of a hostile demonstration in Calcutta. On no other ground can his studied avoidance of Bengal during the last months of his stay in India be explained. The ludicrous and abortive attempts that were made to get up demonstrations in his honour at the time of parting accentuated his extensive and intense unpopularity. The Municipality of Lahore presented an address against which the citizens and rate-payers openly protested. The Delhi Municipality—a palpable travesty of local self-government—was dragged to Agra to present a farewell address, and obscure individuals sent messages which were gratefully acknowledged. Agra served as the last place for Lord Curzon to hide his diminished head, and he was unconscious of the humour underlying his remark that Agra was the spot he loved best in India. But even this was thrown into the shade by his last speech in Bombay, in which he had the bad taste to single out for compliment one Anglo-Indian paper of Bombay which, of the entire Indian and Anglo-Indian Press, had remained most faithful to him to the last. It was a mournful procession that accompanied Lord Curzon on his final departure from Bombay. Not only did the Municipality decline to present him with a farewell address, but there was absolutely no demonstration, and Lord Curzon was allowed to go almost as a stranger, instead of as a Viceroy who had ruled over India for nearly seven years.

Lord Curzon left India with the statement on his lips that every Viceroy in India incurred the resentment and hostile criticism of the educated classes towards the latter part of his term of office. Suppose, now, that the arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales in this country had synchronised with the departure of such a Viceroy as Lord Ripon? The imagination is fairly overwhelmed at the idea. If Lord Curzon chooses not to remember, we, in this country at any rate, cannot forget the scenes that were enacted in Bombay when Lord Ripon bade farewell to India. Even at Aligarh, it may be recalled, the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan had Lord Ripon carried in a tamjham borne by Muhammadan gentlemen of position—an honour which has not since then been vouchsafed to any other Viceroy, or even to royal visitors. From Calcutta to Bombay the country sounded a single note and throbbed with a single pulse. The enthusiastic, almost passionate, gratitude that was then displayed by the whole country has never been witnessed again, because no other Viceroy has, since then, brought the same sympathy to bear upon the discharge of his great office. Imagine the two events happening together—the retirement of a Viceroy like Lord Ripon and the arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales! It would have been difficult to distinguish between the enthusiasm on both occasions. Every Viceroy could emulate the great example of Lord Ripon, if he had as great a heart, if he were as unselfish, as religious and had an equally lofty conception of duty. Then the Prince of Wales would have seen that a Viceroy can inspire loyalty as profound, as zealous as Royalty itself. Judged by the manner of his departure, the spirit in which the whole country has taken it, it seems ironical to call Lord Curzon great. His departure is the dark side of the picture, while the arrival of the royal visitors is the bright side. The irritation that Lord Curzon caused has scarcely yet been obliterated by the enthusiasm produced by the royal visit.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Prosecution of a Poona Marathi newspaper at Bombay.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 21st December, says:—Particulars have now been received of the prosecution of the Maráthi paper, Bhala, published at Poona. The prosecution has been instituted in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, probably with the object of the trial being ultimately held in the Bombay High Court Sessions. The Oriental Translator prosecuted for the Government and put in a translation of the passage complained of. As already stated it is an account of a Darbár in Hell. The opening account of the decorations and attractions of the Hall of audience and the approaches is gruesome and blood-curdling. The Emperor of Hell was growing old and infirm and he was listening to the claims of diverse aspirants who wanted to succeed him. Ultimately, only one candidate was left, and he rose and recounted his achievements and his claims to the Empire of Hell. This is the beginning of the mischief. The description of the candidate, in the direct form of narration, is hardly disguised, and places the Government in an evil position. Throughout, it is an enumeration of treachery and wickedness and greed, and is absolutely indefensible. The wonder is how the Editor, who is said to be a graduate, could have put in such a grossly offensive composition. The writing is very different from the absurd trash that appeared in the Amritsar paper. It is a deliberate and elaborate attack on the Government, which is throughout represented in the worse light. We are very sorry for Mr. Bhopatkar, as he evidently seems to be a young journalist, and apparently the diatribe is not his composition. But the exercise of some judgment and discretion is indispensable in the conduct of newspapers and both these qualities must be lacking when writings of this nature are allowed to see the light. We cannot say what defence will be put forward on behalf of the accused, but we can only account for the publication of such a piece of writing on the supposition that the responsible Editor was absent at the time and the proof of the manuscript did not pass through his hands.

Frequency of theft cases at Etawah.

8. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kálakánkar), of the 20th December, publishes a communication in which the writer states that on the night of the 21st November last six thieves entered the house of one Pandit Bhímsen, in muhalla Katra Shamsher Khan at Etáwah, and that while two of them held down the Pandit himself and two others (his wife and son) respectively, the other two freely ransacked the house, and then decamped with all the valuable articles they could lay their hands on, worth about Rs. 1,500. Several cases of theft have lately occurred in this and other neighbouring muhallas of the town, which makes one suspect that some resident of one of these muhallas is in collusion with thieves and gives them clue. The European Local authorities would do well to take steps to stop this frequency of thefts at Etáwah.

Need for metalling certain kachcha roads in the Bareilly district.

9. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th December, publishes a letter from a correspondent, who says that the portion of the Bareilly-Rámpur road lying between the bridge over the Sankha river and the Rámpur city being unmetalled, causes a great deal of inconvenience to travellers, commanding, as it does, a large traffic, being used not only by the public, but by Government officers and troops as well. The bazar road of the town at Fatehganj west is also unmetalled, and is consequently a source of constant annoyance to the shopkeepers and others. The Bareilly district authorities would do well to get the roads in question metalled.

KASHMIR DARPAN,

A protest against the establishment of a medical college at Lucknow by public subscription.

10. The Kashmír Darpan (Allahabad), for November, referring to the subscriptions which the people have been raising to establish a medical college at Lucknow with great zeal and earnestness, says that while nobody can deny the usefulness of the proposed college, the editor does not see why the people of these provinces should have to provide money for an institution which has been established by Government at its own cost in other provinces. Surely if Government thinks it fit to transfer its own obligations on to the shoulders of the public, the latter will not be able to discharge their own legitimate obligations satisfactorily. But the leaders of these provinces have been so carried away by the glamour of official "witchery" in the matter, that nothing but the echoes of praises and commendations of the project are to be heard from all quarters at present.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th December,
1905.

The Shahna-i-Hind on the Swadeshi movement.

11. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut, of the 16th December), regrets that, instead of approving of, and encouraging the Swadeshi movement recently set on foot in India, as calculated to improve the financial condition of the country, the English rulers look upon it as a seditious organization. Swadeshism is the very life and mainspring of the activity of all the civilized nations of the present day, and there is no reason why the Indians should be discouraged in promoting their indigenous arts and industries, by making it a point to use none but home-made goods so far as these may be available. The Bengalis, who are armed, so to speak, only with the weapons of education, law, and civilization and do not know even how to handle a sword or gun, cannot possibly cause any disturbance or go into mutiny against the constituted authority, and hence it is absurd for the Government to apprehend any political danger from them. The Swadeshi movement, if successful, will of course tend to cause a serious diminution in the import of British goods; and it remains to be seen whether the British Government, moved by partiality to the interest of its countrymen, interferes with the movement, or, animated by its strong sense of justice, allows it to go on unhindered by any hostile measure.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th December,
1905.

Debate on the Swadeshi movement at the Aligarh College.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th December, publishes the following letter from Saiyid Ashfaq Husain, Honorary Secretary, Aligarh College Union:—"SIR,—In your issue of the 10th instant, I find a garbled account of a discussion on the subject of Swadeshi movement in the Aligarh College Union.

"In fairness to the general public, which might be misled by the incorrect version of the proceedings in your columns, I beg you to insert the following lines giving the actual statement of the facts.

"As a matter of fact a debate did come off in the Union on the subject of Swadeshi movement. There was a hot and lively discussion for about a couple of hours, during which the house was treated to a good deal of oratory on both sides."

The house broke up without a division and voting did not take place at all. In view of such an equivocal termination of the proceedings it is not fair, much less reasonable, to say that "The motion was lost by an overwhelming majority," although, judging from the temper of the house, the probability would seem to be wholly against Swadeshism becoming an article of Aligarh creed.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
21st December,
1905.

The Swadeshi movement, a common cause for all Indian communities.

13. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 21st December, in an article headed "A common cause for India," says:—The Swadeshi movement has given rise to suspicions because it tends to benefit the people materially. It is a movement round which Hindus and Muhammadans have rallied, and they have made common cause in most parts of the country. That is the reason why so many things are being said against the movement and so many attempts are being made to suppress it. The future must be frankly faced. The ruling class in this country will never encourage a movement calculated to make the people self-contained and self-reliant. So long as the people look to the Government for help in everything they will be left to themselves and probably helped with a word of encouragement. As soon as they begin to help themselves they will be discouraged. That is the perpetual source of difference and friction between us and our rulers. There is no other cause for disagreement. But if we are ever to arise we must learn to help ourselves and thereby convince the English people that we are fit to be entrusted with larger powers and privileges. Every thought of any particular community standing aloof from the rest and trying to go its own way must be put aside and all communities must come together in a common cause. The difficulty appears to have been solved by the Swadeshi movement, and Hindus and Muhammadans alike must work together and with mutual confidence to bring about the industrial revival and the self-reliance of the country.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
17th December,
1905.

Prevalence of the begár system, and its demoralizing effect on workmen in the United Provinces.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 17th December, says:—From inquiries made in different quarters we find that the begár system is not only widely spread, but almost everywhere in vogue in these Provinces. What happens is usually this: wherever a regiment is quartered the military officers send a requisition for whatever may be wanted; sometimes it may be a number of carpenters or conveyances or grass-cutters or other labourers. A bill is subsequently presented and duly paid. But the men actually employed never get paid. All these men, it must be remembered, are day-labourers, and they are everywhere paid by the day, or, in the case of conveyances, by the trip. When the Tahsíl peons catch hold of these men, the latter are compelled to do whatever they are ordered, and in the evening they are dismissed without payment. They cannot be paid then as their wages are not paid till some time later, and the victims of begár are more anxious to escape the Tahsíl peons than to press for payment. The wages are paid, but they are not divided among the labourers. That is the reason why the men impressed by the Tahsíl peons are systematically defrauded. But the effect is fearfully demoralizing in another direction. Being compelled to work without payment constantly, the workmen themselves think they are justified to shirk work when they do get a full day's wages. Since they are robbed by Peter, they, in their turn, rob Paul to be quits, as it were. Honest workmen are extremely difficult to get in these Provinces simply in consequence of the begár system. The result is that workmen in this part of the country have become most unsatisfactory, and can hardly be induced to do proper work unless under compulsion. For this lamentable state of things the begár system alone is responsible.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
21st December,
1905.

Certain complaints of clerks in the office of the Postmaster-General, United Provinces.

15. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 21st December, says:—In our issue of the 26th ultimo a small paragraph appeared regarding some of the alleged grievances of the clerks in the office of the Postmaster-General in these Provinces. We are gratified to learn that that officer at once made an inquiry and the result has been extremely satisfactory. The medical leave granted to some of the clerks has been converted into privilege leave, and inquiry is being made into the other grievances of the clerks, who are very grateful to the Postmaster-General. There seems to be a general and well-founded complaint that the men are overworked and the clerical staff insufficient. If so, should not the number of clerks be increased so that there may be a more equitable division and apportionment of work? Another complaint, and which we are surprised to hear, is that an examination is held in essay writing and literature before promotions are granted, and the marks obtained in this examination, or the manner in which they acquit themselves, form the basis of the promotion of the clerks. What, in the name of everything wonderful, has a postal clerk to do with essay writing or literature? He enters the Department with very little knowledge of either, and even the little knowledge he may possess is soon driven out by the drudgery and hard grinding of office work. A clerk who does his work satisfactorily, is punctual and steady, is entitled to promotion, and it is quite immaterial whether he knows any essay writing or literature, or not. We are informed that, as a result of these examinations, young clerks, with some literary pretensions, are promoted over the heads of experienced and hard-working clerks who have served the Department faithfully and have well earned their promotions. This is also probably unknown to the Postmaster-General, who would scarcely sanction such an arrangement. To judge by the prompt attention he has given to the grievances of the clerks, we are sure he will make an inquiry into the above practice and put a stop to it, and direct the promotion of the clerks to be regulated in accordance with the older, and more rational practice.

ADVOCATE,
24th December,
1905.

Their Royal Highnesses' coming visit to Lucknow.

1. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th December, says:—We accord their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales a hearty and loyal welcome to this city of many memories, sad and pleasant. Day after to-morrow the Royal Entry will be made in the morning, and for three days Lucknow will wear her gala dress.

* * * * * * *

The occasion of the visit of the Prince and the Princess is going to be immortalized in two institutions—rather one institution with two departments, quite separate from each other—that are to prepare men and women to go out to the world to lessen the physical ailments of suffering humanity: and our loyal Barons have again come forward to bear the major portion of the cost of construction and equipment of the Medical Colleges as they will commemorate a cheerful event to the permanent good of the people. This is indeed very, very good of the Taluqdárs. We think we echo their feelings well when we say that Government may justly be expected to generously make the cost of education such as to enable almost all classes of people to avail themselves of the blessings promised in the proposed institutions. That the poor and the destitute are also to be remembered on this joyous occasion by the distribution of food and blankets to them will make the Royal Guests more popular with people of all sorts and conditions.

During the short stay the Prince will no doubt meet many people of Oudh: Taluqdárs and Municipal Members, and Raíses, mostly the first. The Nawáb of Rámpur and the Rája of Tehri will be received individually and their visits returned In the crowd of engagements one very important function has perhaps been left out. If the visit is to give His Royal Highness knowledge of the country first hand, why should not private interviews with leaders of all parties be a regular feature of the visit, if not everywhere at least in one very important town of each Province? This was done in Bombay and will be repeated, we are told, in Calcutta. Why not in other Provinces? The problems peculiar to each should, we think, be placed before His Royal Highness. The enthusiastic reception given to their Royal Highnesses everywhere and the loyalty evoked by their presence do require some sort of recognition. And nothing will so much appeal to popular feeling as the readiness on the part of the Prince to give a hearing to the leaders as to the problems of administration from the people's point of view. Be that as it may, Lucknow will not be behind any town in the outburst of loyalty.

CITIZEN,
25th December,
1905.

Appointment of Mr. John Morley as Secretary of State for India.

2. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 25th December, says:—It is with particular delight that we have hailed the appointment of Mr. John Morley as Secretary of State for India. He is said to be a true follower of the late Mr. Gladstone, and we all know he is true to his eminently Liberal principles and convictions. But he is quite new to India. Many of our Indian contemporaries in all parts of the country have taken a highly optimistic view of Mr. Morley's appointment at the head of the India Office. It is quite natural for us to expect redress at the hands of such a thoroughly honest and bold Liberal chief as Mr. John Morley, and we earnestly hope that such redress will come. But at the same time we must not close our eyes to the considerations that warn us to hope but faintly. The first feeling that will no doubt dominate the large, liberal soul of Mr. Morley will be to do justice to India. But the Secretary of State is not all in all at the India Office. He has to consult his Council, which is the repository of the poison of Anglo-Indian spirit of bureaucracy, condensed and solidified to the most destructive potency. Mr. Morley is not and cannot claim to be a specialist in Indian political subjects; but the men, the repositories of bureaucratic poison, who are his councillors, have the reputation to be so. Mr. Morley will have to meet in this a formidable check to his own ideas and convictions of doing justice to India. The majority of his Council will surely be ever against him if he tries to put his truly Liberal principles about Indian administration into effect. A Liberal or Radical Secretary of State may be won over by his Council of bureaucrats. We do not say that this will be the case as regards Mr. Morley; but the chance for such a sad result must not be altogether eliminated as impossible; for in these days the tyranny of so-called specialists and experts is commoner than at any period of our political or social history. If Mr. Morley escapes the very great and quite probable danger of being manipulated and moulded by the hardened bureaucrats of the India Council, how will he fare in the hands of Lord Minto? Lord Minto as Viceroy must exercise considerable influence over Mr. Morley. But what is the position of our new Viceroy? He, like Mr. Morley, never has been a specialist in Indian affairs; and what the India Council will be to Mr. Morley, the Viceregal Executive Council is to be to Lord Minto. His Lordship has already shown himself to be quite malleable in the hands of his councillors. The bureaucrats of the India Council may not find Mr. Morley to be an easy subject for conversion into their worn-out old world views; but those of the Viceregal Executive Council will not have much difficulty in making a convert of Lord Minto, for His Excellency has been a Tory in principle and training. Thus it is seen that the stumbling blocks in the path of the realization of any truly Liberal ideas that Mr. John Morley may wish to carry out in the administration of India are of a formidable character. Will Mr. Morley have the daring courage, the extraordinary boldness to over-ride almost in every case of action the counsels of his own councillors and those of the Viceroy in Council? Will he display the great masterfulness required for the purpose—a masterfulness quite without a precedent in a Secretary of State for India? That is an altogether doubtful point, and no one will gainsay that the probabilities are that Mr. John Morley will be constantly handicapped in his Liberal tendencies and resolutions by the retrogressive ministrations of the Anglo-Indian fossils that constitute his Council and the Council of the Viceroy.

Another drawback to Mr. Morley's freedom will no doubt be the prestige and fame which Lord Curzon has acquired in the estimation of the general British public as an Indian ruler. It is only a small fraction of the British electors and Members of Parliament who have found fault with Lord Curzon's administration of this country. If votes were taken it would probably be found that the vast majority of the Liberal party were of opinion that what Lord Curzon had done in India was wise and expedient. In the face of such a strong public opinion in England in favour of Lord Curzon's Indian rule, it will be no easy task for Mr. Morley to subvert any of the late Viceroy's acts and measures.

If Mr. Morley had not been surrounded by checks of the kind that we have pointed out, we should have hoped for the best results from his appointment as Secretary of State. But, as matters stand, our good Radical Chief cannot easily have his own way to reach our hearts by doing bare justice to us.

But hope is our sustainer. Let us learn to hope against hope, in our political life—the political life of a down-trodden subject race that has learnt to taste of the joys of freedom of thought and action without being given the opportunity of ever fully possessing that blessing.

AL BASHIR,
26th December,
1905.

Al Bashír's disapproval of the appointment of Mr. John Morley as Secretary of State for India.

3. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 26th December, referring to the recent change in the British Ministry, says that though, so far as Indian matters are concerned, it makes little difference whether the Conservative or Liberal party is in power, yet the Congress leaders always entertain very high hopes from the latter, whom, on the other hand, the Indian Musalmáns look upon with anything but favourable eyes. Mr. John Morley, who has been appointed Secretary of State for India, in the new Liberal Ministry, is a strong advocate of the late Mr. Gladstone's views. There is hardly a Musalmán who does not cherish the memory of Mr. Gladstone with hatred and contempt, for there has scarcely been any other distinguished British statesman who was more hostile to, or prejudiced against Musalmáns. The enmity which Mr. Gladstone bore towards the Turks was due to his strong religious prejudice. And hence if Mr. Morley really holds such "unholy" ideas as Mr. Gladstone did, his inclusion in the British Cabinet cannot possibly be agreeable to the Musalmán world.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th December,
1905.

Complaint regarding certain clerical posts under the District Magistrates in the United Provinces.

4. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 24th December, regrets to state that the copyists and certain other clerks employed in the office of the District Magistrates, and the Readers of the Honorary Magistrates, in the United Provinces, are not allowed any pension or gratuity on their retirement. Mr. T. A. H. Way, District Magistrate of Gorakhpur, is said to have directed his attention to this hardship on the clerks in question, and the editor expresses a hope that, if other District Magistrates did the same, the just and kind-hearted Government of Sir James Digges LaTouche was sure to take necessary steps to remove the grievance.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
1st January, 1906.

Turkey, England and Indian Musalmans.

1. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 1st January, is glad to notice that Germany, appreciating the political and commercial advantages of friendship with Turkey, and being grateful for the favours she had already received from the Sublime Porte in certain matters, brought her influence to bear upon the combined European Powers to accept the Sultan's amendments in their proposed reforms re Macedonian affairs. It was, however, the political tact and equanimity of the Sultan that have mainly enabled him to ward off a very formidable and fateful war compared to which the late Russo-Japanese war would have seemed but child's play. The Indian Musalmans though no doubt gratified that the Macedonian complications have been amicably settled, they would have felt really very happy if, instead of Germany coming to the Sultan's help, England having regard for the feelings of her Muhammadan subjects had sought to renew her old friendly relations with Turkey by using her influence on her behalf in the late crisis. There is, however, not much lost yet, if the Liberal Ministry, that have just come into power, were well advised to pursue the policy of winning the good-will of Turkey and thereby secure not only commercial and other advantages to England, but make the Musalman subjects of the British Crown highly grateful to them. The meetings which the Muhammadans lately held at Madras and Lahore, expressing their disapproval of England participating in the combined naval demonstration against Turkey, was liable to be misconstrued into a threat to the British Government; and the editor would strongly advise the Indian Musalmans to keep themselves strictly aloof from the political affairs of the Government.

ADVOCATE,
31st December,
1905.

Attraction of England's special attention to India at the present time.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 31st December, 1905, says :—There is a holy trinity working for the good of India at the present moment. The Royal tour has drawn British attention to this country, attention of Their Most Gracious Majesties, Earls and Dukes, Marquises and Lords; the change of Government in England has made the friends of progress there careful readers of Indian affairs; Congress activity—expressed in the deputation lately returned from Great Britian, in the session held in Benares and in the unauthorised though sympathised boycott of British goods in Bengal—has led intelligent and well informed Englishmen at home to ask one another "what's gone wrong in Bengal?" and created disquiet in the minds of textile manufacturers. Thus, all classes of people in Great Britain have their eyes more or less directed towards the greatest dependency of England. What will be the result?

India asks for no favour but fair treatment, treatment by one civilised to another civilised nation—though the two civilisations may and do differ widely in time and underlying principles. What royal favours may be showered upon this hopless, famine-stricken, poverty smitten land we do not here stop to enquire. It is at best but guess-work and may be anything but what we may set our hearts upon. While Indian loyalty is a clear asset of the British Empire, British concessions stand on very uncertain ground, being qualified by many a restraining clause, if they are not altogether chimerical. We do not want empty good-will towards us and lip-sympathy with our aspirations, aspirations that are the result of the benevolent policy of British statesmen of the type of Bentinck and Macaulay, Canning and Ripon. Our loyalty is above board and stands in no need of fresh recognition. Our rights and responsibilities have grown clear in our sight. While we are quite alive to, and carry out the latter unstintedly, it has become necessary that the former should be ours. When should we ask for them? Where to look to?

The psychological moment has come. The Liberals have come into power after shaking off the scales of a military imperialism and with a promise to return to the old and strong principles of Bright and Gladstone; they value the liberty and independence of every man, whatever may be his colour.

CITIZEN,
1st January, 1906.

The Indian National Congress, a nursery of patriotism.

3. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 1st January, says:—Blessed is the Indian National Congress, thrice blessed, for, in right earnest, has it inaugurated in fallen India the culture of patriotic feeling. Before the Congress there had been patriots, men who had felt sincerely and deeply for their country; but the great drawback was that they had then no nucleus wherefrom they might receive soul-elevating and holy influences. The first thing that contributes to the stirring of patriotism in the Indian's heart under the canopy of the Congress pavilion is the fact of his being able to meet there his brethren from all parts of the country, gathered at no small self-sacrifice, to serve the mother-land and help forward the cause of her progress and regeneration. It is patriotism that brings the Madrasi and the Sikh, the Maharatta and the Bengali, the Hindustani and the Gujerati, the Parsi and the Assamese together. Each delegate is like a spark of the sacred flame of patriotism flying about in the Congress atmosphere. As one spark mingles with another, there is naturally created a fire, and in the Congress Camp it is the fire of patriotism which the heart feels and receives its warmth from. We all come to the Congress, our interior being charged with the electricity of patriotism, and each of us becomes for another a conductor of the same electric feeling. It is a thing to be felt rather than to be described, and every one who has ever been to the Congress, as a true Congressman, cannot but have felt the magnetic influence of patriotism. Yes, to the heart susceptible of patriotic feeling, the Congress is a school for the culture of the feeling. It is a blessedness to have our heart every year stirred to its depths by the inrush of this feeling, though it be for three or four days only. It is a training, it is an education which serves as well throughout the year and qualifies us for sacrifices for the sake of the country. The great efficacy of the Congress as an incentive to patriotic work, to deeds of patriotic self-sacrifice has, we are afraid, been hitherto overlooked. We may run the risk of being laughed at if we assert, yet we must, that the great wave of self-sacrificing patriotism that is now passing over Bengal may be traced to twenty years' silent culture of patriotism under the canopy of the Congress Mandap. No, the Congress has not existed in vain these twenty years. It has been doing its great work of schooling the Indian heart in self-forgetting patriotism ever since it was started into being.

Patriotism generated in the Indian mind by the Congress has gradually grown and expanded so as to inspire patriotic efforts in various other directions. We have now organizations to reform our social condition, to improve our industries, and to better our religious state. Our Muhammadan fellow-countrymen have their own special movement to raise their educational condition. All these organizations for thinking and working, established with the sole object of the elevation of the nation, may not have achieved very gratifying results, but the best fruit they have yielded up to this time is one which should not disappoint us, viz., the generation in our minds of a consciousness of the necessity for reform or improvement in every line of national work. We may not get tangible results for years, and yet the mere existence of these organizations is a guarantee for better days to come, for progress and advancement. The Social Conference has been called a failure, but it is a mistake to regard it as such. There is proof positive that it has been silently doing its work, that is, moulding the social notions according to its ideals. Men in all countries are by nature conservative about social matters, and Hindus are much more so. If in other countries social changes come in a century, in Hindustan they can come only in two. So it is not yet time to pronounce a verdict as to the success or failure of the National Social Conference. Let the Conference be half a century old and then we may set ourselves to a calculation of its results. Then we have the Industrial Exhibition. It is an institution quite in its infancy and there are no two opinions about its success in stimulating the cultivation of the industries among both the industrial and educated classes. The Industrial Conference which has held its first session is also a highly promising institution. The papers read at it would prove highly useful to many, and beneficial to the cause of industrial progress. For industrial improvement both thought and action are necessary, and while the Exhibition will stimulate action, the Conference will provide thought. The All-India Theistic Conference has been almost as old as the Congress itself, and it has been a valuable help to the worker in the Theistic cause. For the first time we had this session a Hindu Religious Congress. It cannot be in its ideals satisfying to all, but it is most welcome as the inauguration of a much desired movement which we hope will be gradually perfected in its plan and scope. Our Muhammadan brethren have for years held an Educational Conference of their own which also had its birth from a patriotic feeling inspired by the National Congress. Like the Muhammadans, the Hindu races would soon find the necessity of holding an annual Conference for the expansion and improvement of education of their youths which could no longer be left wholly in the hands of Government.

Thus, the last week of the last month of the year, the Congress Week, is par excellence the week of patriotic culture. Well might we designate it the sacred week of patriotism in India. In this week every earnest-souled, high-minded, Indian bathes, as it were, in a sea of patriotic love. In this week he dedicates his soul and mind to the thoughts of his country's regeneration, to dreams of his nation's salvation. In this week, he gathers strength to fight for the good of his land, he fills his mind with resolution to sacrifice his own interests for the interests of the nation, and he is animated by a hope, a vivifying hope, for the future from a right and judicious estimate of the work that has been accomplished in the past. The Congress ground with its congeries of Conferences and the Exhibition is a sacred ground, the very nursery of Indian patriotism which will grow deeper and truer from year to year. Let us all Indians realize the full significance of the Congress week and profit to the full by its uplifting inspirations and reforming influences.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
1st January, 1906.

The Congress and the Musalmans.

4. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 1st January, states that one Maulvi Abdul Bári's name appeared, in the Advocate, among the delegates elected at Lucknow for the last Congress held at Benares; but that when an enquiry was made from him, he denied all knowledge of the matter, and repudiated any intention on his part of ever becoming a member of the Congress. Commenting on the above incident, the editor says that all those Musalmans, that have so far been seen on the Congress platform, were nominal members only, having joined the assembly simply as a matter of recreation; and hence their presence there cannot have any effect in modifying the general attitude of the Muhammadan community towards the Congress movement.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
28th December, 1905.

Comparison of Lord Curzon's Indian Viceroyalty with Aurangzeb's reign by Mr. Gokhale in his Presidential speech at the late Congress.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 28th December, 1905, referring to Mr. Gokhale's speech at the last Congress, says:—It strikes us that the passage in which Lord Curzon's administration is compared to that of Aurangzeb is a piece of acute and brilliant analysis which will be remembered and quoted. So far the most extravagant admirers of Lord Curzon have been content with calling him the greatest Viceroy after Lord Dalhousie, but the comparison with a great Mogal Emperor should be more gratifying to the self-complacence of Lord Curzon. It is only to be hoped that the sequel of Aurangzeb's rule will not be realized in the British rule of India after Lord Curzon. There is of course this difference that there is no dynastic rule now as it was in the time of the Mogals, and the tradition of Lord Curzon need not be followed by his successor. But the appropriateness of the parallel so brilliantly sketched by Mr. Gokhale is as remarkable as it is profoundly true.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th January, 1906.

Mr. Gokhale's presidential address at the Benares Congress.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th January, says:—As usual, some of our Anglo-Indian contemporaries have paid their tribute of carping criticism to Mr. Gokhale's inaugural address at the twenty-first Indian National Congress. When it is added that the same papers have offered unstinted praise to the speech of the Maharaja of Benares on the opening of the Industrial Exhibition, it is easy to understand what sentiments are likely to be appreciated by them. Apart, however, from what may be mildy called party considerations, Mr. Gokhale's speech is universally regarded as a great speech, as one of the finest presidential speeches of the Congress. It is absolutely free from rhetoric, or the claptrap of the professional orator. In expression the language is plain almost to austerity, but the closeness of the reasoning, the accuracy and range of information, the power of criticism and the originality of the comparisons cannot fail to impress the most superficial reader.

As we have already pointed out, the comparison of Lord Curzon with Aurangzeb is a flash of genius and deserves to be recorded in history. The predominant tone of the speech is as earnest as it is lofty, and the restraint all through the speech is admirable. The Congress met under circumstances peculiarly trying and difficult. The country was in a state of the greatest excitement owing to a series of measures which had exasperated the people. Problems of peculiar difficulty had to be dealt with by the President of the Congress, and the intensity of the feeling in the country precluded any special consideration being shown for the presidential address, if it failed to treat adequately those particular questions. But the Hon. Mr. Gokhale shirked or shelved nothing, and his courageous but at the same time temperate exposition of all the burning questions of the day has compelled admiration throughout the country. His speech maintains the best traditions of the Congress and will rank among the most important presidential addresses, and it is worthy of the high reputation enjoyed by Mr. Gokhale as one of our best politicians. It may not be out of place to mention here that, besides making a great speech, Mr. Gokhale proved his fitness for his great office by the manner in which he conducted the deliberations of the Congress and the Subjects Committee. His throat was bad when he arrived at Benares and he lost his voice utterly by the time the business of the Congress was finished, but in spite of this difficulty he displayed a tact, a power of conciliation, a presence of mind, and a firmness of authority which were admitted on all hands, and which contributed in no small measure to the success of the Congress. The Benares Reception Committee are to be sincerely and unreservedly congratulated on their choice of the President of the Congress.

ADVOCATE,
4th January, 1906.

The Congress session at Benares.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th January, says :—That God's hand is behind the Congress movement is once more brought to one's mind by the extraordinary success with which the Benares session of the Congress has just ended. Benares was a new place where the Congress had gone last year which was a year of turmoil and excitement, and both guests and hosts were afraid as to the fate of the movement, which let what may be said against its representative character, represented no doubt the opinion of educated Indians. We can say with satisfaction that the Congress gave expression to those opinions in a manner that has enhanced its utility and importance in the estimation of the people.

The Congress was fortunate in having Mr. Gokhale as its President, whose individuality attracted a very large number of people. Besides the 747 persons who attended the Congress as delegates, several thousands of persons who had attended the Session as visitors were thoroughly satisfied that the person whom they had elected as their chief this year was worthy of their confidence, and his inaugural address represented their views and the views of all educated Indians. Mr. Gokhale could not have better spoken with greater force than he did in raising his voice against the repressive and reactionary policy of the late head of the Government of India. Lord Curzon may be trying to satisfy his own conscience by the belief that he had carried out reforms which will benefit the administration of India. But the thinking portion of India believe that his undoubted abilities and inexhaustible energies were devoted to promoting class interests at the sacrifice of Indian interests. This Mr. Gokhale demonstrated in his address, and in this he had the support of the Indian public. Mr. Gokhale did not take up old themes : he did not enter into questions about the military policy of the Government of India ; the merits of the Kitchener-Curzon controversy had only an academic interest for Indians. Mr. Gokhale voiced the public opinion on questions affecting the well-being and progress of the mass of the population. Mr. Gokhale's presidential address is a remarkable document and we trust it will be considered as one of the model addresses, and will be classed as one of the best Congress deliverances.

The resolutions of the Congress by which alone the Congress as a body has to be judged were both respectful and manly, and they attempted to embody public opinion on all the burning questions of the day. That the Legislative Councils need expansion is an admitted fact, and we hope the Congress shall have not to wait long for a move in this direction. The Congress was bound to give out a sort of a tentative proposal as to the lines on which the desires of Indians for a share in the administration of the country can be satisfied. Giving seats in the Legislative Council without a voice in the Executive Councils of the country cannot be said to be giving a real share in the administration of the country. The resolution on Abkari deserves prominence in view of the Committee which the Government has been pleased to appoint. The Committee is touring in several parts of the country and it is well that the Congress should have placed its mature opinions before the body. The question of Public Service deserved all the attention which has been paid to it, and we must say that the resolution was ably discussed by both Mr. Samarath and Pandit Bishan Narain Dar, both of whom shattered to pieces the Government utterances in the Supreme Council, and the Government Resolution which tried to make out that Indians had got more than their share of higher appointments in the administration of the country. The Resolution passed by the Congress was on old lines, but the facts were new and the condemnation of the opponent's case was both strong and manly. The financial situation, the military policy, the treatment accorded to Indians in South Africa, the administration of justice—all deserved resolutions, and the Congress reiterated its mature views on these subjects.

Among the new subjects taken up by the Congress, the question of the Partition of Bengal and the repressive measures adopted in East Bengal, that of quarantine against Muhammadan pilgrims to the Hedjaz, deserved careful attention. Muhammadans bound for the Hedjaz are put to great inconvenience by a five days' quarantine at the Port of Bombay, besides 10 days' international quarantine at Kamran. The Congress was bound to enter its emphatic protest against this oppression on poor Muhammadans. It is very hard indeed for pilgrims to be detained in Bombay for five days when there is no such restriction against going to other European or even Turkish ports. The restriction becomes meaningless when it is known as a fact that the restriction is in force during the Hedjaz period, while in other parts of the year, whether there be plague or no plague, the people are allowed to proceed to Jedda without any restrictions whatsoever. It was natural that the question of Partition of Bengal and the repressive measures adopted in the old and the new Provinces of Bengal should invoke great discussion. It is no use concealing the fact that there is a great deal of difference of opinion between the Congress leaders on the subject. The difference is not as to the unsoundness of the policy which led to the division of Bengal against the unanimous opinion of the entire Province, or as to the need of a protest against the subversion of the principles of British administration in Eastern Bengal. The difference was only as to the manner of expressing the protest of the country. The partition was bad in principle; the manner in which it was carried out extremely objectionable. The affront given to public opinion in Bengal was most annoying, and the Congress could not use milder terms than those which it adopted in giving expression to its views on the subject. The tale of oppressions in Eastern Bengal unfolded day after day by the Bengal press and given out on the Congress platform was a tale surely not worthy of administrators who claimed to rule the country on British principles of justice and regard for constitution. The Congress, while fully keeping out the Swadeshi movement from the vortex of party politics, could not but look upon the boycott movement as the last constitutional protest against a policy distasteful to the country. Boycott as an anti-foreign movement could not and would not receive the approval of the Congress, but as a means to an end it was the only method which could be adopted in Bengal against a policy which had almost threatened the disruption of the growing sense of nationality in Bengal. The task before the Congress was very delicate, but we are satisfied that it has been discharged to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. The question that threatened to cause great differences of opinion was solved in a manner highly creditable to the entire body.

Appointment of the Hon'ble Pandit Sunder Lal, Rai Bahadur, as Vice-Chancellor of the Allahabad University.

ADVOCATE, 4th January, 1906.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th January, says:—We are delighted to hear that His Honour the Chancellor has been pleased to appoint Pandit Sunder Lal, Rai Bahadur, Vice-Chancellor of the Allahabad University. This is a high honour and compliment to the educated community of the United Provinces and will be fully appreciated by the public. Pandit Sunder Lal is, we believe, the fourth Indian who has been given this high position which he so richly deserves, and we hope that during his incumbency the University will discharge its functions in as excellent a manner as it is possible to expect.

The proposed Hindu University at Benares.

ADVOCATE, 4th January, 1906.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th January, says:—For some months last year the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya in consultation with a number of friends had been preparing a scheme for the education of Hindus throughout India on national lines. He has now one ready. The scheme provides for literary, religious, scientific and technical education. This was explained to an influentially-attended consultation meeting held on Sunday last in the Town Hall of Benares. The account given by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya was heard with all attention, and was followed by a discussion in which Mr. Tilak, Mr. Madholkar, Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji, Mr. Subramanya Iyer, Dewan Bahadur Ambalál, Mr. N. Subba Row took part. The meeting was indeed a scene of much enthusiasm created by the Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal and Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji. Mr. Surendra Nath appealed to Munshi Madho Lal to crown the evening of his life by a crowning act of endowing the proposed University with a munificent gift. Munshi Madho Lal said that the idea was old and he himself believed that a University founded to teach Vedas and Shastras could keep pace with the times, as the Vedas did not stand in the way of the people to keep abreast with the times. He said he would endow it with property yielding an annual profit of Rs. 10,000. His heirs would, he stipulated, be free to get the property released by making a payment of three lakhs. This announcement and the enthusiasm of the Munshi for holy Kashi electrified the audience. Pandit Madan Mohan said that he had two offers more of three lakhs each. Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji promised to devote the evening of his life to the institution. Mr. Tilak promised three years of his life to it. So did Mr. Bajika whose family will be taken care of by Mr. Karandikar, also Professor Bhanu and Mr. G. Subramanya Iyer. Some more announcements of funds were made. At a hurriedly called meeting in the Congress Pandal after the Social Conference the announcement was made in the course of a lecture by Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji that the Hindu University which will not be closed against Muhammadans and Christians will soon come into existence. A representative Committee has been formed to settle the scheme.

Famine in the United Provinces.

RAJPUT, 31st December, 1905.

10. The Rájpút (Agra), of the 31st December, 1905, referring to the distressed condition of both men and cattle in the villages of the United Provinces on account of failure of rain, appeals to Government to start famine relief works at once to save people from starvation, and to do something to preserve plough cattle. The writer has heard that the Government has issued orders directing land revenue to be remitted in those villages where the deficiency in the produce of the soil has been 12 annas in the rupee, and to be suspended where the deficiency is smaller. But it is said that the Tahsildars are not willing to honestly carry out the benevolent orders of the Government, and, giving a more favourable account of crop reports than is warranted by actual state of things, seek to realize as much revenue as they possibly can squeeze out, deeming it to be their most commendable duty.

ADVOCATE,

Sir Bamfylde Fuller on the working of the Assam Labour Laws.

11. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th January, says:—Sir Bamfylde Fuller is a free trader in coolies for Assam tea gardens, if not so in the development of Indian arts and industries. He is a follower of Sir Henry Cotton in two things: partition of Bengal and labour laws of Assam. He was against the former but is busy working it out, and that with zest. This sounds curious, but is nevertheless a fact, a painful and even irritating fact. On the penal laws of labour for Assam he seems to be a friend of the coolie. Sir Henry Cotton wanted to see Act I of 1882 repealed. Lord Curzon would not agree to the proposal. Amendment on important details was the next suggestion. As Chief Commissioner of Assam, Sir Henry Cotton introduced a Bill in the Supreme Legislative Council in the light of the alterations agreed to in the Home Department. These referred to raising of wages and good treatment of labourers. Mr. Buckingham, as a representative of the planters, strenuously opposed Sir Henry Cotton's proposals. Lord Curzon threw the Chief Commissioner overboard. Act VI of 1901 was thus not a very great improvement upon the one it replaced.

But apparent failure is success. Sir Henry had then to yield, and in yielding he sowed the seeds of success for his scheme. Now many tea planters seek exemption of their gardens from the operation of the penal laws and welcome the concession when made as a great relief from a heavy pressure. The reason is obvious. For exercising the right of binding coolies to their indenture, of paying wages at a rate lower than what obtains in the bazar and of private arrest of runaways, the planter has to undergo a lot of trouble. Every garden that employs contract labour has to submit elaborate and frequent returns; it is liable to be minutely inspected by Government officials, one of them being the Civil Surgeon, who has the right to insist upon the adoption of expensive sanitary arrangements such as are not to be found elsewhere in the Indian Mofussil. If the death-rate exceeds a certain arbitrary limit, the contracts of the coolies may be cancelled, and they may be repatriated at the employers' expense. All these and many other minute regulations the planter has to endure in order that he may be allowed to keep the coolie to his indenture, and to prevent him from running away before he has worked out the cost of his importation. This is irksome to a degree. And the abuses of the law by young planters have made it a dreaded engine of oppression. The news has spread far and wide; and now, recruiting Sirdars find it hard to secure labour even from congested parts of India.

With an eye to business, planters in gardens near civilization began to envy the employers of ordinary labour. Chittagong for the first time prayed for, and got exemption from the provisions of the Act of 1882. The result was a natural flow of labour that side. Southern Sylhet and Southern Cachar followed suit, and now have nothing to do with the contract labour law. Progress in this line has been rather rapid. It is said the planters of Sylhet and Cachar have applied for the exclusion of their gardens from Act VI of 1901. That is to say, it has not taken long to see that labour travels speedily towards and works contentedly in places where the normal conditions prevail. Supply hardly falls short of the demand in Chittagong, Sylhet and Cachar. The horrors of avoidable troubles being over, coolies feel no uneasiness to crowd these districts and the planters are never in want of labour. In the Duars, Darjeeling and its Tarai new laws to regulate labour in the spirit of the Assam enactments were never before, much less now, needed. Not unoften it has been the case that gardens worked by labour under ordinary conditions have produced the best varieties of tea.

There is thus a great possibility, nay probability, that the Act VI of 1901 will in a short time become obsolete by the planters giving up its use. Sir Bamfylde Fuller means to give it a push, not to throw it altogether overboard, but to maim it seriously. We know that the tea gardens of Upper Assam are still unpopular among the classes from which labour is recruited. This is so in spite of the fact that the general conditions of the Brahmaputra Valley have vastly improved. Means of communication has been speedier and public health improved, and yet labour fights shy of the place. The Lieutenant-Governor has been busy finding out the reason for this peculiar circumstance. He has discovered it in the penal clauses of Act VI of 1901. He is now for placing Lakhimpur and Sibsagar on an equal footing with Sylhet and Cachar. This may, in spite of the Act, be done if planters are relieved of the right of private arrests of runaways. This is Sir Bamfylde Fuller's view. He has addressed a note to planters on the subject. The result has been a protest that is less loud but no less firm.

Once at least we have been given an opportunity to agree with Sir Bamfylde Fuller. The Congress has from a long time been asking for the repeal of the Assam Labour Laws in order to induce better flow of labour towards Assam, and for its regulation there under normal conditions. Sir Bamfylde Fuller has seen the force, and may be expected to advance materially, if not bring into complete fruition, the seed sown by Sir Henry Cotton. The planters have no reason to get alarmed. We are disposed to think that the proposal does not mean a free permission to coolies to roam about, leaving their work unfinished in the gardens, but that it simply intends to relieve the planter from the discharge of an unpleasant duty, all the same enjoying the privileges of contract labour through State interference.

MOHINI,
9th January, 1906.

A suggestion to the Prince of Wales to learn the true condition of the people of India from independent non-official quarters.

1. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 9th January, says that though the Prince of Wales has now been in India for two months, he can hardly have learnt anything about the real condition of the people, his time having chiefly been taken up by the Government officials, Maharajas, Rajas, Nawabs, and well-to-do titled native gentry, who are the last men to give His Royal Highness an insight into the true state of things in the country. The true condition of the Indians is not what the Prince might infer from the pompous displays of wealth and riches he has witnessed wherever he has gone. The great majority of the people have been reduced to great straits owing to the ever-recurring visitations of famine, and a multitude of taxes; so that if the Prince happens to carry back to England an impression of India's prosperity on account of his not being allowed to know anything of the inner life and misery of the people, it will indeed be a great misfortune of India. If His Royal Highness desires to gather a correct knowledge of the people, that might be useful to him in future, he would do well to read some of the leading native papers, and graciously accord interviews to those promoters of the Indian National Congress who have been devoting their lives in order to ameliorate the condition of their fellow countrymen, and keep the Government well informed of their actual wants and grievances. The editor in conclusion prays His Royal Highness to get India relieved of the burden of some of the taxes in commemoration of his visit to this country.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
11th January, 1906.

The Prince of Wales, and the Kumbh Mela.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 11th January, says :—It seems a real pity that Allahabad has been left out of the programme of the Royal tour in India, for during the Kumbh Mela the site of the confluence of the Ganges and the Jumna will present a spectacle which cannot only not be seen anywhere in India, but nowhere else in the world. The Kumbh comes round only once in twelve years, and it is nowhere so impressive a sight as at Allahabad. At Hardwar, for instance, the pilgrims and the sanyasis are scattered over a wide area, and one has to wander over the whole camp to form an idea of the number of people assembled. The way to the Brahma Kunda, where the pilgrims bathe, is through a single street lined with high houses on both sides. At Allahabad the scene is quite different. Standing on the high riverside of the Ganges, or inside the fort one can command a bird's-eye view of the entire wonderful panorama—the groups of the huts with their distinctive flags floating over them, the wonderful groups of sádhus assembled in front of them, and the moving masses of humanity coming and going at all hours. Nothing would have been easier than to arrange that the Prince of Wales should witness the great bathing ceremony from either the riverside or the fort. It would have left an indelible impression upon his mind and would have been alone worth a visit to India. Being in the country, it is to be greatly regretted that his Royal Highness should miss witnessing one of the most wonderful sights that can be seen anywhere in the world.

HINDOSTHAN,
8th January, 1906.

The English Hindosthán on the Congress session at Benares.

3. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 8th January says :—Once more the Congress has been enacted, this time at the ancient city of Benares, the home and cradle of Hinduism. Its very sanctity as the seat of Hindu religion should have saved it from such desecration. We have frequently expressed our disapproval of its methods; its extravagant pomp and pageantry; its very worthlessness as a political gathering has been proved years ago. Before writing further, we may say, without fear of reasonable contradiction, that mere lip-oratory has failed as it ought to fail. This being the case, not only do the rulers desire, but we also wish to be convinced by better argument than mere rhetoric. In all these years what have they done, what have these Congressmen themselves done for the betterment of the masses for whose welfare they are so apt to wax eloquent on the Congress platform ? There is little exertion required in saying, " Do this, do that," but what have the orators done for the masses? What sacrifice have they undergone for them? How many of them have built homes for the poor and destitute? How many have provided shelter and food for the orphans who during a famine season die from starvation? How many give in proportion to their means towards such benevolent acts of charitableness? Those men who vaunt only of their education and agitate in the political field—what have they done for their countrymen? We believe lakhs of rupees have been wasted in this Congress tomfoolery. Had the money been utilized in setting up weaving mills and other factories for the manufacture of indigenous goods, and encouragement given to the revival of Indian arts and industries, what a vast amount of good would have accrued to the country and their countrymen, who place no trust in the glamour of political agitation and high sounding phrases, which not half their hearers understand.

Summary deportation of an Indian from Australia last year.

4. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th January, says:—Smuggling of undesirable persons from any country and their deportation to other countries are generally unheard of in these days, much less with the sanction of some responsible authority, and that the Premier of a Government. Yet such an occurrence happened in the civilised colony of Australia with the approval of the first adviser of the Commonwealth. The Tribune publishes the information how Pandit Mool Chand of Lahore was deported early last year in such a summary and ruthless fashion from Fremantle, West Australia. After he had been in the country six months, making an honest living with the help of Punjabi friends already settled there, he was asked to leave by the authorities. His Australian and Indian friends advised him that as he was well educated, and a subject of the British Crown, he did not come under the head of undesirable Asiatics whom British Colonials in all parts of the world were bent on keeping out of their "preserves." So Pandit Mool Chand stayed on, awaiting developments. One morning two men called at his house and said that the Customs Officer wished to see him, and was waiting for him at the jetty. There he was told that the official was on the steamer moored alongside. All unsuspecting he crossed the gangway, and no sooner he stepped on board than he was made prisoner by his companions, who then revealed themselves as detectives in plain clothes! The vessel started a few minutes later, and he was landed at Colombo. He was in his ordinary clothes at the moment of kidnapping with only a few shillings in his pockets. He would have been literally stranded and friendless in Ceylon had he not been helped by charitable Hindus. This outrage was committed by the Customs Officer under the orders of the Premier. It is said that the Pandit's friends in Australia have instituted legal proceedings against the official who sanctioned the deportation. It is expected of the India Government to exact reparation for the aggrieved Pandit from the Commonwealth. Lord Curzon taught a lesson to Natal when that Colony asked for indentured labour from India, but forgot to give the order to treat educated Indians well. Lord Minto may do no better than champion the cause of our Punjabi friend.

Punishment by whipping in prison and court.

5. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th January, says:—Sir Henry Cotton has written a note on corporal punishment in India in which he shows the effect of whipping in goals and as a judicial penalty. The result in both cases is disastrous: in the one to life and health and in the other to morals and prospects in life. Being criminals, society takes very little notice of the treatment the jail population receive at the hands of the authorities: offenders against society have of course no right to its sympathy. It is more due to this apathy—to some extent justified—that oppressions and outrages committed in jails and havaldis are very little inquired into by the public, much less rouse any great indignation in the popular mind.

* * * * * * * *

The death-rate in jails in England has dwindled to less than 4 per thousand, the lowest figure for Bengal recorded is 23 per mille, about six times as great as the jail mortality in England. The rattan has been known to be an inevitable cause of ill-health and even death. Apart from this aspect of the case, mortality in Indian jails is still a disquieting feature. The authorities here take refuge under the comfortable idea that mortality inside prisons is lower than that outside. Herein lies the mistake of the comparison. There are no children in jails and very few old men. To be fair the comparison should be, not with the general death-rate, but with the mortality among adults of the same age as those in jail. Even the present rate is a proof of the insufficiency, if not absence, of humane principles in the administration of Indian prisons.

As a judicial punishment too, whipping is a discredited instrument. In a letter addressed to the Bengal Government in August last, the British Indian Association of Calcutta appealed for the repeal of the Whipping Act of 1864. Whipping is indeed a remnant of times long past, an anachronism in India at the present day. There is no doubt that "it is cruel in its inception, and brutalising and demoralising in its consequences, and that it is ineffective in the way either of reformation or example." Its first effect is upon the life and health of the person flogged. Sir Henry Cotton has known of floggings so severe that the victims have died on the triangles to which they are tied up. Many feel dazed after release from the triangle and then suffer from fever and sore buttocks for a pretty long time. Socially it brands a man so as to make him banned by society, and thus excluded from many useful employments. Like jail life, it confirms the convict in a life of crime. As a deterrent this form of punishment fails miserably. Crimes of passion are not deterred for fear of whipping, and those of deliberation are prevented only by the absolute certainty of detection and sure conviction by magistrates. For both these guarantees a better police and a more efficient magistracy are needed more than whipping. While innocent persons may be and are actually convicted by young and untrained magistrates, whipping in such cases is a provoking form of punishment. Not the least objectionable feature is that it makes the constitutional right of appeal a nullity.

The Act was passed to prevent overcrowding in jails—a nice argument indeed; for the punishment, much less the reformation of the criminal, was no factor in its passing, but avoidance of possible congestion in the so-called houses of correction. The Act authorises the infliction of the punishment in a vast number of cases, such as petty theft and the like, and has led to the grossest abuses. The number of judicial floggings in India—where, it must be remembered, crimes of violence are extremely rare—almost exceeds belief. In 1878 there were 75,223 judicial floggings, in 1897 the number was 64,087 and in 1900 it was 45,054. In 1902, the last year for which figures are available, it was 23,186. There is considerable fluctuation year by year, and the practice of resorting to whipping varies in different provinces. It is most frequent in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, where in 1878 the number was 34,749 and in 1897, 24,818. So in brutality of treatment of the criminal these Provinces have won an unenviable notoriety. And yet magistrates are reminded that the cane is not oftener used to save jails and reformatories from overcrowding!

Thefts in the Allahabad city.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 11th January, says:—Owing to the approach of the full moon there is a lull in the thefts which have become so frequent of late in the city of Allahabad. But it is certain that with the return of the dark fortnight of the new moon they will break out worse than before, and constant reports of undetected thefts may be expected. We are not aware that any special precautions have been taken, or that the police have received orders to keep a better lookout. At present the police are not called upon to make extraordinary efforts to suppress this particular form of crime against property. Chaukidars are employed in almost every bungalow in the civil station and many residents in the city keep their own watchmen. This in itself shows want of confidence in the police, and it is amply justified by the large percentage of failures to detect the thieves or recover stolen property. In some cases thefts are not even reported to the police on account of the unnecessary annoyance and trouble to which people are put, and the hopelessness of detection. The police come and make a fuss, put the servants to trouble and threaten them, ask awkward questions of the inmates and there the matter usually ends. There seems to be no detective talent in the police force as there is in the Punjab and Bengal, and no serious attempt is made to cope with the extraordinary increase of crime at particular seasons of the year.

ADVOCATE,
7th January, 1906,

Certain complaints against the Education Department in the United Provinces.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th January, publishes the following letter from a correspondent :—Sir—Though the posts of Sub-Deputy and Deputy Inspectors have been placed on a better footing than before, yet the fate of poor, unfortunate and hardworked teachers remains sealed. I know teachers, not one or two but dozens who have been serving the Department very successfully and creditably for many years and obtaining best results at the University examinations, but I am pained to say that not the least notice has been taken of them by the Department.

The Director, Assistant Director and the Head Clerk draw Rs. 2,150, Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 300 per mensem respectively, and it is a wonder that these officers drawing princely salaries cannot or do not pick up the right persons for promotion. Why is the service in the teaching line not graded ? Is it not the duty of these officers drawing such big salaries to grade the service, and so remove the seething discontent now prevailing throughout the whole of the teaching line.

Fancy the justice and fair play of the Department—a man serving the Department very creditably for the last few years lingers on, say, Rs. 40 or Rs. 50 a month, while an altogether new man is at once put in in Rs. 80 or Rs. 100 grade. The proper and just thing would have been to push forward those who were doing good work and replace them by new men. But in the Education Department hardworking and deserving men remain in the background, while fresh men are placed at the top. Next year another batch of fresh men comes and occupies the front places. Instances of such even-handed justice and fair play are not wanting, and I intend to enlighten my readers on the point in my next with a complete list of the so-neglected. Such an spectacle is only possible in the Education Department, which is headed by men of special qualifications. And it is for this injustice that even an average man is not willing to enter the Department which is the last resource of almost everyone. Moreover, a teacher's life has become very miserable now. He must first graduate himself, and then undergo the ordeal of the Training College, after passing which he must undergo fresh examinations twice a year before the Inspectors, for such is the circular of the Department. Is it not ridiculous that a graduate, nay a trained graduate, must be examined twice a year by the Inspector ? His fear of half-yearly examinations of himself hangs always over his head like the sword of Democles. The Inspector wants to see after every six months his (teacher's) mode of teaching. Pray, if he was not competent to teach, why was the Training College certificate granted to him ? Are the Training College authorities fools that they give certificates to incompetent men ? Is this not wanton insult to the learned Principal of the Training College who is a specialist in the Art of Teaching, that his qualified and trained men must be judged by those who themselves are not trained, and cannot, as a matter of course, understand the value of training and of the Training College methods. Now-a-days the Inspectors on every visit examine the teachers and not the boys. Does not the whole thing look ridiculous ?

Look at another mandate of the department. The teachers were already not allowed to punish boys, I mean corporally. The only instrument left to them was fine. But the new mandate abolishes all sorts of fines as punishment. Look to the beauty and the excellent arrangement of the whole thing. All sorts of punishments have been abolished, and nothing new has been enacted in their place. Forsooth, a very nice thing indeed !

Such are the mysterious workings of the Education Department, and these the gods only can pry into and understand.

Such ugly things demand the serious attention of the higher authorities, and should be at once remedied. Now, Mr. Editor, it is your duty in the interests of public good to arouse the higher authorities to a sense of justice by a series of articles on the subject.

In conclusion, I beg the Hon'ble members of the Council, Messrs. Malaviya and Nihal Chand and others, to interpellate the Government on the deplorable state of affairs in the Educational Department in the United Provinces.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

The proposed Hindu University at Benares.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 7th January, says :—The statement which has been allowed to get abroad that the meeting at Benares in connection with the foundation of a Hindu University was organised by some Congress leaders is erroneous and misleading. The movement is not associated with the Congress and is absolutely non-political in character. The idea is that the leaders of the Hindu community throughout the country should co-operate in establishing a University which should, in addition to the usual secular education, impart moral and religious education to the students. That is the central idea, but round it cluster many others calculated to make the proposed University a perfectly complete and self-contained institution. To the outside on-looker the proposal of raising a crore of rupees for the University appears to be an ambitious and probably an impossible one, but the very beginning of the movement shows that the scheme is perfectly feasible and practical. Besides the contribution of three lakhs by the Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal, two other anonymous contributions of a similar amount have been announced. Thus, a tenth of the amount required for the University has already been promised. Further, the spirit that animates our wealthy and generous countrymen may be judged from the fact that donors of three lakhs of rupees have preferred to remain anonymous. Outside these Provinces men like Babu Surendranath Banerji, Mr. Tilak and Mr. G. Subramaniya Iyer have readily and voluntarily undertaken to devote all their energies in furtherance of this noble and great scheme. It is a distinctly all-India movement. Besides, it must be remembered that the University will not be kept in a state of suspended animation until the entire crore of rupees is realised. On the contrary, a beginning is likely to be made as soon as sufficient funds are forthcoming and the entire scheme will be gradually elaborated and expanded. At present there is no idea of appealing to the Government for help, but we are certain the scheme will not fail to enlist the sympathy and assent of the Government when it is placed before it in a definite shape. The main object of the University, we take it, is the formation of character, the promotion of plain living and high thinking, the revival of old ideals and wrapping them up in the daily conduct of life, and the growth of genuine earnestness among our young men. Finally, the University will not be exclusive or denominational but catholic and open as every university should be. If the idea is a great and ambitious one, the enthusiasm which has called it into being is also great and burning, and the start is full of promise. The scheme is deserving of the sympathy and good wishes of all our countrymen.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Appointment of the Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, a non-official Indian, as Vice-Chancellor of the Allahabad University.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 7th January, says :—The Government of the United Provinces deserves the first word of congratulation on the appointment of the Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Pandit Sundar Lal as Vice-Chancellor of the Allahabad University in succession to Sir George Knox, and our congratulations are next due to Pandit Sundar Lal himself and the community of which he is so distinguished a representative. It may be also noted that the Local Government has initiated a departure which may be well recommended to other provinces which claim to be more advanced. It is very rarely that a non-official is appointed Vice-Chancellor of an Indian University.

Among Indians on whom this honour has been conferred we can recall the names of the late Mr. Justice Telang, Sir Gurudas Banerji and Mr. Justice Pratul Chandra Chatterji, who were respectively appointed Vice-Chancellors of the Bombay, Calcutta, and Panjab Universities, but every one of them was a Judge of either a High Court or a Chief Court at the time. Of outsiders there are only two instances, Sir William Rattigan in the Panjab and Mr. T. Conlan in these Provinces; but this is the first time that an outsider, and an Indian at that, has been appointed Vice-Chancellor of an Indian University. The choice of Sir James LaTouche is singularly felicitous. Pandit Sundar Lal is not only the unquestioned leader of one section of the Allahabad Bar, but has long enjoyed a high reputation for his sagacity, sobriety, moderation of views and his conciliatory instincts. He will be careful to maintain the tradition of the Allahabad University and will, we are certain, prove an excellent executive head of its affairs, while his ripe wisdom and mature counsel will be at all times available in the affairs of the University. The appointment of Pandit Sundar Lal will be as popular as it is graceful.

Knox, I.C.S., of the Allahabad High Court, as Vice-Chancellor of the University of Allahabad. The appointment is a recognition of the sterling work done by Pandit Sundar Lal for the University for many years past, and will doubtless be received with satisfaction in University circles.

CENTRAL HINDU COLLEGE MAGAZINE,
January, 1906.

Swadeshism in the Central Hindu College.

11. The Central Hindu College Magazine (Benares), for January, says:—No country can escape severe poverty, if it has but one industry, and that industry, agriculture, and even that agriculture of a too narrow kind. Slowly and steadily India has been losing the arts, crafts, and industries, which once enriched her people. Her handicraftsmen, perfected by hundreds of generations, are being starved out, for lack of customers to buy their products. In the desperate attempt to save their dwindling trade, those that remain have copied bad Western models, and have striven to produce cheap and worthless goods to tempt "globe-trotters" into buying their wares. The cheapness is but apparent, for the work has become tenth-rate, the artistic goods vulgar and ill-finished, the cloths of little wearing value. A man buys a few cheap cloths every year, instead of a couple that last him for many years, and the prices of the "cheap" cloths added together are larger than the price paid for the good ones. Driven out of their own crafts by lack of customers, the craftsmen have betaken themselves to the one possible industry open to them—agriculture. Already overcrowded, it becomes more overcrowded still. The balance of industries is disturbed, ryot and craftsman no longer support each other, and, when a bad year comes, the impoverished ryot and the artisans turned into cultivators are all engulfed in the yawning abyss of famine.

For all this Swadeshism is the remedy, and hence we cannot afford to renounce it because some people are trying to use it for local instead of national, for political instead of economic, purposes. Bengal is but a single province, however important, and all the rest of India is not to be left to economic decay, because Bengal is temporarily disturbed. Let us all work quietly on, as we have been doing for years past, steadfastly pressing to the goal.

Our best C. H. C. Students have been inspired with the idea of Swadeshism for a long time, and the Committee has been exerting a gentle pressure in that direction. It has been trying to induce the boys to adopt a distinctive Indian dress, instead of the hybrid English costume which so many of them affect. At last this gentle pressure has taken effect, and in December the Boarders petitioned the Committee to sanction anew the dress it had already advised. This was at once done, with the proviso that the materials used must be Swadeshi, and a large number of boys at once adopted the dress. Arrangements are being made to keep a large supply of Indian-made cloth in stock, and to have a tailor living on the premises, so as to facilitate the general adoption of the selected dress. One of our teachers is taking interest in the improvement of the handlooms used in the Benares weaving-trade, and we shall have weaving taught in our Technical Institute. So it may be that, presently, good, cheap, hand-made cloth may be available from our own looms.

Other Colleges and Schools might take similar steps, and thus help forward the Swadeshi movement in the most practical manner. If, in addition, they will encourage some of their best students to take up industrial pursuits instead of crowding into law and Government service, they will make Swadeshism a success, and People and Government will alike rejoice.

HINDOSTHAN,
8th January, 1906.

The Swadeshi movement, and its dissociation from the Bengal Partition question.

12. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 8th January, says:—It seems that now the supporters of the Swadeshi movement have come to their right senses, and their opposition to the Bengali movement of separating the partition question was quite á propos. The opposition to the partition is a disloyal attitude; whereas the advocacy of the Swadeshi movement is a patriotic and constitutional policy. We have always advocated the Swadeshi movement as well as its dissociation from the partition question, and we are heartily pleased to see the people of our United Provinces adopting our policy at last. Banish all the foreign goods, when you can replace them by producing your own at a profitable rate. But it is a piece of folly to reject them and pay a higher price for Bombay and American goods.

EXPRESS,
11th January, 1906.

The Swadeshi movement and the Bengal Government.

13. The Express (Lucknow), of the 11th January, says:—Some people suppose that Government does not relish the Swadeshi movement. They, however, forget that there is Swadeshi and Swadeshi. The authorities cannot like the boycott of British goods, "the so-called Swadeshi Movement," and they are intensely opposed to it. But Swadeshim, when it is not directed against any nationality, when it is intended to benefit the natives of the soil, helps the Government in its task of diminishing the poverty of the country, and assists it in silencing the sinister "chantings of the dismal chorus" who spend their time in dwelling on the indigence of the Indian people. The development of indigenous industries has the hearty support of our rulers and they have more than once declared their sincere sympathy for true Swadeshi. Some Bengali papers have been asserting that Goverment in its heart of hearts does not like the movement, but the pronouncement at a recent meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council of the Hon'ble Mr. Carlyle, on this subject, must dissipate all such uncharitable suspicions. The Hon'ble Mr. Carlyle, replying to a question put by the Hon'ble Babu Ambika Charan Mazumdar, said, "Government is in favour of the development of indigenous industries in the province. Whether the Swadeshi movement in Bengal has given any real impetus to the development of indigenous industries it is too early to judge. A scheme for the establishment of a school at Serampore for the teaching of improved method of hand-weaving in silk, cotton and wool has been submitted to the Government of India. It is anticipated that this scheme, if sanctioned, will give the district boards and municipalities an opportunity of showing their interest in the matter. It will be seen from the annual Resolution regarding the working of district boards in Bengal of the last three years that everything possible is being done to introduce and popularise the fly-shuttle and other looms through the agency of district boards." Such declarations on the part of the authorities clearly show that if the movement fail, it will fail through our own lack of perseverance, and not through the adverse influence of any external circumstances.

Departmentalism in India.

14. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th January, says:—Lord Curzon had been the victim of a strange fate while in India. He rode rough over the views and sentiments of the people, his own subordinates in the several departments treated him thus in doing things in his name: he foisted upon the Indian public his latest scheme for dismembering Bengal working in the dark while maturing it, the Secretaries and Deputy Secretaries did no better in arriving at decisions on very important subjects that were to go out into the world in the name of the Viceroy and Governor General; he sought to induce the Indian public to accept his views as gospel truth without so much as attempting an exchange of ideas and thoughts with them, in the Departments of the India Government he was asked to put his seal and signature on opinions in no way his own.

* * * * * * *

It is an irresponsible Government that carries on the administration in India. This is the people's charge. Though formally answerable to the Secretary of State in Council, the Viceroy is practically allowed a very free hand, particularly so far as Indian interests are concerned. The circumstances under which the partition of Bengal was sanctioned bear out this assertion. On the spot again the heads of the various Provinces and Departments carry on matters with a very high hand and at times without the knowledge, much less permission, of the supreme head, the head of the India Government. In the districts again the officials do things pretty much in their own way without reference to higher authorities. Mr. Brodrick has given evidence to show how the Viceroy does whatever he likes without any interference from England; Lord Curzon proves how the Governor General is treated more as an ornamental figure-head, an official "to register the concluding stage" of any subject on which the Secretaries might set their hearts.

A memorial was submitted by Pandit Madan Mohan Misra and others in the Sambalpur district regarding the substitution of Hindi or Uriya as the Court Language of that district. It went through the proper channel from the district officer to the Local Administration; from the Chief Commissioner to the Secretary, in the Home Department, of the Government of India; and from there it went in different directions, coming back to and going again and again from the centre; at last it went to the Viceroy not for his consideration so much as for his signature, though he had been studiously kept in ignorance of the subject-matter under discussion and though the document which he was required to sign was to go into the world as the result of due deliberation by the Governor General in Council. This was a slight which Lord Curzon did not agree to submit to. So he made that the excuse for inditing a note on Departmentalism in India. To this anon. The discussion on the subject mooted by the memorial went on for more than a year without the head of the Government being made aware of it. The note is dated May 1902. Before this month Sir (then Mr.) A. Fraser had once been a guest in the Government House and had then made a casual reference to it in conversation and alluded to it in subsequent private correspondence. Lord Curzon writes: "And yet during this period Secretaries and Deputy Secretaries have been calmly carving about and rearranging Provinces on paper—colouring and recolouring the map of India according to geographical, historical, political or linguistic considerations—in the manner that appealed most to their fancy:" and finally on January 29, 1902, Sir C. Rivaz recorded that—

"The idea of transferring Orissa from Bengal to the Central Provinces must be dropped;" and that "The idea of forming Orissa into a separate Chief Commissionership cannot be entertained."

Naturally enough Lord Curzon got annoyed. In anger, no less in sorrow, he wanted to know if there was such a thing as a head of the Government, and asked what the Secretaries were for but to keep him acquainted with the administration. For more than a year a subject was under discussion without the Viceroy knowing a word about it. This brings us to the peculiar method that obtains in the administration of India by the Civil Service which seems jealous even of the Viceroy himself, the responsible head of the Government, what to say of the critics of State measures. Says Lord Curzon:—"People sometimes ask what Departmentalism is. To any such I give this case as an illustration. Departmentalism is not a moral delinquency. It is an intellectual hiatus—the complete absence of thought or apprehension of anything outside the purely departmental aspects of the matter under discussion. For 14 months it never occurred to a single human being in the Departments to mention the matter, or to suggest that it should be mentioned. Round and round, like the diurnal revolution of the earth, went the file, stately, solemn, sure, and slow: and now, in due season, it has completed its orbit, and I am invited to register the concluding stage."

Then the ex-Viceroy made an attempt to bring home to the party at fault the gravity of the blunder or the absurdity of the situation. Imagine, he says, the Colonial Office debating for a year the repartition of the Australian Continent, the incorporation of Tasmania, or the sub-division of New South Wales—and never letting Mr. Chamberlain know. Imagine a discussion as to the boundaries of the Orange River Colony and Natal without the knowledge of Lord Milner. Imagine a Redistribution Bill in England behind the back of the Prime Minister. But the beauty of the situation sought to be created lay in the fact that while the Government of India was to say that it was of opinion "that the existing territorial divisions should not be disturbed," the Government should, the very next moment, according to Mr. Ibbetson, formally take into consideration the transfer of Orissa to the Central Provinces, thus blowing hot and cold at one and the same breath.

This invaluable document, the note of May 1902, reveals also another fact. The then approaching incorporation of Berar in British India actually gave rise to the suggestion made in Council by the ex-Viceroy to take up the subject of readjustment of boundaries all round. It was put in the form of questions thus: (1) Assam—is Assam to have a maritime exit—i.e., shall we transfer Chittagong? (2) Bengal—is Bengal overswollen, i.e., shall we cut off Chittagong and Orissa? (3) Madras—should any Uriya-speaking people remain under Madras? (4) Central Provinces—shall they have a port? Shall they absorb all the Uriya-speaking people? How much of Berar shall be given to them? (5) Bombay—shall we give to them the Mahratta district of the Central Provinces and Berar? (6) The Punjab—if Bombay is thus augmented shall we dock it of Sind and hand over Sind to the Punjab? It incidentally shows on the one hand what a big scheme was in contemplation, and how within a very small period questions affecting the interests and sentiments of millions are mooted, considered and disposed of without any regard being paid to the opinion of those vitally interested, not even allowing them an opportunity to express their views.

Need for constant inspection of food-stuffs offered for sale at the Kumbh Mela.

15. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 11th January, says:—The following Press communique, dated the 8th instant, has been issued by the Local Government:—"A few cases of cholera having occurred at Magh Mela Fair, Allahabad, the public are warned of the risk which they run in attending the fair, although every precaution has been, and is being taken to prevent infection of the site." This warning, we take it, is intended for those who go to see the tamásha and not for the pilgrims, who will not be deterred by fear either of the cholera or anything else, and the Government has of course no intention of prohibiting the fair itself. Besides the precaution that are being taken by the authorities, the frost that has been falling during the last few days may help in stamping out the disease before it assumes an epidemic form. It is certain that the cases of cholera reported were not due to insanitary conditions but probably to bad food. There must be careful and constant inspection of the foodstuffs offered for sale, the milk, ghi and oil supplied to the pilgrims, and the sweets and other edibles prepared and sold on the site.

Some suggestions to the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway re the Kumbh mela traffic.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th January, says:—The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway have taken pains to assure intending visitors to Allahabad during Kumbha between 4th and 24th January that every attention will be paid to their convenience. This announcement will relieve people of great anxiety. Two or three points need special attention. To commence with, we think the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway should see that no special trains arrive at Allahabad after sun-set; all trains full with pilgrims must arrive during the hours of the day. For ordinary night train special arrangements should be made at the Allahabad station, where lighting is defective. The Oudh and Rohilkhand railway station of Allahabad is yet under construction. As the construction cannot be finished before 24th January, we would suggest that in the meantime the contractors should be asked to keep the platform clear of all building materials. Then, one ladder to the over-bridge is not quite enough. The ticket collectors, instead of collecting tickets at the end of the ladder, should stand at the other side, and thus prevent rush on the ladder. It would be more convenient to have collection of tickets at Allenganj or even at Phaphamow, so that there be no unnecessary detention of passengers nor breakage of limbs. The four third class booking offices established on the grounds of the mela will prove of immense advantage. If the rolling stock proves equal to the demands of the six or seven lakhs of passengers, one-third of the number that are expected to visit Allahabad will go back heartily satisfied with what is being done for their convenience.

VII.—Post Office.

UNION GAZETTE, 7th January, 1906.

Alleged need of a post office at Mirpur, district Pilibhit.

17. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th January, states, on the authority of a correspondent, that the want of a post office at Mírpur, a village in the Pilibhít district, is much felt by the residents. The village has a comparatively large population, and a school. It is at present served by the post office at Bisalpur, but as a river runs between the two localities, the post is not received regularly, especially during the rainy season. The Postmaster-General would therefore do well to establish a post office at Mírpur.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
8th January, 1906.

Proposed release of some prisoners in Burma in honour of the Royal visit.

1. THE Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 8th January, referring to the proposed release of a number of well-behaved prisoners, and the reduction in the terms of imprisonment of some others in Burma, in honour of the visit of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to that province, says that it has not heard anything as to whether the Royal visit has been or will be similarly signalized in other provinces of India.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
14th January, 1906.

Royal gifts to places of worship.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th January, says:—We have been noting the presents made by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to the places of worship visited by him. The first offering was at the golden Temple at Amritsar where His Royal Highness presented Rs. 1,500. A similar amount was presented to the Juma Masjid at Delhi. Before leaving Calcutta His Royal Highness sent a similar amount to the Lord Bishop for the Cathedral. Thus the Prince of Wales has made offerings to Sikh, Muhammadan and Christian places of worship. Up to the present, however, no such offering has been made at any Hindu shrine. There was some likelihood of such a present being made to Káli's temple at Kalighat in Calcutta, but the Royal visitors did not pay a visit to that shrine. We hope that during the Royal visit to Benares the Prince of Wales will present the same amount that he has given at other places to the temple of Viswanáth. Hinduism is followed by the largest number of people in India, and Hindus form the vast majority of the population. They are also the most intelligent and loyal section of the population. When His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has presented a uniform sum of money to every religious shrine or church, it would be both wise and graceful not to overlook the claims of the Hindu religion. We do not believe there is any difficulty in making such a present, while its omission may lead to disappointment and misconception which are in the highest degree undesirable. The amount of the present is of no consequence, it is the sentiment that means everything. Since His Royal Highness has associated himself with every other religious institution, the most ancient and the most largely followed religion of the country should not be overlooked.

CITIZEN,
15th January, 1906.

The Prince and Princess of Wales at Calcutta, and the middle class Bengalis.

3. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 15th January, says:—We are glad that in his presidential address at the last Congress, Mr. Gokhale referring in the most loyal terms to the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India, observed "the throne in England is above all parties—beyond all controversies." We must say that it is a pity that in Bengal the middle classes have shown themselves to be oblivious of this truth. Many of the members of these classes abstained from taking any part in the loyal demonstrations held in Calcutta in honour of the Prince and the Princess' visit. We wonder that the Bengal leaders did not point out the obvious truth that it was unconstitutional to let politics intermingle with our attitude towards the King-Emperor or the heir-apparent. If we must insist on the Government to be constitutional, we ourselves must be so in every particular. The plea that the Government of India often acts unconstitutionally justifies our acting so, is not sound; and we repeat it has not been at all wise on the part of our Bengal friends to boycott the Prince. Moreover, the very circumstance that His Royal Highness has in his speeches delivered in India given expression to very kind sentiments towards the people, and has in Bombay granted an interview to an ex-President of the Congress to learn from him all about the wants, grievances and aspirations of the Indian people, should have persuaded our brethren in Bengal not to ostracize him in the way they have done. Finally, the Prince and the Princess being our guests, no Hindus should have turned their backs on him. We cannot certainly believe that the attitude of our Bengal friends towards the Prince will expedite the withdrawal of the partition scheme.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
12th January, 1906.

The Congress, and its protest against the quarantine imposed at Bombay on Muhammadan pilgrims bound for Mecca.

4. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 12th January, referring to a Resolution passed by the Indian National Congress at its last Session at Benares, condemning the quarantine imposed at Bombay upon Muhammadan pilgrims bound for Mecca, says that there was no need for the Congress to take this trouble and do a seeming favour to the Musalmans, as the latter themselves had already made a representation to the Government on the subject, and hoped that it would be favourably considered. There is little doubt that the Congress passed the Resolution in question at the instance of the few Muhammadans who have joined it to pass themselves off as leaders of their community, and with a view to make the Musalmans believe that it does not sympathize with the grievances of Hindus alone. But the Muhammadan public, knowing how prejudicial the Congress movement is to their interests, are hardly likely to be duped by such tricks on their part.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
16 thJanuary, 1906.

The National Congress, and the Musalmans.

5. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 16th January, says that it was queer logic on the part of the Hindustáni to infer, from the presence of five or six Musalmans at the last session of the Congress at Benares, that there are now very few men in India who are opposed to the Congress movement. Besides the fact that some of these few Musalmans were only students, none of them were men of any position or influence, and hence they could, in no sense, be taken to be representatives of the sixty million Muhammadan population in India. As regards the large gathering of the Hindus at the Benares Congress from all parts of the country, it was chiefly due to the attraction of the Industrial Exhibition, the Social Conference and the Swadeshi movement, to which nobody can have any objection, though the Musalmans should still think well before they take (active) part in any of them.

HINDI-URDU SAMACHAR,
November and December, 1905.

Complaint regarding the non-publication of its proceedings by the Municipal Board of Etawah.

6. The Hindi-Urdu Samáchár (Etáwah), in its joint issue for November and December, 1905, says that, as the Municipal Board of Etáwah does not publish its proceedings in the local papers, and the people are consequently left in the dark as to new rules or taxes it proposes from time to time, they get no opportunity to express their opinions thereon. To remove this reasonable complaint of the people, the editor advises the Board to publish its proceedings in his paper for the information of both Hindi and Urdu-knowing persons.

ADVOCATE,
14th January, 1906.

Sale of pork in the cantonment market at Bareilly.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th January, says:—A correspondent from Bareilly strongly objects to the Cantonment Magistrate's order for the sale of pork in the cantonment market. This was never done in the past and has caused some annoyance. The pork-seller might be told to open the shop at an unfrequented place.

NASIM-I-HIND,
15th January, 1906.

Complaint regarding the butchers cleansing hides in an inhabited part of the town at Fatehpur.

8. The Nasim-i-Hind (Fatehpur), of the 15th January, says that butchers collect hides in a house in muhalla Panni at Fatehpur, and cleanse them there. This is calculated to endanger the health of the people, and the Municipal Secretary should see that the cleansing of hides is done outside the municipal limits.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th January, 1096.

Need for better lighting and watering the pilgrims' camps and the streets at the Kumbh Mela, Allahabad.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th January, says:—During the annual Mágh Mela a considerable revenue is derived from the pilgrims, the boatmen, the boat bridge at Daraganj and other sources. On the occasion of the Kumbh this revenue is much larger, and it is supposed to be spent in providing comforts for the pilgrims and the Sádhus, and giving them medical and other help. The municipal arrangements, however, are extremely unsatisfactory. We do not know whether the matter drew the attention of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor the day he inspected the camp on the eastern side of the Ganges as well as the huts on the western side. There are a few scattered lights on the roadside, but there is absolutely no arrangement for lights in the various camps where Sádhus and pilgrims are located. The fires lighted by the former, and the chirágs afford a dim, uncertain light in the huts, but for the rest the whole encampment, covering an area of several square miles, is in intense darkness immediately after nightfall, and it is difficult to pick one's way from one hut to another. There are no lamp-posts and no lamps anywhere in the camps. We are not aware whether the chaukidárs placed in charge of the camps at night are provided with lanterns, or whether any special precautions are taken to prevent thefts on dark nights. There are no arrangements, again, for watering the streets. The dust is in some measure unavoidable, on account of the sandy nature of the soil, the breeze that blows during the day and the tramp of many millions of feet over the roads and the sands. But it seems rather invidious that only a small length of the street in front of the principal police officer's quarters should be watered, while all the main streets leading to the riverside from the city, Colonelganj and Katra, are never watered, and the dust is allowed to lie ankle-deep in most places. We think there are ample funds at the disposal of the Mágh Mela Committee to permit of both better lighting and better watering the streets. Even from a sanitary point of view, measures should be taken to lay the dust as far as practicable, for the thick and fine dust is calculated to produce irritation of the throat and lungs, and it is disquieting to learn that several cases of pneumonia are reported from the city. The precautions that have been taken for the proper management of the fair should have included measures for the better watering and lighting of the streets.

ADVOCATE,
14th January, 1906.

Delay in the payment of salaries to village teachers in the Sultanpur district.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th January, says:—A correspondent from Sultanpur complains that village teachers do not get their pay at the proper time when they should. This causes an amount of inconvenience which should be avoided.

CITIZEN,
15th January, 1906.

Appointment of the Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal as Vice-Chancellor of the Allahabad University.

11. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 15th January, says:—The appointment of the Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal to the Vice-Chancellorship is a distinction conferred on the Indian community of these parts, of which we may well be proud. Like the rains descending from the heavens above, which clothe the earth as with a green mantle, this honour comes to him unsolicited and unsought. It did not cost him any making of patriotic speeches, and canvassing for votes or any self-parade as a means to future eminence. He is one of the most genuine and earnest men, and his earnestness is equalled by his modesty and goodness. On the University platform, he has for years been a prominent worker, but he has ever done his work without noise and without stir. By his manifold virtues he has well earned for himself a right to this appointment, and we have great pleasure in offering him our sincere congratulations.

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL,
1st and 16th January, 1906.

Appointment of the Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal as Vice Chancellor of the Allahabad University.

12. The Allahabad Law Journal, in its joint issue of the 1st and 16th January, says:—The Government of these Provinces has never shown so much good sense, or so much regard for the opinion of the educated community as it has by offering the Vice-Chancellorship of the Allahabad University to the Hon'ble Pandit Sundar Lal, Rai Bahadur, who has accepted the offer. Of Pandit Sundar Lal as a lawyer, it is hardly necessary to say anything more than that his high talents and high character have long since placed him in the front rank of the Bar, and won for him the admiration and respect of all those who have to come into contact with him. His work in the University has been hardly less solid, and those who have the privilege of knowing Pandit Sundar Lal well enough, know that there has never been a more active, more regular, better informed and altogether more capable Fellow of the Allahabad University than he. The office of a Vice-Chancellor is not merely one of honour—great as no doubt it is—but it is also one of great responsibility. That Pandit Sundar Lal is eminently qualified to share this honour with the four or five Indians who have occupied this office in other Indian Universities, nobody will for a moment question, and that he will rise equal to the responsibility of the position we may confidently assert. The appointment of Pandit Sundar Lal to this high office will be particularly gratifying to that section of the Bar of which he is an ornament and pride, as we believe, he is the first Indian Vakil who has risen to this prominence. With him to guide and control the affairs of the University, the educated community may well look forward to a hopeful future for high education in these Provinces. We do not know whom we should congratulate more—whether Pandit Sundar Lal or His Honour Sir James LaTouche—the former for the recognition of his high merits as a Senator, or the latter for the happy and wise selection he has made.

Complaint regarding the alleged high-handed treatment of villagers by subordinate Government officials.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
31st December, 1905.

13. The Almora Akhbár of the 31st December, 1905, referring to the late appointment of a Liberal Ministry in England, says, that it matters little to Indian peasantry whether the Liberal or Conservative Party is in power at Home, inasmuch as their lot has continually been going from bad to worse. Formerly when Commissioners, Deputy Commissioners and other Government high officials went out on tour, they allowed people free access to them and patiently heard what they had to say. All this is changed now, and the villagers are left to the sweet mercy of the tahsildars, naib tahsildars, rangers, foresters, forest guards and patwáris, who are free to deal with them as they please, higher officials never caring to know or enquiring what is going on among the people.

Depredations of wild animals in Kumaun.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
31st December, 1905.

14. The Almora Akhbár, of the 31st December, 1905, says that since the people were disarmed, wild animals have greatly increased in Kumaun, and not only commit serious depredations in the fields, but carry away children from the outside of their very houses. The bears in the hills are far more ferocious and dangerous than those found in the plains; and the Government would do well to permit sportsmen among the people to carry arms after taking out a license for a few months during the year, and offer the same handsome reward for killing a bear as is given for a tiger.

(g).—General.

Suggestion for an increase in the number of public holidays granted for Muhammadan festivals in the United Provinces.

ZUL-QARNAIN,
14th January, 1906.

15. A correspondent of the Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 14th January, points out that while 12 days are gazetted as public holidays for Hindu festivals in the year, only 7 days are observed as such for Muhammadan festivals. The Muhammadans badly want an increase in the number of public holidays for their festivals to perform their religious ceremonies satisfactorily; and the writer would request the Government of the United Provinces to sanction one day's holiday for the last Friday of their fasting month of Razmán, 3 days for Id-ul-Fitr and 2 days for Id-uz-Zoha.

Begár system in the United Provinces.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
14th January, 1906.

16. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th January, referring to its late articles on the begár system in Allahabad and other places in the United Provinces, says:—If the local Government were to issue an open order that Tahsil peons are not to be employed in bringing artisans or conveyances for military officers and others, and that all wages should be paid for in cash and not by a system of bills, the begár system would receive its quietus at once.

AL BASHIR,
16th January, 1906.

Al Bashír on the agitation re the Partition of Bengal and Swadeshi movement.

17. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 16th January, refuses to agree with the Paisa Akhbár of Lahore in thinking that the action of the authorities was cruel and tyrannical in dismissing as many as 63 clerks at one time from Government service in East Bengal, for their taking part in the Bengal Partition agitation and Swadeshi movement. The Government of India has distinctly laid down that no Government servant should take an active part in any political movement whatever, and if the misguided clerks in question had the hardihood of defying this order they are themselves to blame for the misfortune they have brought on themselves. The editor is especially very anxious for the fate of those Muhammadan co-religionists of his in Bengal who are foolish and weak-minded enough to allow themselves to be cajoled by the Bengalis into joining the Swadeshi movement set up by them; and warns them to give a wide berth to the movement, lest, simple as they are, they should have to suffer, in the long run, for the mischief originated by the Bengalis, and the latter escape with the help of their education, power and wealth.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th January,
1906.

Lord Minto on the partition of Bengal, and the recent incidents in East Bengal.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th January, says:—On the 12th instant Lord Minto received an address of welcome from the Indian Association of Calcutta, the deputation being headed by Babu Surendra Nath Banerjea, the Secretary of the Association. It will be remembered that shortly after Lord Minto's arrival in Calcutta a deputation from the Indian Association and the Bengal Landholders' Association proposed to wait upon His Excellency in connection with the Partition of Bengal, but the Viceroy declined to receive the deputation on the ground that it would contain the representatives of two different provinces. When the Indian Association, which is a public body of old Bengal, approached the Viceroy with a formal welcome, the offer could no longer be rejected. In the address reference was made to the partition of Bengal, the uneasiness and alarm that the measure had created, and the desire of the people that the province should be raised to the status of a Presidency Government. Other matters, such as confidence in the people, their wider association in the Government of the country and the encouragement to Indian industries were also referred to. In his letter forwarding the address the Secretary of the Association wrote that they did not desire to obtain an expression of opinion from the Viceroy, because, it must be inferred, he is still new to the country.

In his reply, which was brief and to the point, Lord Minto recognised the importance and usefulness of the Indian Association, but he said he could not receive the views of that body without comment. "I must ask you to remember that I am here as an administrator whose duty it is to carry out a policy already approved by the Secretary of State, and I should be misleading you if I in any way appeared to encourage a hope of its reversal; and, gentlemen, I am bound to tell you that the endeavours I have made since my arrival in India to acquaint myself with the history of that policy have been far from assisting me to the conclusion that the views you express are universally shared by the people of Bengal." Although very courteously put, this is a direct challenge, and there can be no question that Lord Minto fully accepts the official view of things. As regards the policy of the Partition of Bengal we can understand that he cannot interfere with it, unless the initiative is taken by the Secretary of State for India; but the feeling of the people of Bengal is a matter of local information, and it is quite evident that Lord Minto is prepared to accept the official view, which is the chief source of his information, to the exclusion of the popular view. It is no use minimising this fact, or to expect that Lord Minto will prove an exceptionally strong man, one way or the other. He will accept the official view of things in the country; if the Secretary of State directs a reversal of policy he will loyally carry it out, but he will not take the initiative or interfere with the permanent officials in favour of the people.

The next point in the Viceroy's reply is the recent incidents in Eastern Bengal and Swadeshi. With regard to "the unfortunate incidents" His Exellency said:—"I can, I am afraid, with all respect, only accept as allegations which you as British subjects are always at liberty to make good before the Law Courts, though I am bound to tell you that the ample information at my disposal would appear to prove without a doubt that the action deemed necessary by the executive authority of the Province was fully justified." It is quite clear that His Excellency is disposed to treat the statements of the people as allegations which can only be accepted when they are proved in a court of law, while official reports are all information upon which implicit reliance can be placed. In view of the result of the 'Rungpur special constables' case and the assaults upon respectable people by the Gurkhas in Barisal which are not "allegations," the Viceroy might have well modified his statement, but he has made it clear that he will go only so far as the local authorities will permit him to go and no further. This attitude has given satisfaction to those who always want the authorities to be unbending so far as the people are concerned, but we cannot congratulate Lord Minto upon his last public speech. He might have well observed, for some time longer, the attitude of reserve in view of the change of Ministry and the appointment of Mr. John Morley to the India Office. He has lost a great deal and gained very little by his reply to the address of the Indian Association.

HINDOSTHAN,
16th January, 1906.

Need for protecting the rivers tanks, &c. from pollution with the dirty water of factories in the United Provinces.

19. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kálákánkar), of the 16th January, referring to certain steps that are being taken in Bengal to get the dirty refuse water of the various kinds of factories in Bengal cleansed by "chlorinated lime" before they are allowed to run into the river, canal or any other receptacle of water from which people take water for drinking or other domestic purposes, urges that it is very necessary that similar steps should be taken in the United Provinces to prevent the pollution of rivers, &c., in the places where factories exist. Contamination of the sources of supply of drinking water with any harmful matter must prove a prolific source of disease among the people, and Government cannot adopt too stringent measures to stop it.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th January, 1906

Need for metalling the roads between the Nigohan railway station on the Oudh and Rohilkhand railway, and the villages of Nagraon and Salempur.

20. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th January, states that as the roads leading from the villages of Nagraon and Salempur to the railway station at Nigohan on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway are not metalled, articles of trade have to be carried between Nagraon, Salempur, Bahrauli and several other villages on the one side and Lucknow and Cawnpore on the other by the agency of ponies and carts throughout the whole distance, which is a source of great trouble and inconvenience to the traders. The Traffic Superintendent of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow would do well to have the roads in question metalled, which, besides conferring a blessing on the traders, will considerably enhance the revenue of the railway.

ROHILKHAND, GAZETTE,
16th January, 1906.

Complaint regarding the non-delivery of the copies of the late issues of the Rohilkhand Gazette to certain subscribers in Rampur.

21. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th January, complaining that copies of its issues have not of late been reaching certain subscribers in Rampur, suspects that this is due to the dishonesty of either the Postmaster or one of his assistants at Rampur who has perhaps been induced, by ulterior motives, to tamper with the copies in question, at the instance of some high official of the State displeased with the paper for some of its writings. The higher postal authorities would do well to make an enquiry into the matter.

UNION GAZETTE,
14th January, 1906.

A dakaiti case at Nagina, district Bijnor.

1. THE Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 14th January states, on the authority of a correspondent, that at midnight on the 25th December last, a number of dakaits entered the house of one Háji Muhammad Bakhsh, Punjábi, at Nagina, district Bijnor, and assaulted him so severely that he succumbed to the injuries shortly after. It is suspected that the police were in collusion with the dakaits, or the latter could not have dared to stay in the house as long as they did.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th January, 1906.

Water supply at Agra.

2. A correspondent of the Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 19th January, bitterly complains that the scarcity of the supply of pipe-water to the public at Agra has become quite chronic, which is a source of very great inconvenience and discomfort to the people. Even in those towns where the water-rate is lower than that levied at Agra, the pumps are open for 9 and in some cases for 12 hours during the day ; whereas the water is not turned on for more than 7 hours at Agra, and that too in a very thin stream. If the Municipal Board cannot arrange to supply sufficient pipe-water to the people, it had better stop its supply altogether, returning the cost of house connections to those who have got water laid on to their premises, and leave the people to shift for themselves.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
23rd January, 1906.

Certain complaints against the new Octroi Superintendent of the Municipal Board, Agra.

3. A correspondent of the Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 23rd January, states that the newly appointed Octroi Superintendent of the Agra Municipality, who has no previous experience of octroi work, and is entirely ignorant of Urdu, has recently issued an order to the barrier muharrirs directing them to fill up the octroi receipts in English in future, to their utter confusion, most of them barely knowing Urdu. This order, it would appear, has been issued without the sanction or knowledge of the Chairman or the municipal members, no reference being made to it in any of the resolutions of the Municipal Board. The writer further complains that the Superintendent is said to have some private understanding with the local traders, and has consequently allowed a quantity of taxable articles to be brought into the city without paying any duty.

ADVOCATE,
21st January, 1906.

Famine in Bundelkhand.

4. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st January, says:—The scarcity of the last few months from which Bundelkhand has been suffering has deepened into famine of a very serious nature, and the Government has formally declared that all the four districts have been afflicted with famine. One can understand the seriousness of the situation when he calls to his mind the sufferings of the people in the past, and when he knows that every famine or scarcity of the last few years has touched Bundelkhand invariably. The condition of the people beggars description. The famine is both of money and grain. Bundelkhand has no reserve of its own. The neighbouring districts are not holding stocks and cannot come to the rescue. Though the rest of the province might not yet be famine-stricken, grains are being sold at famine prices and the rates are affecting the health of the people. We are glad His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor is on the spot making personal enquiries into the condition of the people. Relief works have been opened. But, what is of greater necessity, poor-houses should be started in every centre. We hope no time will be lost in organising them and bringing the helpless orphans and emaciated women together.

We hope in relief works the task-test will not be introduced, and people will be paid, either in cash or in grain, so much as is likely to prevent emaciation. We trust that the Local Government will spare neither money nor pains to save people from death for want of food or clothes. But all the same the people owe a duty to themselves. Organized efforts should be made to find food and raiment for those who will be refusing to receive State help; and the different orphanages of these provinces and the Panjab should send their agents in the interior of the province to collect as many homeless people as they can possibly do. Famine in Bundelkhand has come to stay for full eight months, and it will tax all the resources of the Government and the charity of the people to face the dire calamity. [The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 24th January, expresses the same views.]

QULQUL,
15th January, 1906.

Complaint against certain ministerial officials in the public service at Bijnor.

5. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 15th January, states that there exists a very influential body of Maulvis at Bijnor, headed by one Háji Hakím Rahímullah, some of whose followers and colleagues are in collusion with bad characters of the town, and hold good posts in the ministerial establishments of the local courts. One of these prominent men is Muhammad Hasan, a native of Bijnor, who has held the post of Assistant Record-keeper in the Collector's office for about 20 years, and is Kázi for the Muhammadan community in the town, for which he was granted a sanad by Government some years ago. Thus holding two offices, one religious and the other secular under Government, he commands very considerable influence among the residents and can easily abuse it to promote his selfish ends. Lately during the last Ramzán, a number of Musalmans wanted to say their prayers on the Id day separately from him; but as he and his supporters would not allow this to be done, and there was danger of a breach of the peace in consequence, he was bound over by the police to keep the peace. Another member of the clique referred to is one Háji Qudrat-ullah who is a notoriously litigious man, and was once prosecuted for forgery. It is certainly very unsatisfactory that a considerable number of the residents of Bijnor, who are members of an objectionable society, should be permitted to hold posts in the Government service at their native place; and the authorities would do well to look into the matter.

CITIZEN,
22nd January, 1906.

The Industrial Conference, and the Government.

6. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 22nd January, says:—Some men have expressed the opinion that the Industrial Conference need not have made any recommendations to the Government. We must say we are not at one with those who hold this view. The Government may not hearken to our prayers, but we must go on making them, for these prayers never fail to indicate the bounden duties of an alien Government to a subject race. For our industrial development we depend, not to a small extent, on the help and co-operation of the Government, and we must always point out to it the ways and manners in which it can afford us such aid. We should never allow the Government the least opportunity to shirk its responsibilities to the people, on the plea that the people never reminded it of those responsibilities. We Indians have not yet developed that strong spirit of self-help or self-dependence that may enable us to slight or ignore help from the Government.

AL BASHIR,
23rd January, 1906.

Bengalis' agitation against the partition of Bengal, and the Musalmans.

7. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 23rd January, referring to Lord Minto's recent expression of his views on the partition of Bengal (in his reply to the address of welcome presented him by the Calcutta Indian Association) says that the Bengali agitators against the measure should, if well advised, now give up their vain hope of getting it reversed. These agitators, the editor would pray, should at least have pity on their Musalman fellow-countrymen, and cease to wheedling them to co-operate with them in their futile endeavours, which cannot but spell ruin to them all in the long run.

HINDOSTHAN,
24th January, 1906.

Question of adopting a uniform vernacular script for the whole of India.

8. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 24th January, says:—The question of introducing a common script taken up by the Nágri Prachárini Sabha of Benares is one with which, we think, all the educated men of India will agree. India has many Provincial languages with their different characters which present many difficulties in learning them, A common script will undoubtedly smooth the way in mastering the different Provincial dialects, and we think the Sanskrit alphabet would conveniently serve the purpose.

ADVOCATE,
25th January, 1906.

Suggestion for appointment of a Royal Commission to formulate a scheme for redistribution of the Provinces of India.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th January, says:—Lord Curzon, in his note on Departmentalism, foreshadowed a scheme of territorial redistribution of Indian provinces, but unfortunately dealt with but one province, to the creation of seething discontent from one end of the entire province to the other. The Bengalis have, however, refused to submit quietly to the partition as effected. They have not given up the agitation. Their papers return again and again to the affair. They tried to wait upon Lord Minto as a deputation to place before His Excellency their views on the matter. Failing in that attempt, they took advantage of the welcome addresses presented to the new Viceroy to refer to the circumstances, painful to both people and Government, ending in and following the partition of Bengal. Lord Minto has admitted his inability to help them in the matter, as he had only to carry out the decision of the Secretary of State for India. Here was a hint. And the leaders of Bengal seem ready to begin the agitation de novo. For this purpose a demonstration is to be held in the Town Hall of Calcutta on the 31st instant.

The Indian World has forestalled it by returning to the subject in its December issue, published a few days back, with a constructive scheme. The Editor starts with the very reasonable assumption that the time has come for taking up the question of the territorial redistribution of the Indian provinces as a whole. The problem should be boldly faced and certain principles laid down to guide Government in making the called-for readjustments. And the need of principles in doing so comes out when we consider how the existing Provinces—we speak as if we are living on the other side of October 15th, 1905—have been created without any regard to order or system. Ethnic and sociological conditions, historical or linguistic considerations had little influence with those who were busy with province-making in the past. Conquests and annexations brought in new areas and these were attached to a neighbouring province, situated north, south, east or west.

British India, excluding Burma, was divided, before the partition of Bengal, into nine large Provincial Administrations, besides four small ones. A careful consideration of their main features reveals three defects. The system of government is not uniform: 2 being under Governors and Councils, 3 under Lieutenant-Governors, and 4 under Chief Commissioners. Historical and ethnic facts have been disregarded in the making of them. In size and importance there is great variety. As to the number of districts they vary from 5 to 49; in area the variations range between 6,466 and 151,185 square miles; and even in the areas of districts the variations mark 116 square miles as the lowest, and 17,380 square miles as the highest figure. Evidently then some change is necessary to make administration efficient, to distribute areas according to ethnic and sociological principles, and to make for homogeneity in language and nationality.

General Chesney has, in the last edition of his Indian Polity, suggested a general levelling up, instead of levelling down, of the British Provinces, and the entire country ought to be parcelled out into a number of provinces of tolerably uniform size and importance with the least possible additional expenditure. The Editor of the Indian World submits a scheme for dividing British India into the existing number of Provinces with every regard to traditional romance and historcial glories, ethnic affinity, sociological homogeneity, and linguistic uniformity. His conclusions may be quoted here.

Bengal would correspond with Bangal of the Indian Epics: with Gangiradoe, Passidoe and Kamrup of the Greek historians; with Kamrupa, Pundra and Samatata of Hwen-Thsang's time, and with the subah of Bangla of the Mogul.

The United Provinces of Behar and Benares with the land of Angas, Magadhas, Videhas, and Kasis of the Epic time; with Magadha, Vesari and Savatthi of Asoka's time and of the Greek historians; with Vaisali, Vriji and Sravasti of Hwen-Thsang's time; and with the subahs of Behar and Allahabad of the Mogul.

The United Provinces of Agra and Oudh with Brahmavarta of the Vedic times; with the land of the Kurus, Panchalas and Kosalas of the Epic days; with Kosalas of Asoka's Edicts; with Sthaneswara, Mathura, Ahighrata, Govisana, Brahmapur, and Srughna of Hwen-Thsang's time; and with the subahs of Oudh, Agra and Delhi of the Mogul.

The Punjab with Aryavatra of the Vedic times; with the Punjab and Sindhu of Asoka's time; with Taki and Sindhu of Hwen-Thsang's time; and with the subahs of Lahore and Multan of the Mogul.

Bombay with the land of the Western Chalukyas of Epic days; with (Maha) Rastika of Asoka's time; with Maharastra of Hwen-Thsang's time; and with the subahs of Berar and Khandesh of the Mogul (a large part of the province of Bombay did not come under the dominion of the Mogul at all).

Central Provinces and Orissa with the Wilderness of Dundaka and the land of the Eastern Chalukyas of Epic days; with the tract of land between Sanchi and Rupnath and the kingdom of Andhra, together with Orissa of Asoka's time; with Maha Kosala and Utkala of Hwen-Thsang's time; and with the subahs of the Gondwana and Orissa of the Mogul.

Madras with Kerala (beginning from the west coast), Pandya, Cola and Kalinga of Asoka's time; with Konkona, Dravida, Malakuta, Dhanakakata and Kalinga of Hwen-Thsang's time, and with the subah of Telinghana of the Mogul (the bulk of the province of Madras remained outside the Mogul Empire).

The Punjab, the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh and the United Provinces of Benares and Behar would correspond with the three main divisions of Ancient Hindustan—Aryavarta, Brahmavarta and Mithila—the home of the purer castes of Bahmanic Aryans and of the purer forms of Brahmanic Hinduism. Bengal would lie east of Hindustan Proper, and be restricted to the area which the Bengali-speaking and Sakti or Kali and Durga-worshipping people of Eastern India have occupied almost since the beginning of the historical era. Dakshinavarta, or Deccan and Dravida, would correspond with Bombay and Madras, minus the territories of the Native Princes.

In the Town Hall meeting to be held on Wednesday next the leaders in Bengal are expected not only to appoint a deputation to go to England, but also to give out a definite idea as to what is wanted. Satisfaction with the status quo would be the height of folly. If any constructive scheme affecting the whole of India can be propounded, so much the better. But this will require patient study and thorough investigation into the whole question of better administration for India. And this is only possible when the problem is looked at from every standpoint.

To solve such a stupendous problem to the satisfaction of all parties, we wish the Government could muster courage and face the problem. Lord Curzon was very fond of Commissions. But he forgot to appoint one to devise a scheme for partition or duplication of the administrative machinery of Bengal which would satisfy at least a decent minority in Bengal. Mr. John Morley would gratify all India if he were to sanction the appointment of a Royal Commission to be composed of some members of Parliament—Commons and Lords—and representatives of the India Office, Government and people. Lord Curzon will not, we are afraid, agree to serve on such a body. We think the Commission should have the Marquis of Ripon as President; the members to be Lord George Hamilton, Lord Reay, Lord Ampthill, Sir Antony MacDonnell, Sir C. Stevens, Mr. R. C. Dutt, Sir P. M. Mehta, and a number of officials and non-officials appointed by the Provincial Governments, one from each. During the hot season the Commission may take evidence of retired Anglo-Indians and others in England. In winter they may tour in India and record evidence, visiting important towns and sites and studying on the spot other factors necessary to arrive at a sound decision. The report may be submitted to Parliament with as little delay as possible. Pending the appointment of such a Commission and decision of Parliament on their report, the existing arrangement even as effected by the partition of Bengal may go on minus the construction of buildings for Government offices at Dacca.

ADVOCATE,
25th January, 1906.

Need for large expenditure of money on plague measures.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th January, says:—The Resolution of the Government of India in the Home Department on plague preventive measures contains nothing which is new. Yet it contains some truths which deserve all attention of the authorities interested now in plague administration as also of the people who have to co-operate with the Government in fighting the disease.

The Resolution once more admits that in all these years no remedy could be found for the scourge, hence in fighting it we have to confine ourselves to the result of past experience and to the circumstances which go to reduce its rigours. There is no doubt that the spread of the disease is connected with rat contamination. This theory has the support of popular opinion now. It has been the experience of every big city that first the grain marts, or the houses where much grain is stored, are infected and deaths in rats are the first signal of the coming of the disease. We also know how year after year pacca houses with pacca flooring have saved people from infection. In Indian cities none has been so safe as Benares, and Dr. Chrieton is right in ascribing it to the stone pavements of the streets of Benares, to the stone pavements of the yards of the dwelling places and to the excellent habit of the people who generally live on the second storey. Rat destruction is a great precaution and this must be done specially during the months when there is no plague. The municipalities must take care of their grain markets and should see that the grain is not stored in thickly populated quarters of the city. The grain marts should be in open places and the grain-dealers persuaded to pave their godowns. The private marts should be improved, and if the owners be not willing to do so, large storage of grain should be confined to municipal marts which should forthwith be erected. The improvement of drainage and the pavement of roads are all necessary improvements, and these should not be delayed.

To disinfection there is not much opposition, but few have resort to it as a precautionary measure. However, it is something that people get houses disinfected by some persuasion during the outbreak. Segregation of the patients is generally resorted to and there is lesser and lesser objection to segregation. Past sufferings have convinced the people that the disease is one of touch, and they are ready to avoid plague patients and bodies. They are carefully not admitting strangers suffering from this disease in their houses or in their muhallas, and they require little persuasion to keep a sort of cordon in their villages. Plague inoculation has never been popular and we are afraid will never be popular with all classes of people.

But all these measures require money. The Government of India is silent on the point. How are the municipalities to pave their roads? Where are the people in large cities to build new houses on improved scale? How are the insanitary quarters to be improved? From where are the funds to come for widening the roads, and establishing model bastis? The municipalities have no funds. They have exceeded even the taxable limits and no further burden can be placed on the tax-payers. The Local Government have no funds and beyond the miserable pittance of a lakh or two they cannot give more money to schemes of general improvements. The Government of India has got the money, but its surpluses are meant to be sunk in the frontier, and God knows how many more crores will be consumed by the military reorganization and defensive schemes.

If Lord Minto really desires, as we believe he does, that the plague should be driven out of the country, his Government shall have to devote a greater portion of this surplus in making allotments to the Local Governments for expenditure on plague preventive measures. The funds should be so alloted that every municipality should be able to show what it has done in the course of a year towards adopting plague measures; how it has opened out the city, how it has constructed the new lanes and how model muhallas have been built. Thank God that the plague is not so bad this year as it was this time last year. But we have yet to see what course the disease takes in the months of February and March. The period of relief must be spent in devising measures which are likely to prevent its recurrence next year, and this can be done only when the Government of India makes an honest effort to fight the disease.

HINDOSTHAN,
26th January, 1906.

The English Hindosthán on Mr. Gokhale's comparison of Lord Curzon with Aurangzeb, in his Presidential address at the last Congress.

1. THE English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 26th January, says:—It was wicked and sinful on the part of him, who compared Lord Curzon with Aurangzeb, and it was a shame on the part of the delegates to receive such a comparison from the President, if they did not hiss him at the time he made such an allusion. What! how could Aurangzeb, a superstitious Muhammadan, be ever compared with our Lord Curzon, a civilized Christian, high-minded, erudite and most refined English politician, who alone was considered fit to be allowed to remain for seven years as Viceroy of India? Aurangzeb demolished the Indian places of worship, destroyed idols and robbed them of their jewels and oranments; whereas Lord Curzon, on the contrary, has repaired the old dilapidated and neglected places of worship, both of Hindus and Muhammadans in India.

Mr. Gokhale wrongly thinks and says that even the most devoted admirer of Lord Curzon cannot claim that he has strengthened the foundations of British rule in India. The crushing reply to this assertion is his reappointment to the Viceroyalty of India by the Government of the King-Emperor of India. If the English Ministers did not consider him fit to strengthen the foundations of British rule in India, then why did they extend the term of his office which honour, as far as we remember, has not been conferred on any of the preceding Viceroys, either the servants of the Hon'ble East India Company, or those of the King of England? The President continued and said that "In some respects, His Lordship will always be recognised as one of the greatest Englishmen that ever came out to this country."

Surely, Lord Curzon is one of the greatest Englishmen, and ideal of birth and nobility. But, forsooth, a pity, a great pity; he is no admirer of the commoners; and one thing we find very good in him that, though at one time he was opposed to the policy of Mr. Chamberlain, now we are pleased to learn that he supports the policy of protection.

AGRA AKHBAR,
28th January, 1906.

Protest against Mr Gokhale's comparison of Lord Curzon with Aurangzeb at the last session of the Congress at Benares.

2. A correspondent of the Agra Akhbár (Agra), of the 28th January, referring to the comparison which Mr. Gokhale made of Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty with Aurangzeb's rule, in his Presidential address at the last session of the Indian National Congress at Benares, says that this objectionable comparison was calculated to wound the feelings of the Muhammadans, inasmuch as it cast a slur on one of their greatest and most respected emperors, and insinuated that his reign was one of great tribulation for the Hindus. It is, at any rate, much to be regretted that some thoughtless Musalmans, who have foolishly come to look upon the Congress as a movement highly beneficial to the people of India in general, could patiently hear Mr. Gokhale's address without the least show of resentment in any form. Surely, the Congress which allows its President to openly attack a Muhammadan emperor in this way, must be dubbed a purely Hindu movement, and cannot ever expect to be taken as the mouthpiece of the whole country, if it continues to pursue its present sectarian policy.

ADVOCATE,
28th January, 1906

Satisfaction expressed at the victory of the Liberal party at the polls.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th January, referring to the triumph of the Liberal party at the General Election at Home, says:—Hope has been struck in every heart. The British nation at home hopes to be freed from the evil trinity of militarism, protection and extravagance; the Britons across the seas look for better development of their resources; and the colonists in South Africa expect a responsible Government soon to be granted them. Why, under the circumstances, should India sit idle and grumble? There is hope for this country too. We may not see good many reactionary measures passed in the last few years forthwith repealed; all that educated India aspires after may not be given for the asking; but from the principles laid down we do hope for some measure of justice and fair play in the administration of the country under the control and guidance of a party which aims at securing Peace, Retrenchment and Reform. And we stand so much in need of peace after the seething discontent created by Lord Curzon; of heavy curtailment of military expenditure risen high under Lord Kitchener's Reorganisation scheme; and of reform in the police and judicial lines, and in the policy of Government, in order to guarantee justice to the masses and a fair share in the administration of the country for Indians qualified by education and experience for such privileges. We trust Mr. John Morley will not be, for us, a will-o'-the-wisp Liberal.

The Indian party in the Commons has been materially strengthened by the General Election. If Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, whom we would very much like to see in Parliament, has been defeated along with Mr. Mallik and Sir M. Bhownagree, a number of other friends have got in. Sir Charles Dilke has of course been elected. Sir Henry Cotton and Mr. Herbert Roberts have been returned. Mr. Pickersgill has been able to re-capture a seat. Mr. Herbert Paul has been elected in place of Mr. Labouchere, and is an old friend whose name is associated with Indian aspirations as the mover of the resolution in favour of simultaneous Civil Service Examinations. Mr. O'Donnell is a retired Bengal Civilian and has won great renown as the author of "The Failure of Lord Curzon." Mr. Schwann is one of the oldest Parliamentary workers in India's behalf and has done more than expected from him, as the Liberals have driven away all the Conservatives from the eight seats in Manchester. Mr. Herbert Roberts has taken the position of his father-in-law, the late Mr. W. S. Caine. Sir Henry Cotton may be expected to more than fill up the vacancy caused by Sir W. Wedderburn. If Lord Curzon chooses to enter Parliament and does so in a year or two, what was impossible in India will happen in free England. The late Chief Magistrate of India and his late Lieutenants will face each other and fight tooth-and-nail when reactionary measures of the last régime come for severe handling. In the meantime, let us hope for the very best out of the new Government that now holds the destinies of the British Empire in its hands.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

ADVOCATE,
1st February, 1906.

The Native States, and the Government of India.

4. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st February, says:—In these words—"Many of them have been more or less successfully trained, during their minority, in the art of Government by methods which, though not inconsistent with the best traditions of their predecessors and their people, are yet tinged with Western ideas of civilization and humanity which found no place in the systems of the first half of last century"—does Mr. P. Loraine Petre, a retired Indian Civilian, describe the change that has come over the ruling Chiefs and Princes of India of late. The pity of it is that those among such rulers who want to westernise more the method of administration in order to do more good are not encouraged by the Paramount Power. Thus far shalt thou go and no farther is nowhere more practised than in the Native States. While Mr. Petre notices the change mentioned above, as also the fact that 'the so-called Political Service has been much improved of late years, and that appointments, which formerly were often due to interest and patronage, are now invariably bestowed only on officers of tried capacity and tact," he forgets to point out the fact that Feudatory Princes are hardly now de facto as they are de juro honoured coadjutors in the work of the Empire. Having retired from the Service six years ago, Mr. Petre might not have noticed this change made in Lord Curzon's time. While the impression has been wiped out of the Chiefs as well as the people's mind that the British Government means to annex any Native State on account of mismanagement or absence of a successor, it goes without saying that the States have been sought to be turned into veritable Departments under the Indian Government.

PILIBHIT GAZETTE,
1st December, 1905.

Present location of the head octroi office at Pilibhit.

5. The Pilibhít Gazette (Pilibhít), of the 1st December, 1905, received on the 1st February, says that the locality of the bungalow to which the head octroi office at Pilibhít has lately been transferred is quite unsuitable both from the standpoint of the residents of the town, as well as that of outside traders. The bungalow lies in an out-of-the-way part of the town, and at considerable distance from the railway station, and the road leading to it is so little frequented, that traders and others having occasion to attend the octroi office are liable to be waylaid, plundered and murdered by robbers. The municipal authorities would therefore do well to remove the octroi office to some such central place as Macphersonganj, or Hafiz Ghulam Maula's premises.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
28th January, 1906.

Objection taken to British soldiers being employed to collect a fee from, pilgrims and admit them to the sacred tree inside the Fort at Allahabad during the Magh Mela.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 28th January, says :—Pilgrims to the Tribeni and the Magh Mela usually go to see the Akshay Bat, or perennial Bo-tree, inside the fort. A small fee is demanded from each visitor. We do not profess to know to what fund the collections are credited. It seems rather unfortunate that the Akshay Bat should be inside the fort, but the Government is not responsible for what was done by the Emperor Akbar. What seems to us, however, open to objection is the placing of European soldiers at the entrance to the passage and their employment on the collection of fees. Since the tree is inside the fort the military authorities may be its proper custodians, but there is religious objection to the employment of European soldiers on duty connected with the admission of pilgrims. They do not go to see the fort but the Akshay Bat alone, which is to them a sacred object. Complaints have reached us that men and women, who go to see the Akshay Bat after they have bathed in the Tribeni, have religious scruple to touch the hands of Europeans, which is unvoidable so long as the soldiers are on duty and collect the fees from the pilgrims. We have no right to go behind the sentiment, or to discuss a question of religious faith. The pilgrims may be told to stay away if they dislike the present arrangement, but they may just as well be forbidden to bathe at the Tribeni. The best thing would be to make over the Akshay Bat to the civil authorities. If that is impracticable, only high caste Hindu sepoys assisted by some Brahmins should be employed to admit the pilgrims and collect the fees ; or, a self-registering turnstile like that used in the Calcutta Zoological gardens might be employed, and the fees could be collected by any one without the slightest chance of fraud or peculation. The exercise of a little discretion would remove all cause of complaint, and the Local Government would earn the gratitude of the Hindu community and the pilgrims who come annually to see the sacred tree in the fort.

The Government of India insisting on the Bombay Government to prescribe an age-limit for the Matriculation examination.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st February, says :—Individuals die but a nation lives. In the same way rulers come and go but policy endures. Such has been the idea that struck us when we learnt how the Government of India have, presumably under Lord Minto's régime, written to the Bombay Government to prescribe a limit as to the age at which candidates should be allowed to appear at the Matriculation examination. We are at a loss to make out why, in spite of popular and reasonable opposition, the Government should insist on an age-limit at all, what to say of putting it at sixteen. That the Allahabad University has done it is no reason why others should follow suit. The fact that a very small percentage of pupils go up for the examination at a very early age, say at from twelve to fourteen, should be enough to make Government less uneasy about the matter. And the anxiety of the State about the health and development of our boys appears a little too grandmotherly when placed in juxtaposition with the suspicion that the age-limit is an indirect method of preventing Indians from going to England to compete in the Civil Service Examinations. We do hope Lord Minto will not be anxious to continue a policy which has been opposed by almost all sections of Indians, merely for the sake of continuation.

Famine in the United Provinces.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th January, says:—The last hope of the winter rains is about to be given up. If it does not rain within a week, it might be taken for certain that between this and June next there will be no rain and the situation will become critical for the most part of the Province. The present famine in Bundelkhand is severer than what it was on the last occasion. The western districts of the Agra Division, specially Agra, Muttra, Etawah and a large portion of the Cawnpore district, are in a very bad condition. The official report of the crops in Lucknow and Fyzabad Divisions is spoken of as not bad, but the scarcity is so severe that all classes of people are likely to suffer. Relief works and gratuitous relief measures shall have to be adopted to save the people in non-affected areas from serious privations. In the districts not affected by famine, famine prices are prevailing, and the middle and poorer classes find it difficult to support themselves and their families. With flour selling at eight seers a rupee, gram and juar at 12 seers, it is impossible for families of limited means to manage their affairs. But they have to face the scarcity as best they can. They require this much protection from the State for the present that they should be saved from the swarming beggars who in large numbers have begun to migrate to large cities. The emigrants are a danger to the health of large cities, and who knows that the sudden outbreak of measles and small-pox is not due to these unwelcome guests. The arrangements in Bundelkhand to collect the homeless in centres are being completed. In the meantime special measures should be taken to see that the strong and able-bodied among the agricultural labourers find work in such parts of the Province where there is a demand for unskilled labour.

The accounts which have reached us from Bundelkhand, from Konch Tahsil, of the destruction of cattle are horrifying. A report tells us that within a week no less than 24,000 head of cattle were sold to butchers for almost no price. The figure may have been exaggerated, but the fact that cows and bullocks are being sold by the agriculturists to butchers, that good bullocks can be had at Rs. 2 each and calves at 8 annas each show to what condition the people have been reduced. There is no fodder in the four districts, and the Government forest which has been generously thrown open is at such a distance that few people can avail themselves of the facilities. People find it difficult to have an organisation with a view to take the village cattle to the forests, and the Government has not devised any means to bring fodder from non-affected parts of the Province. We know it is very difficult to bring fodder in sufficiently large quantities to save the famished cattle; but some thing has to be done to save the cattle from wholesale destruction. If once the cattle are destroyed, it will take years to put the cultivator in a condition to till his land. We do not know whether it is possible to bring cattle to other reserved forests. We know the difficulties of the cartage, but we hope no efforts will be spared on behalf of the agriculturist to save him and his cattle.

In famine districts the touring officers are working very hard. Sir James LaTouche's visit has cheered up drooping spirits. The distribution of blankets by His Honour to the pardanashin women and respectable classes has touched the heart of the people; but more is still needed to be done in this direction. In the non-affected area the condition of cattle may not be bad now, but it will surely cause some anxiety in the near future. We wish it were possible to issue orders that the officials making tours in the interior should take with them their provisions from the head-quarters. The supply of rasad at no time is a pleasant thing and it becomes a source of great irritation and annoyance at this period when the zamindar finds it difficult to find fodder for his own cattle and yet he is forced to supply more than what is necessary for a single individual whether he be a Tahsildar, a Collector or even an Opium-walla Sahib. Few of these take the trouble of seeing how much more than his needs has been extorted from unwilling zamindars, fewer still of knowing how many cattle would have been saved from starvation if the grass, dried and fresh, given for the use of the Collector or the Tahsildar, had been allowed to remain with zamindars. The tour and the Begár at this juncture are most annoying, and strict orders are to be issued that the people in their distress should be saved from these annoyances.

ADVOCATE,

Irrigation policy of the Government of India.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st February, says:—The correspondence that passed between the Secretary of State and the Government of India on the report of the Irrigation Commission and the final orders thereon indicate that the Government is about to inaugurate an extensive irrigation policy on the principles of which the heads of the administration are agreed. Between the people and the State there is little difference of opinion, and if there is any it mostly refers to details. Organized opposition to the construction of canals, if it is to be found anywhere, is to be met with in the body of the Taluqdars of Oudh. But now it appears that the opposition will be less, or the Government shall have to carry out its policy in spite of the opposition. The educated middle class, who have no vested interest in the matter, support the Government policy of the construction of canals, and they have through their Congresses and public bodies been pressing on Government the necessity of spending more money on irrigation projects than what it has been doing hitherto. Irrigation schemes did not receive that amount of attention which railways had done. It is time the construction of railways might be slackened in favour of the construction of canals.

Mr. Brodrick has insisted upon the fact that famine protective canals should be constructed from famine grants or from such savings from the grant that the Government can make. This was necessary so as not to mix up the two kinds of canals, the productive and the non-productive. If the Government contents itself with a fair return on productive lines, every rupee invested in canal irrigation can make a good return. There can possibly be no opposition to productive works. Half of the opposition, if any, to the productive works will disappear if the rates charged from tenants are not unreasonable. The opposition mainly exists on the ground of heaviness of the canal rates and the treatment which tenants receive from the officers in charge. Canals are wanted in the country for the benefit of the cultivators and not to be another source of income to the State. We do not think it is right on the part of the Government to sell water at a price heavier than what it costs. The tenants cannot understand why the Government which can get money at $3\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. in the market should not feel contented with an earning on the capital up to 7 or 9 per cent., but should go on increasing the rates. The two and a half crores of rupees which the Government intends spending annually in the construction of canals will be found in the country, and we hope that sufficient labour will be available to enable the Government to spend this amount of money. The next important question which the Government in inaugurating the programme shall have to consider will be to what province the money should be first allotted. The United Provinces and Madras first deserve the attention of Government because these are the parts which have most suffered from famine in recent years. Canal construction is the last hope of the tenantry of Bundelkhand where the protective works must be pushed with greater vigour, and the canals completed in the most affected parts without any delay. The next Budget will show a good surplus, a large portion of which should be spent in carrying out the orders of the Secretary of State.

The Swadeshi movement, and the Musalmans.

10. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th January, publishes a communication which repudiates the charge of being traitors to the country levelled by some Congressists against the Indian Musalmans on the ground of their refusing to take part in the Swadeshi movement of the Bengalis. The Musalmans have always been quite willing to promote Swadeshism in the true sense of the word; but the so-called Swadeshi movement, which was set on foot in Bengal in resentment against the partition of that Province, is confined to boycotting only England-made goods, while leaving Japanese and American articles to be freely used. Had the Bengalis been sincerely patriotic in their agitation, and not animated by selfish motives, they should have rejected all imported goods made in any foreign country without a single exception, and then all classes of men, including Musalmáns, would have gladly joined them to help forward the movement.

Need for improving the pay and prospects of Indians in the military service.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 28th January, says :—The loyalty and bravery of the Indian soldiers, whether in infantry or cavalry, have been borne testimony to times out of number by distinguished commanders and high administrators. They have been seen in attendance upon the Sovereign in England and have won universal admiration by their soldierly and martial bearing. Better still, they have won their hard earned fame on a hundred battlefields. Whether over the snow and the ice and the blinding snow-storms on the road to Tibet, or through the heat of African deserts, the Indian soldier has followed the flag cheerfully and without complaint and has everywhere upheld the might of England. The Indian cavalry is among the best in the world ; the Sikh and the Gurkha infantry have been declared to be among the finest anywhere in the world. We have no desire to institute comparisons, or belittle the merit of the European section of the army in India, but since the Mutiny no regiment or troop of Indian soldiers has ever been in disgrace or been censured for any failure of duty. During the Tirah Expedition it was stated that one European regiment got into trouble though the facts did not transpire ; the case of the IXth Lancers is still fresh in the mind of every one. These incidents convey no reflection upon the European section of the army as a whole ; but it is notable that not a single Indian regiment has been in disgrace within the last fifty years. And the fact is also undeniable that the Indian soldier is never rewarded according to his deserts. There are certain disabilities that can never be overcome in his case. In the Indian Civil Service there are Indian Commissioners and Members of the Board of Revenue, District Magistrates with a number of European subordinates; but in the army the occasion never arises when an Indian officer is allowed to have European subordinates. There are honorary captains and even colonels among retired Indian officers, but they are never given field rank. For that matter, there are Honorary Generals among Native Princes, who are never placed on active duty. On the few occasions that such Princes have been allowed to join punitive expeditions, they have been invariably placed on staff duty, but never in charge of a command or a strategic position. The Indian soldier is absolutely and always a subordinate, and no display of valour or military skill can ever place him in the position of a commander.

This is a grievance deeply felt, but there is no present chance of its being remedied. But the other grievances present no difficulty in redressing them, and are felt very keenly. The inadequacy of pay and pension is a solid grievance and is pressing heavily upon the Indian soldier. When it is stated as a bare fact that the highest salary to which an Indian in the army can aspire is only Rs. 150 a month, we can form an idea as to the attractions the army offers to men of superior intelligence. A Deputy Magistrate or a Munsif of the lowest grade gets a larger salary. It is true that only certain classes of people, termed warlike, are admitted to the army. The distinction is arbitrary, for no class of people is perpetually unwarlike or the contrary. Peasants and artisans have made splendid warriors, while fighting races have often fallen off in the martial instinct. But the lowness of salary prevents the pursuit of culture, or high education in the army. A man who gets Rs. 80 or Rs. 100 a month, and has to live away from home most part of his service and to make monthly home remittances can scarcely give his sons very superior education. Consequently, the standard of education in the army has always remained low, and we do not see how it can be raised. In spite of this discouraging fact, education is making some advance in the army. The feeling is spreading in the army that the military service, so full of hardship and danger, is ill paid and worse rewarded so far as substantial tokens of reward go, and the Indian soldier is entitled to better treatment both as regards emolument and position in the service. Since the Indian soldier himself has begun to think in this manner, we do not think the military authorities of the Government will be wisely advised in overlooking his grievances very long. If the army is brave and loyal it is deserving of generous treatment, and what is demanded is nothing more than bare justice. There is no call upon the generosity of the Government, but only upon its justice, and to such a call the Government should cheerfully respond.

Casualties at the Kumbh mela at Allahabad.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 28th January, says:—The civil and police officers present exerted their utmost to prevent accidents, and no blame attaches to them for the lamentable loss of life and the injuries that did happen on the Amawasya day. These are to be ascribed to an error of judgment. The error lay in treating the Kumbh day in the same manner as the Sankranti day. As a matter of fact, there is an immense difference between the two. It was a topic of common conversation that some deaths would inveitably take place on the Kumbh day. The authorities were fully aware that the number of bathers on the Kumbh day would be much larger than on the Sankranti day. Consequently, it should have been anticipated that the arrangements and the police assistance that were found sufficient on the Sankranti day might prove inadequate on the Kumbh day. That was what actually happened. The help of the military authorities should have been obtained before, and not after the terrible accidents. The barriers should have been shifted and the passage should have been kept uniformly wide from the second to the third bridge of boats. Part of the passage reserved for the Sádhus might have been fenced off for the pilgrims, whose number was much larger. If three or four cordons had been established along the route the rush would not have been so great, and the crowd would have been under better control. Part of the crowd could have been halted on the top of the bund, part below and then again at the temple of Hanuman and near the south bastion of the fort. If there had been a steady, regulated flow of traffic backwards and forwards the day might have passed without accidents. Similarly, at the second bridge of boats a cordon should have been established on the top, in continuation of the fencing of the enclosure of the space reserved for the shaving of heads. This would have prevented people from tumbling down in heaps at the head of the bridge of boats. Crowds of these proportions do not come often together, and the error of judgment may be well ascribed to want of experience, but it will be well to put together the lessons learnt by this Kumbh gathering, so that similar gatherings in future may be better and more successfully controlled, and loss of life and injury to limb may be avoided.

AL BASHIR,
30th January,
1906.

Suggestion for effecting union between Shias and Sunnis for the purposes of promoting their common well-being.

13. A Muhammadan correspondent of Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 30th January, in a long article, endeavouring to show that union is impossible between the Hindus and Musalmans, because the former are hypocrites, urges that the Muhammadans, instead of seeking to cultivate amity and good-will for Hindus, would do well, on the principle of charity begins at home, to direct their efforts to uniting the Shias and Sunnis into one body co-operating for their common well-being. Both the sects believe in the same God, and follow the same gospel; and if their respective ulamas, or learned men, be moved in the matter, they still enjoy sufficient influence among their people and will easily be able to effect a union of hearts between the two sects.

HINDOSTHAN,
31st January,
1906.

Suggestion for suppression of begging nuisance in large towns.

14. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 31st January, says:—The begging nuisance in all large cities in India, Calcutta, Madras, Bombay and Allahabad, etc., has reached such a degree of reproach on Government that it is high time some drastic measures were adopted to suppress the nuisance. Begging on public roads and streets as years roll by seems to increase. Some of these beggars, whose very appearance is shockingly disgusting, are seen running after not only pedestrians, but also after the occupants of carriages and tram-cars, letting the motor-cars seriously alone from their inability to keep pace with them. Many of these beggars, who have no claim to be so called, being strong in body, mind and limb, venture even so far as to touch the body of the passers-by until either they are pleased with a pice or well thrashed aside with a cane. The Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, Mr. N. W. Kemp, had half a dozen of these gentry before him, charged with soliciting alms in public places, and convicted and sentenced all to periods varying from fifteen days to one month's rigorous imprisonment. Such leniency in the case of vagabonds who are perfectly able, but too lazy to work, is quite a ridiculous method of dealing with the ever-increasing nuisance. In most cities and large towns on the Continent they deal effectively with the begging nuisance and the Contagious Diseases Act. With regard to the first, every offender detected in soliciting alms, who is capable of doing a day's work, is on conviction sentenced to six months hard labour, the first seven days of every month he being fed on bread and water only, what in Germany is called Schwartzen-brod (black bread), and compelled to break a given quantity of stones daily. Of that unsavoury subject, the Contagious Diseases Act, it is dealt with summarily in a similar manner, and in cities and towns in Germany so effective is the method of dealing with it that it rarely gets beyond the house where the disease is contracted. Some years ago the writer had a long interview with Earl Roberts when he was Commander-in-Chief in India, on the subject; but opposition in the form of interfering with the rights of the subject was raised and the matter never came to anything.

GURUKUL SAMACHAR,

Suggestion for reducing the commission on money-orders for remittance of Government dues to half of the present rates.

15. The Gurukul Samáchár (Sikandarabad), for December, 1905, referring to the reduction recently made in the rates of the Inland Telegraphic money-order commission, says that a similar reduction is urgently needed in the commission charged on money-orders issued for remittance of Government dues by zamíndárs and others, who have at present to put up with much inconvenience and extortion in making a direct payment at a tahsíl. The editor thinks that if the commission on money-orders were reduced to half of the present rates for remittance of land revenue, zamíndárs would mostly prefer to remit their dues to Government through the Postal agency in future.

Protest against the order of the Postal Department prohibiting the marking of postal stamps affixed to letters, &c.

16. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th January, publishes the following letter from a correspondent:—Sir,—The Postal Department has recently passed a regulation prohibiting us from marking the postal stamps with lines or signatures. This has, we hear, given rise to a mischievous practice among the servants and the post office clerks to remove the stamps affixed to the letters and packets and fix old ones in their place, or to remove them without replacing them. This bad conduct on the part of some mischievous persons is likely to involve innocent persons in difficulty: for to use old stamps is a criminal offence. The other day, we hear, a (Postal) Inspector made an enquiry in a case in which the person who was accused of having used old stamps deposed that he had used new stamps, and that he suspected the Post office employés to have removed the stamps affixed by him. To put an end to this evil practice, we hope the Postal authorities will withdraw the new orders, and allow us to mark the stamps as before. We do not find any reason for enforcing the new regulation.

The Sylhet Chronicle called upon by the Local Government to withdraw its account of an alleged outrage on a mehtar woman by a Gurkha sepoy at Barisal.

17. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st February, says:—For illegal, unlegal and novel methods of dealing with the people and their leaders by the rulers, commend us to the new province of Eastern Bengal and Assam. After so many days of cogitation the Chief Secretary to the Government in the Province has called upon the editor of the Sylhet Chronicle to withdraw everything that has appeared in his paper on the alleged outrage on a mehtar woman by a Gurkha sepoy at Barisal. From Barisal to Sylhet is indeed a very big jump in spite of both towns being now under the same ruler. The woman was said to have gone early morning one day—as duty required her to do—to the Gurkha police for clearing nightsoil. A Gurkha gave her chase, caught hold of her and tried to outrage her modesty.

Her cries frustrated his design. On a complaint being made to the Municipal Chairman, an overseer was asked to inquire into the allegations. He found the complaint to be true. On this, the Magistrate was moved who ordered a police enquiry. The District Superintendent of Police is said to have personally recorded the evidence of a number of people. And here the matter stops. These facts have been published in almost all Bengal papers. But why should the Sylhet Chronicle alone be called upon to withdraw what offence, if offence it be, has been committed by nearly all papers in Bengal? Is Sylhet within the jurisdiction of Non-Regulation clauses?

ADVOCATE,
1st February, 1906.

Government of India's boycott of the Statesman for unauthorized publication of a departmental note by Lord Curzon.

18. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st February, says:—We confess we do not regard Mr. Ratcliffe's explanation for the publication of Lord Curzon's note in his paper satisfactory, but we think the punishment meted out to the Statesman is both heavy and undignified for a mighty Government like the Government of India. What the Statesman did several Anglo-Indian papers have been doing with impunity. In fact the official secrets are communicated mostly by the very people with whom the secrets are confided, and yet the Statesman is singled out for punishment. The boycott of any paper is most undignified. Of all Calcutta Anglo-Indian papers the Statesman is the most independent. Its talented editor Mr. Ratcliffe has the confidence of both the non-official European and the Indian community; has been a unsparing critic of the reactionary policy of Government. He is known to be connected with a number of English papers, that had been unsparing critics of the Government of India. To humiliate such a man, to drive him away from India by making his connection with the Statesman a pecuniary loss to the proprietor is, we say, not at all becoming. If any offence had been committed, a warning would have served the purpose. Any punishment by executive orders is objectionable. We were hitherto under the impression that the Departments of the Government send advertisements for the sake of larger publication. This is the first time that the Government of India has publicly acknowledged that these are distributed as subsidies to newspapers. Are we to explain the fact of the Pioneer's charging double the ordinary rates for Government advertisements in the light of the new exposition?

AL BASHIR,
30th January, 1906.

Prosecution of the Poona Marathi paper, Bhala, at Bombay for publishing an objectionable article.

19. A Muhammadan correspondent of Al Bashîr (Etáwah), of the 30th January, giving the substance of the article for publishing which the Marathi newspaper, Bhala of Poona, is being prosecuted by the Bombay Government for sedition, says that the article in question is certainly most inflammatory, foolish, and written in a most objectionable taste and style, and that no educated man can possibly have any sympathy with the editor in his present trouble. Granted that the British Government is so well and firmly established in India, that, not to speak of one objectionable article in question, even ten or twenty such articles, or, for the matter of that, fifty such scurrilous papers as the Bhala, cannot possibly do the least injury to it; but an offence is after all an offence, and the writer fails to see the propriety of Government letting off the editor with simple warning as suggested by the Paisa Akhbár of Lahore.

ZARIF,
8th January, 1906.

Undignified controversy between the editors of two Urdu papers at Lucknow, re the literary merits of an old Urdu poem.

20. The Zarîf (Lucknow), of the 8th January, and its previous issues, are full of humorous attacks on the editor of the Oudh Punch, which occasionally verge on indecency, vulgarism and scurrility. A paper-fight has long since been carried on between the editors of the Oudh Punch and the recently started paper Zarîf, regarding the merits of an Urdu poem called the Gulzár-i-Nasîm composed by a Hindu, deceased long ago, the first considering it to be a work of great excellence and beauty, and the other holding quite the contrary views. In the course of this protracted controversy, the two editors have now come to freely indulge in personalities; and it would surprise nobody if they should soon have to appear before a law court to answer for their undignified and profitless altercations.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
21st January, 1906.

The Prince of Wales' visit to India, and the real condition of the people.

1. THE Indian People (Allahabad), of the 21st January, says:—The following characteristic and suggestive remarks about the Royal Tour in India appear in the Review of Reviews:—"Beyond a languid feeling of curiosity as to the contents of the Prince's daily bag, no one seems to concern himself about the Royal progress. Some day we may have an Heir Apparent to whom India will be something greater and better than a gigantic game preserve. But at present the barbarian instinct that loves to kill is too strong to be easily eradicated. If in the midst of his journeyings the Prince of Wales could be as much impressed by the extreme poverty of India as was the Tsar of Russia when he visited Hindustan, this tour might yield some valuable fruit for the Empire in days to come." The justice of these observations cannot be questioned. But it must be remembered that the Prince of Wales can only follow the programme that is marked out for him beforehand. His Royal Highness heard of the famine in Rájputana while he was passing through that part of the country, but the unlovely sights of suffering and poverty were carefully kept away from him. He sees a dressed-up and decorated India, arrayed in gala costume for his special benefit. The real India is to him as unknown as it was before he had set foot in this country. This is unavoidable in the present nature of things. The Tsar visited India when he was heir to the Russian Empire, but he came with his eyes open, and was much more the master of his time and his tour than the Prince of Wales is, and since he had heard of the extreme poverty of India he took care to verify it with his own eyes. The Prince of Wales has not got the same opportunities that the Tsar had, and consequently he has seen nothing of the real state of the country. Undoubtedly it is a pity, but it can only be remedied when Royalty in India can shake itself free from the official programme and see things for itself and judge the country with its own eyes.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th February, 1906.

The Prince of Wales at Madras and his permission to let the "Black Town" be known as "George Town" in future, and his expression of joy at being given the opportunity of meeting Indian leaders.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th February, says:—One of the most graceful and considerate acts of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales during his Indian tour has been the changing of the name of a part of the city of Madras. The native portion of that city was hitherto known by the unsavoury name of Black Town. How the name came to be adopted, or who gave such a name would be now profitless to enquire, but it was undoubtedly a relic of old barbarism, when the natives of this country were called blacks and savages by recently civilised nations. To an outsider or a foreigner such a name as Black Town conveyed a repulsive and unwholesome idea. The matter was represented to His Royal Highness and he was asked whether he would be pleased to give his own name to this part of the city of Madras. The Prince of Wales graciously gave his permission at once and Black Town, Madras, will in future be known as George Town, after the future King-Emperor. If the former name was objectionable, the new name is one upon which the citizens of Madras may be warmly congratulated, and their gratitude to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will be shared by the people of India. In his letter to Lord Ampthill, the Prince of Wales specially thanks His Excellency for the opportunity given to him of meeting Indian leaders. We are not aware whether the other provincial rulers gave His Royal Highness similar opportunities, but no mention occurs in previous acknowledgments made by the Prince of Wales. Here is a point which may be well acted upon by the authorities elsewhere, though the better part of the Royal tour is over. It is now evident that the Prince desires to see Indian leaders and to exchange views with them, and the Local Governments should afford His Royal Highness an opportunity of coming in contact with the leaders of Indian society and Indian thought.

A suggestion for the King-Emperor to carry out while opening the new Parliament.

ARYA MITRA,
1st February, 1906.

3. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st February, referring to the overwhelming majority of the Liberals at the late General Election, says that the King-Emperor, who is going to open the new Parliament in person on the 19th idem, would do well to take the opportunity to tinge his speech with such moral observations as will induce the new ministers and the members to administer the British empire without making distinction between white and black races.

The Congress and the Musalmans.

URDU-I-MUALLA,
January, 1906.

4. The Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh), for January, expressing satisfaction at the proceedings of the late Congress held at Benares, and praising the speeches of some of the leading speakers at the assemblage, says that although great difficulties were apprehended in carrying out of this session owing to various causes, the complete success of the whole affair testifies that "this holy and important movement is blessed with divine support." The Congress pandal presented a unique spectacle of patriotism and reciprocal affection, so that the amount of genuine pleasure which one derived from a few hours' presence in such an atmosphere could not elsewhere be had in one's whole life-time. But what has delighted the Muhammadan editor most is that the number of Musalmans, especially the educated ones, present at the last session was much larger than it was on any previous occasion; and he hopes that, by God's grace, the attendance of Musalmans will continue to increase from year to year, inasmuch as when once a man has taken part in the interesting and unprejudiced deliberations of the Subjects-Committee of the Congress, it will be impossible for him to keep aloof from it in future. It is a great pity indeed that some Musalman editors should be hostile to the Congress propaganda on imaginary grounds. For instance, one of these ignorant and prejudiced editors ridiculed the Congress for passing a Resolution regretting the separation of the North-West Frontier Province from the Punjab, while no such Resolution was brought forward at all. The Congress leaders need not, however, mind the ravings of such empty-headed sycophants (of the authorities), and continue to do their duty by their country with honest and unabated zeal. But one may ask these simple-minded folks that when experience shows that no two men are found to have exactly the same ideas and aspirations, how is it possible for two communities to do the same? And such being the case, do not the exigencies of politics require that all the communities should join and co-operate in those matters, at least, in which their interests are perfectly identical, and is it not a great moral and political crime on the part of any community to throw obstacles in the way of the formation of the whole country into one nation, on the ground of its disagreement with the others on certain small matters? The best course that the Muhammadans can, in the present state of their feelings, adopt is to establish a separate political conference for discussing those questions in which they differ from the Congress, or which especially relate to them as followers of Islam, and to co-operate with the Congress in all other matters on which they are at one with it: otherwise by their absolute hostility to the Congress they not only do injury to its cause, but positively "trample upon" the interests of their own co-religionists. May God soon bring them to the right path!

The Musalmans, and the Indian National Congress.

AL BASHIR,
6th February, 1906.

5. Al Bashír (Etáwah), of the 6th February, quoting the speeches delivered by the Hon'ble Justice Chandravakar and Pandit Jwala Prasad, S.C.S., at the last session of the Indian National Social Conference at Benares, says that these speeches conclusively prove that the sole object of this Conference is to do away with the caste restrictions of the Hindus and thereby ameliorate their social condition. From this one can easily perceive that the energies of the Conference are solely directed towards effecting social reforms among the Hindus only and not among the other communities of India as well, as if the Hindus alone form the entire Indian society. And such being the case, what ground have Musalmans to think that the so-called Indian National Congress does not equally aim at securing political rights and privileges mainly for Hindus? The editor is strongly of opinion that the Congressists, practically ignoring the interests of all the other communities, seek only to bring about the political advancement of Hindus in all manner of ways; and hence he wishes the Musalmans to clearly understand that unless they come to hold themselves to be a community altogether separate from the Hindus, as the Anglo-Indians or Eurasians have done, and take to seeking their rights from Government as such, there is not only no prospect of their improving their condition in any way, but it will become difficult for them even to maintain their existence in India.

The Excise Committee.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th February, says :—So little has been known of the Excise Committee which has been formed to submit a report to the Government on the Abkari administration of the country, that one does not know what progress has been made by it in the work entrusted to it. The Committee is expected to arrive in Lucknow on the 17th instant. But beyond a letter to the Secretary of a Missionary Temperance Association, we do not know if any information has been sent to anybody about the lines on which the Committee is to make enquiries, and if any non-official evidence is to be taken by the Committee. We are yet in the dark as to what the Committee did in Madras and Calcutta. If the members of the Committee do not appear to be anxious to get information from other than departmental sources, we do not see any reason why temperance reformers should fail to press their own views.

We know the scope of the Committee is very limited. It is not to go into great questions of policy. But within the Committee's limited scope much may be done to advance the cause of temperance.

* * * * * * * *

All Temperance Societies which have not been asked to give evidence or information may volunteer evidence. The declared policy of the Government is not to allow increase in consumption of liquor for the sake of revenue. The present laws are no doubt defective in themselves, but they can do a great deal to prevent the evil of drunkenness if they are worked in the right spirit, and are not allowed to be relaxed in favour of liquor-vendors. There are one and diverse ways in which the consumption of liquor is increasing. Local option we may not get; but we can insist that in issuing licenses for shops regard ought at least to be paid to the opinion of people near whose houses a shop is sought to be opened, and that no new shop should be opened at a locality where it is not wanted. Such shops should not also be turned into clubs, where there is nobody to prevent a man from getting drunk. Shops are expected to be closed after 9 P. M., and they are in a manner closed at that hour, but all the same liquor can be had at all hours of the night. There are few shops which have no back doors, fewer still which are not the dwelling places of the vendors, which facilitates the visit of purchasers at hours when the shops are supposed to be closed. Why should the dealers allow people to collect at the shops and get drunk? Why should amusements be provided at the shops? These are questions of detail and do not touch principles, but can be attended to by some alteration in the rules. There may be need of bar-rooms in European quarters, but there is none whatsoever in Indian quarters. These bar-rooms are kept open till, we believe, 11 P. M., and offer much temptation to people to purchase costly foreign spirits. Till such time that the sale of English wines was limited to bottles, the lower classes could not purchase costly drinks. These shops should be restricted and in no case allowed to be opened at places the residents of which do not want them. Local feeling should be respected. The Committee might in these small matters be of some help, if evidence be collected to show that there has been increase in the sale of wines, or cases in which facilities for drinking have interfered with the labour force in any industry. The field is limited, but it will be a great pity indeed if the opportunity now offered to get the Excise administration reformed is lost.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,

Sale of pork in the cantonment market at Bareilly.

7. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st February, referring to the recent order of the Cantonment Magistrate permitting the sale of pork in the Cantonment market at Bareilly, says that this is an innovation. The Indian public, especially the Musalmans, look upon pork as an abomination; and, hence, in order to avoid wounding the feelings of the Indian community, the District Magistrate would do well to cancel the Cantonment Magistrate's order in question, and direct pork to be sold at some unfrequented place, as was formerly the case.

ADVOCATE,

Revision of the Educational Code in the United Provinces.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th February, says:—We understand that a Committee is shortly to be appointed by the Director of Public Instruction to revise the recently issued Educational Code. We do not know what persons will constitute the Committee, but as it is to deal with very important questions relating to education problems and the working of the entire educational machinery, we hope Mr. Lewis will avail himself of the advice of non-officials who should be taken from teachers and guardians of boys and persons interested in education. The Code does not deal with matters connected with the Department only. Hence the voice of those should also be heard who are affected by and can also affect its working. The Code is a bulky thing. It will require consideration and time for revision; but we dare say three or four gentlemen could be found in the Provinces who will be ready to render the Department any help which is likely to reduce the rigour of the system and increase the usefulness of the Department.

9. The Rájpút (Agra), of the 31st January, joins a zamindar in suggesting that the Director of Agriculture would do well to establish a depôt of agricultural appliances at the headquarters of every district in the United Provinces, so that both landholders and cultivators may easily be able to inspect and purchase such of the appliances in question as they approve of and need.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th January, 1906.

Government of India's Resolution on anti-plague measures.

10. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th January, commenting upon the Government of India's Resolution on anti-plague measures, says:—It is noted that the most important change in the last five years is the opinion of the experts that rats play the most important part in spreading and keeping alive the disease. These rodents are most susceptible to infection, and it is due to them that the disease reappears in houses which have been carefully disinfected. The consequent conclusion is that "it is as essential to the safety of the community to destroy infected rats as to segregate plague-stricken people." There can be no objection to a suggestion of this kind. Even when there was no plague, rats were looked on as pests and not as pets, and rat-traps were used in most houses. The depredations of these rodents make them very undesirable acquisitions, and people have cheerfully helped in the killing of rats. It is doubtful, however, whether they can be altogether exterminated in spite of the many devices, including 'Rough on Rats,' to kill them. The difficulty comes in when a distinction has to be made between healthy and infected rats, for no such distinction is possible. The approach of the plague is announced by the sight of dead rats, and the plague kills them more expeditiously and in much larger numbers than any human contrivances. There is also a theory that it is not the rats themselves but the fleas which are their parasites that spread the infection. The entire theory is one of reasonable, and not scientific, certainty; but the co-operation of the people in the destruction of rats may be fully reckoned upon, and we believe they have readily responded to the demand made upon them. Among the different precautions taken, experience has shown that none is so effective as the prompt abandonment of an infected area for a period that may vary according to circumstances. The Government might be informed that this theory has the sanction of the Hindu Sástras, as the saying is quite common that he who escapes from a great epidemic alone lives. The word is mahámári, which means a frightful mortality, and can have reference only to the plague. In earlier times when cities were neither so large nor so thickly populated and the habits of the people much simpler than at present, it was easy to evacuate any place promptly, but it passes understanding now to imagine how a city like Calcutta, or Bombay, or even Allahabad can be evacuated by the whole population. The ancient direction is still followed in this country, and large numbers of people promptly leave as soon as the plague appears, and the Government need not urge them to adopt this measure of precaution. Compulsory evacuation, however, which was at first resorted to in the Punjab with disastrous results, is out of the question. It ought to be recognised that the principle of evacuation is largely believed by the people who practise it, and if facilities are given, as proposed in the present Resolution, more people might avail themselves of this precaution; but absolute or complete evacuation of any large infected area is neither practicable nor feasible.

Only qualified assent can be given to the immunity supposed to be conferred by inoculation. As the Government puts it, the adoption of inoculation depends upon the strength of popular sentiment in its favour or against it. It would be useless to deny the fact that popular sentiment, never very favourable towards inoculation, has not yet recovered from the shock it received by the Malkowal tragedy, and there is really no body of public opinion, popular or scientific, yet in favour of inoculation. It is yet entirely in the experimental stage, and that also of a rudimental character. It would be unsafe to build any theory upon the potentialities of inoculation as a measure of protection or precaution. The last measure, though it is not the last in the Government Resolution, is about improving the insanitary and crowded condition of cities. The direction given is that municipalities and local bodies should be encouraged to look to these matters. This is trifling with the situation entirely. The whole question is one of improved sanitation and better residential quarters, and not of rats, segregation, inoculation or anything else. Rats are not confined to the poor man's house, and they are specially fond of the meat-safe and the larder in European houses, and yet there are scarcely any cases of plague in those houses. People who are ill fed and ill housed are the principal victims of plague as of every other epidemic. What can municipalities and local bodies do to help them? What are the funds at their disposal? In a number of years they may widen a few streets, or they may lay down a few drains. Will that stamp out the plague? The Imperial and Provincial revenues alone can carry out the necessary reforms of cities and towns. The surpluses that are spent year after year on the army and upon improved engines of warfare and highly paid new appointments might be spent in part in improving our cities and towns, but that is left to bankrupt municipalities and local bodies that cannot light their lamps or pave their roads, while the Government stalks about on the high horse of the mentor and the instructor! Everywhere the complaint is that while the Government appoints commissions and resorted formerly to objectionable methods, it has done very little to help the municipalities and local bodies to fight the plague; and that impression will be strengthened by this Resolution which gives such fine advice to the municipalities without any promise of financial help.

ADVOCATE,
8th February, 1906.

The Swadeshi movement and the Rungpur Special Constables' case.

11. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th February, says:—The hint thrown out by Sir Francis Maclean has, it seems, been acted upon. The Government of Sir Bampfylde Fuller has ordered the withdrawal of the order passed by the Magistrate of Rungpur for the prosecution of the persons who were appointed special constables but refused to serve as such. Does it mean that the judgment in the case will not be delivered? While the people are satisfied that the erratic Lieutenant-Governor of the new province has seen his mistake, a judicial pronouncement on the issues raised would be a very welcome addition to the authoritative literature on the subject. We heartily congratulate the gentlemen who had the courage of their conviction, and faced the music of a State prosecution with a fair prospect of a term as His Majesty's uninvited guests. The show of such a bold front is much to be appreciated.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
7th February, 1906.

Need for keeping a strict watch on subordinate police and judicial officials.

12. The Nasim-i-Agra (Agra), of the 7th February, complains, in a long article, that the majority of the subordinate police and judicial officials are generally a lot of unsympathetic, hard-hearted, foul-mouthed, tyrannical and corrupt men; so that the people who have occasion to go to them are not only much ill-treated and abused but are freely fleeced as well. There are no doubt some honest officials among the men in question, but their number is extremely small. The only possible way to improve the morale of the corrupt and otherwise misbehaved classes of officials is to keep a strict watch on all their doings, recommending for promotion only those who are found to bear an unexceptionally good character, and severely punishing the misbehaved ones.

ITTIHAD,

A complaint against brokers at Lucknow.

13. The Ittihád (Lucknow), of the 16th January, stating that a number of dalláls or brokers were lately charged with the offence of carrying on their business in the public thoroughfares at Bombay, and fined Rs. 25 each, regrets that no similar action has ever been taken at Lucknow, where the brokers have made themselves a much greater nuisance than their confrères are at Bombay.

VI.—RAILWAY.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th February, 1906.

A railway collision near Hathras.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th February, says:—Beyond a brief announcement no particulars have yet appeared of the railway collision between Pali and Sasni close to Hathras. All that the public yet knows is that a passenger train collided with a goods train, and that the European driver and Indian fireman of the passenger train, besides two passengers, were killed. The brakesman, signaller and six passengers are reported wounded. The accident must have been more serious than appears from this account, for it is only in very serious accidents that drivers and firemen are killed. Usually they jump off and escape either unhurt, or with some injuries, before the actual collison takes place. It is apparent that either the driver of the passenger train did not know that a collision was imminent, or he had no time to save himself. There is reason to apprehend that the casualties must have been more numerous than are reported so far. Our information is that the line was blocked on the 1st instant, and passengers had to tranship and walk over a distance of nearly a mile. Several injured persons were detained, and there were reports that a good deal of property had been lost. The result of the official inquiry will be awaited with anxious interest. In other parts of India an accident of this nature would give rise to a crop of claims for damages either by the relatives of the deceased persons, or by the injured persons, for the liability of the railway authorities in law is quite clear. In this part of the country people have less clear notions about their legal rights, but we hope they will find legal advisers. It is not yet known how the accident happened, but there was something wrong with the line clear message, to judge from the reports we hear. There will not be much difficulty in fixing the blame on the proper persons. Considering how the slightest mistake or carelessness may bring about a terrible disaster, the working of railways must be admired for its general safety.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

ZULQARNAIN,
7th February, 1906.

A suggestion for raising the pay of post office clerks.

15. Zulqarnain (Budaun), of the 7th February, complains that notwithstanding the Postal Department is perhaps the most useful and honest department, its employés are not only not allowed holidays for Indian festivals as their confrères are in other Government offices, but they are the worst paid of all Government employés, the minimum pay of a postal clerk in a head office being only Rs. 20 a month. This pay is certainly quite inadequate for a man who is expected to be at least a matriculate, specially in view of the general rise that has taken place in the prices of all necessaries of life, on account of constant recurrence of famines. The scales of salaries of the clerks in other public departments have lately been revised and raised, and Government would do well to do justice to the poor postal clerks also, raising the minimum pay of the lowest grade clerk to Rs. 30 a month, and making a proportionate increase in the other grades.

HINDOSTHAN,
2nd February, 1906.

The Statesman, and the Government of India.

16. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 2nd February, says:—Much sympathy is felt for the Statesman in its quarrel with the Government of India. Nobody defends, or would desire to justify the publication of a confidential document; but it is recognised that for Government to set itself above the law, and to mete out punishment to an accused without trial in a Court of Justice, is to create a dangerous precedent which is liable to interfere with the liberty of the press.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th February, 1906.

The Statesman, and the Government of India.

17. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th February, says:—In the correspondence that passed between the Government of India and the Editor of the Statesman, and the subsequent orders passed by the Government, stress has been laid upon two points, first, that the publication of Lord Curzon's note was a gross breach of journalistic propriety, and second, that the more influential journals in India had maintained a seemly reticence in respect of the incident, namely, the publication of the document in question. Evidently the Government expected that its decision would also meet with the approval of the more influential journals in India. Only two such journals, the Pioneer and the Englishman, at first approved of the decision, the Englishman adding that the compliment about the seemly reticence was intended for it specially. The Pioneer said the position of the Government was unassailable, but the next day it changed its tone and found the action of the Government unjust and indefensible. As regards the rest of the newspapers in India there was no mistaking their attitude. The Times of India, faithful to Lord Curzon unto the last, condemned the action of Government most emphatically and every other newspaper, Indian or Anglo-Indian, has followed the same lines. The reticence in regard to the incident itself was an accident, though a number of newspapers did comment upon Lord Curzon's note. The only reason why it was not commented upon more widely was that the document was not of sufficient importance. It related only to the court language of Sambalpur district and certain connected matters. Its interest lay in the fact that Mr. H. H. Risley, or whoever then happened to be the Home Secretary, was somewhat roughly handled by Lord Curzon. If it had been a more important or sensational document, every newspaper in India would have reproduced it and commented upon it, and there would have been no seemly or unseemly reticence about the matter at all. There are some newspapers which are in the confidence of the Government and which support the Government invariably, but the position of the genuine newspaper is of absolute independence and it makes no bid for official favour or official patronage. Among English-speaking races the liberty of the press is valued far more than the favour or frowns of the Government, and the opinion of a Government on the propriety or otherwise of the conduct of a newspaper has not the slightest influence upon public opinion.

If the Government had been anywhere recognised in the British Empire as the judge of journalistic propriety, there would have been no need for legislation for the protection of Official Secrets. The Government would have had merely to say that official secrets and confidential State papers should not be published and newspapers would have abstained from publishing them. It was because the Government has no power over the press, beyond what the law gives it, that the Official Secrets Act was passed and revised in India in order to make it more stringent in the teeth of the most powerful and unanimous opposition. There is no question of propriety between the Government and the press. The standard of the public interest varies from the official and the public points of view. If Lord Curzon's note is an official secret the Statesman has infringed the law and must abide by the consequences. The Government has the power to set the law in motion without reference to any one. But the Government shrank from this step as it would have rested with nine jurymen to decide whether it was in the public interest that Lord Curzon's note should have been published. Had there been a prosecution there would have been a triumphant acquittal for the Statesman. Instead of appealing to the law, the Government has taken a course which was never contemplated by either the law, or the sense of propriety. As has been pointed out by several influential newspapers the Government has frequently condemned the boycott in Bengal, while its action against the Statesman is a boycott, pure and simple. Official advertisements are not sent to the press as a favour, but in the public interest and in the interest of the Government, and are paid out of public revenues. The Statesman has undoubtedly the largest circulation of all Calcutta papers, and official advertisements attained a wide publicity in its columns. The Government not only introduces legislation, but lays down the laws of conduct and propriety, and it constitutes itself the accuser, prosecutor and judge. For the newspaper press to accept such a situation without protest is to bid farewell to the liberty of the press. The Statesman itself has so far said nothing about the action of the Government, and its reticence is far more dignified than the vindictive boycott of the Government, but it is quite evident that the matter cannot rest where it is. To-day it is the Statesman; to-morrow it may be the Pioneer or the Englishman. And what will the Pioneer have to say when it is deprived of official advertisements and the double rates it boldly advertises for such advertisements? There may be no intentional indiscretion, and yet a Secretary may be offended and may proceed to boycott any newspaper. The matter is far too serious to be treated as an individual case, and it will be a grave danger if the legal rights of the Government are supplemented by executive boycott.

As regards what constitutes journalistic propriety, this is the first time we hear a Government out of Russia posing itself as the judge. Except where international complications are at stake, the publication of confidential State documents has always been regarded as a proof of newspaper enterprise and not of newspaper impropriety. The most influential newspapers have spent large sums of money in getting at important State documents, which were jealously guarded from the public. The Times published the text of the Treaty of Berlin as soon as that document had been signed, to the consternation of the representatives of the various Governments, to the great scandal of the Ministry and to the intense delight of the reading public. The publication of Lord Curzon's note may hurt Mr. Risley's pride a little, but otherwise it involves no complications of any kind. So far as the public is concerned it does not matter a brass farthing what the Government thinks of the propriety or impropriety of the publication. If the Government thinks the Statesman has done wrong, let it prosecute it under the Official Secrets Act; if it cannot, let it overlook the incident instead of resorting to improper devices and undignified courses to give vent to its displeasure. It is not the Statesman but the Government that is the real loser; for as the Times of India has pointed out, no independent or influential newspaper is dependent upon the Government for a living and an official boycott cannot do it much injury, but the Gvernment has lost a great deal in public estimation by the action it has decided to take. Everything, however, depends upon the ultimate decision of the Statesman itself, and that is what we are not in a position to anticipate.

The Statesman, and the Government of India.

ADVOCATE,
8th February, 1906.

18. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th February, says:—We are glad that the Home Department has thought it fit to withdraw itself from an awkward position by rescinding the orders against the Statesman. Whether it has been due to the adverse criticism of the Press or to the last letter of Mr. Ratcliffe, one may not stop to consider. One thing is apparent that the strong expression of public opinion had a great deal to do with the rescinding of the hasty orders. The Government of India has shown commendable regard for public opinion. How much it will make itself popular and how much discontent and ill-feeling can be removed if such regard be paid to the criticism of the Indian public opinion.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th February, 1906.

England, Tibet and China.

1. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th February, referring to the unfavourable attitude of China towards England re Tibetan affairs, soliloquizes as follows :—Our Government invited the Tashi Lama of Tibet to India. It showed the utmost hospitality to the "wild" man, giving him to understand that he would have the ruling power of the Dalai Lama given to him, and the incarnation of Mahátama (saint) Buddha readily swallowed this honeyed poison. But look at the Chinese donkeys? They are trying to put a spoke into our wheels. They do not sign the (Anglo-Tibetan) agreement. Nay, they are even going to put aside both the Tashi and Dalai Lamas, and are sending out a Tartar general with a large body of trained soldiers to be the Viceroy of that country (Tibet). Say, what are we to do now? From whom can we recoup the money that has been spent in (the Tashi Lama's) hospitality? Should we go to war with China for gaining our object (in Tibet)? Would Japan, who has delivered Manchuria from Russia, allow us to occupy Tibet, on account of the existing (Anglo-Japanese) agreement? Should we obtain possession of Tibet, we would soon let Nepal see how much longer she could remain secure in the Himalayas. When we are on two sides of Nepal, she can easily be conquered. There are no doubt impassable mountains on the southern side of Nepal, and the Napalese too have always taken good care to keep that side well fortified. (On the other hand), there are neither such formidable mountains on the northern side, nor have the Nepalese ever apprehended danger from that direction. And hence Nepal can easily be invaded (from the northern side), and then that almost independent country on one of our frontiers coming under our subjection, it will be left for us to reckon with Kabul alone. But now that British complications bid fair to arise with China, the position of Nepal will become exactly like that of Kabul, China seeking to draw her towards her, and the British Government to its own side. Would that God allowed the Nepalese to remain buried in their sleep of neglectfulness (security) some time longer, till we have acquired possession of Tibet!

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
7th February, 1906.

An American journal and its mischievous advice to Indian political agitators.

2. The Aligarh Institute Gazette (Aligarh), of the 7th February, observing that the Gallic American, in its issue of the 19th December 1905, advised the Indian politicians to turn the Britons out of India, says that this suggestion has evidently been made in view of the agitation which the National Congress has set on foot for demanding political rights from the British Government. If this agitation continues, it would be no wonder if the Congressists demanded, in course of time, not only the Lieutenant-Governorships, but even the Viceroyalty for Indians, and ended by asking for complete autonomy. The Gallic American does not, however, say who are to take the place of the British rulers, its own countrymen, or those educated Indians who have learnt only to pester the Government with unreasonable demands, and to set up a dangerous agitation on meeting with refusal. It perhaps might be well for the American journal to be told that the Musalmans in India, who are perfectly satisfied with the British Government, not only do not want a change in the present Government, but would fain help it to ensure its stability if circumstances required it; and that the foolish advice of that journal would, therefore, have no effect on their minds.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,

Approval of the rumoured proposal for the appointment of a member of the Royal family as Viceroy of India in future.

3. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 12th February, says that some time ago it was rumoured that a member of the Royal family would in future be appointed as Viceroy of India; that though the proposal was not yet formally made, it had the approval of the King-Emperor; and that probably the first Viceroy of the Royal family would be the Duke of Connaught, or, according to some, the Duke of Teck. It matters little which member of the Royal family is selected for the Viceroyalty of India. An owner has always greater regard and love for his property than his servant. Mercenary "Kings" (Viceroys) can hardly have true sympathy with Indians, whereas Viceroys appointed from the Royal family are sure to look upon Indians as their own subjects and treat them as such. Why, the Indians would much rather put up with bad measures that the latter class of Viceroys might adopt at any time, believing that these would "bear their burdens" too at another time. Such Viceroys will of course take pains to make themselves well acquainted with the true state of things in India, and the grievances of the people will, through them, sooner or later reach the ears of His Gracious Majesty. It is altogether improper that a "servant" should be installed in the place of such illustrious Indian sovereigns as Akbar, Shahjahan and Aurangzeb. Would that the day arrived soon when Royalty would sit again on the Indian gaddi!

Fifty years of British rule in Oudh.

4. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 15th February, says:—Oudh completed its fiftieth year under British rule on the 12th instant.

* * * * * * *

If the question be asked: have the people made any progress during the last fifty years? One answer is possible and one only from the standpoint of the people. It is this that the people have undoubtedly advanced morally, but their material condition has become worse from bad. The material condition at the time of the change of Government was surely not good. In the last fifty years it has not only not improved but has deteriorated. We are surely not to be guided in this matter by the testimony of the Taluqdars of Oudh who assured, the other day, His Excellency the Viceroy of the growing prosperity and material advancement of the people. The Taluqdars have no doubt become rich, because the strong arms of the Government support them in realising their rent without any difficulty. They have not to spend much to protect their person and wealth from intrigues at home, and have no more to contend against the avarice of State agents. But 250 taluqdars or more, much less a dozen of the gentlemen who speak in the name of the body, do not constitute the people of Oudh, and they have no right to judge of the prosperity of the people from their own undoubtedly prosperous condition. What is the verdict of the masses? What is the opinion of the elderly gentlemen who have witnessed the change and watched its progress? The verdict is that while the blessings of peace and settled government are great, while the efforts to look to the comfort of the people are praiseworthy, prosperity—barkat—has left the country, and the people have grown poorer. This idea exists, and we think there will be few inhabitants of Oudh, least among the educated, who do not believe in its truth.

How can the economic condition of the Oudh people be other than what it is declared to be? There are only three means of livelihood open to them: agriculture, trade and service. In the first, there has been no encroachment, but the land has many more mouths to feed than what it used to do. It has to find employment for many more men and field for the ambition of more capitalists than what used to be the condition fifty years ago. The pressure on land is great, and it makes people poor. As to trade and industries, there is no question that much has passed into the hands of the foreign capitalists. The people could not compete with the better resources of the foreign capitalists in trade, and the artisans with those of the skilled people of foreign countries. The artisan classes have suffered heavily. So have the petty money-lenders, who could not find any other field for secure investment than land. As to service, the higher grades in the Civil Service and the higher and lower in the Military have been altogether closed to Indians. The closing of the Military Service has emasculated the people and has discouraged some of the leisured classes who have no opening for their ambition and have only to join an overcrowded Bar or accept Government service in the clerical line. These and similar other causes have impoverished the middle class—known as Safaid posh Sharifs—the class which best appreciates the blessings of a settled government and is loud in its complaints of want of means for earning a livelihood.

There may be some doubt, not among Indians but among the Anglo-Indians, as to the effect of British rule on the general condition of the people of Oudh, but we think there can be none about its effect on the inhabitants of Lucknow. The people may be responsible to a great extent, but there are few who deny the utter negligence on the part of the rulers to the interests of the inhabitants of what was called the most beautiful city of Upper India. Though capital of the province of Oudh, yet its share of provincial revenue was denied to it. Not a High school, a Hospital, a Court building was given to it. Even Nazul funds reserved for local purposes were diverted to swell the provincial revenues. Lucknow suffered considerably for this negligence, its people migrated to far-off lands, until to-day it is only a shadow of what it was fifty years ago. It will be ungratefulness not to acknowledge that lately much has been done to undo part of the negligence of the past decade, but yet a great deal has to be done to undo the mistakes of earlier days.

Looking back at the events of the past fifty years, even at those of the last twenty-five years, one has no reason to feel despondent. The blessings of a settled government and peace are great indeed, and a high price has to be paid for both. Oudh has paid the price, and signs of awakening are to be found. The forces that have brought about a better moral atmosphere, which have created a thirst after knowledge, and a consciousness about the value of modern civilisation, and which above all have placed residents of Oudh in communication with other parts of India, cannot work without creating a desire in them to better their economic condition. We can only hope that the working of these forces will not be checked, and that the people and Government would both join hands to work out a future worthy of the province.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,

Import of rifles of British manufacture among the jirgahs on the North-West frontier of India

5. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 12th February, referring to the alarm lately raised by the Pioneer at the reported import of a large number of rifles of British make into Afghanistan, viâ Persian Gulf, and thence among the jirgahs on the North-West Frontier of India, tauntingly asks why Englishmen alone should use the best arms and not other races as well. Again, if British solders are able to beat the Pathans wielding as good weapens as they themselves do, it will redound more to their glory than it can do at present, when the latter are not similarly armed. If, however, it is not considered desirable that the Pathans should possess the latest arms of precision, why are English manufacturers allowed to sell the rifles to all customers without restriction?

III.—NATIVE STATES.

UNION GAZETTE,
14th February,
1906.

Prosecution of the father of the notorious Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq in Rampur by a near relative of the Nawab.

6. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 14th February, states that Sahibzada Najábat Ali Khan, a near relative of the Nawab of Rampur, secretly instituted on the 10th January last a criminal prosecution against Munshi Ali Husain, the old father of Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq, in whose name several pamphlets have appeared against the administration of that State, charging the latter with offences under sections 511, 384, 385, 506 and 500 of the Indian Penal Code in the court of Munshi Mansab Ali, a District Magistrate in Rampur, and, quietly obtaining a warrant for the arrest of the accused through the court of the Political Agent, Commissioner of the Rohilkhand division on the 24th idem, had the accused arrested at his house at Hapur, district Meerut, the official who executed the warrant giving out, strange to say, that the offences for which the accused was to be arrested were not bailable. When Munshi Ahmad Husain, younger son of the accused, who is a student at the Roorkee College, heard next day of what had happened to his father, he at once proceeded home, and, after visiting several places for legal advice in the matter, filed, on the 18th February, an application through a barrister at-law in the court of the Commissioner at Bareilly, for transfer of his father's case. The editor does not see how the accused could have dared to attempt extorting money in a ruling State from a relative of the ruler himself, or to hold out any intimidation to him in connection with any pamphlet to be brought out regarding the affairs of that State. Even granting that the pamphlets published in the name of his son were really the work of the latter, how could the accused be punished for the alleged offence of his son? Moreover, Munshi Mansab Ali, the Rampur magistrate before whom the suit in question has been filed, and who is a native of Hapur, the place of residence of the accused, is not, as every one knows, well disposed towards the latter. Under these circumstances, the editor hopes that Mr. Tweedy, who is a just and vigilant officer, will perceive the expediency of transferring the suit to a court in British territory where impartial justice will be done to the accused, and issue orders accordingly. There are certain rumours current in connection with this case, which augur grave danger to the accused, and it is strongly to be desired that the Government will see that the accused is allowed to have the full advantage of a fair trial which he can expect only in a British court.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
11th February,
1906.

Question of the amalgamation of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court with the High Court at Allahabad.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 11th February, says:—In the new name that has been given to these Provinces emphasis is laid upon the word "United." Really speaking, there has never been any proper union between the two provinces called Agra and Oudh, and the present circumstances are not favourable to such a union in future. We all recognise the original difference between the two provinces. The province of Oudh was acquired much later than the province of Agra. Oudh was at that time a separate kingdom, and the last King of Oudh died only the other day in Calcutta as a State pensioner. The Talukdars are great feudal barons, who are now large landowners, but still they have traditions to which they naturally cling fast, and they form the landed aristocracy of the Province. The "United" Provinces were an anomaly for a long period, for Oudh was a non-regulation province, and the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces was only Chief Commissioner of Oudh. It is only since the new name bestowed by Lord Curzon that Oudh has become part of a Lieutenant-Governorship, but even now it is only partially under a Lieutenant-Governor. Every province under the administration of a Lieutenant-Governor has either a High Court or a Chief Court, but Oudh has neither one nor the other, and the most curious thing is that it does not even feel it as a grievance. If a plebiscite could be taken, we dare say the people of Oudh would declare for a High Court; but they have a strong feeling against union or amalgamation even in the matter of the High Court. Even when the Congress met in Lucknow in 1899, the question of a High Court was never raised, for the Congress could have only recommended a High Court for the United Provinces, and since there is a High Court already at Allahabad all that is wanted is the expansion of its jurisdiction to Oudh, and Oudh did not want it. The Talukdars of Oudh are the only people who carry any weight with the Government, and they do not want to come to Allahabad for a court of appeal. If they have a High Court, they want one at Lucknow, and even the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh thinks Lucknow will have its own High Court. As two High Courts are out of the question, the hope is entertained that the Allahabad High Court will be moved to Lucknow.

It is now entirely a question of Lucknow versus Allahabad. The people of Lucknow have no feeling against the people of Allahabad, nor is there any jealousy at Allahabad against Lucknow. The two cities should help in raising the importance and prestige of each other, but this is made impossible by the ways of the Government. Even the Viceroy of India has two capitals—the summer and winter. But the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces has three capitals—Naini Tal, Lucknow and Allahabad. One is the summer, the second is the political and the fashionable capital, and the third capital is of drudgery and business. This is the mistake that has been made, and there is a constant apprehension that some further injustice is intended to what is the nominal, but really the neglected, headquarters of Government. Thus when there was a rumour that the High Court would be removed to Lucknow there was a tumult of alarm and protest. Again, when it was positively denied by the Chief Justice and the Lieutenant-Governor that the High Court would be removed, people became nervous at Lucknow, because, forsooth, it was apprehended that Lucknow would be brought under the jurisdiction of the Allahabad High Court. Would that be a calamity or a matter for congratulation? Indeed, the question cannot be indefinitely postponed. Oudh is no longer a non-regulation province, nor under a Chief Commissioner. Therefore, the Judicial Commissioner is an anomaly and will have to go sooner or later.

It is inevitable that Oudh will be brought under the jurisdiction of the Allahabad High Court, which will then attain its proper position. And yet the prospect, natural and desirable as it is, seems to be regarded with consternation in Lucknow and Oudh.

Famine, and the Government.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 11th February, says :—There is no longer much room for doubt that we are face to face with an extensive famine, with which our unfortunate country is now so familiar. While the Budget shows large surpluses there is no improvement whatever in the condition of the ryot. The margin between a bare and insufficient living and positive want remains as narrow as ever. The failure of the rains for a single season plunges him into debt and starvation, and he has nothing on which to weather his trouble, or to pull through a season of drought. Of course the Government opens relief works to prevent people dying from starvation, but nothing has been done to help the agriculturists to have a reserve of energy and resources to struggle successfully through a lean season.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
11th February,
1906.

Exportation of food grains, and its alleged connection with the recurrence of famines in India.

9. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra), of the 11th February, referring to the famine which has overtaken Rajputana, Central India, Bundelkhand and the Punjab this year, says that the constant recurrence of this dire calamity in India is due to no other cause but to the enormous exportation of food grains, which has been brought about by the introduction of railways in the country. While in Akbar's time wheat sold in India at annas 4¼ per maund, it sells now at more than Rs. 4 a maund, notwithstanding that the area under cultivation and the means of irrigation have very largely increased! It is high time that Government took pity upon the poor starving Indians, and saved them from the distress of recurring famines, by prohibiting the exportation of food grains once and for all from India.

GARHWALI,
December, 1905 and
January, 1906.

Suggestion for constructing a big tank at Danda Mandi for agricultural purposes in Garhwal.

10. The Garhwáli (Dehra Dún), in its joint issue for December and January, says that Garhwal being a hilly country, it is entirely dependent on rain for cultivation, so that it is greatly liable to famine whenever there is a deficient fall of rain. It is therefore highly expedient that Government should construct a big tank in the district to provide water for irrigation of fields. Dánda Mandi, where survey was lately made by a Government engineer, for the purpose, is really a very suitable place for the construction of a tank, which will not only cost a comparatively small sum if built there, but will prove of great use to cultivators in the neighbouring parts of the district; and the editor would urge the Government to take up and settle, at an early date, the question of constructing a tank in the locality in question and thereby do the agriculturist a very good turn.

CITIZEN,
12th February,
1906.

Alleged glimpses of Lord Minto's policy.

11. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 12th February, says :—In his reply to the address presented to His Excellency by the Indian Association, Lord Minto, in expressing his inability to reverse the Bengal Partition observed: " I must ask you to remember that I am here as an administrator whose duty it is to carry out a policy already approved by the Secretary of State, and I should be misleading you if I in any way appeared to encourage a hope of its reversal." We must say that it is not without misgiving that we have read the above statement of Lord Minto. Is it really the bounden duty of a Viceroy to carry out any policy approved by the Secretary of State? Has the Viceroy no freedom in the matter? Is he only a puppet to do what he is bid to? Has he not even the alternative of resignation left him? No self-respecting Briton would subscribe to such a statement of responsible Viceregal service. What Lord Minto said amounted to this that although he might differ with the Secretary of State, he had no choice in the matter, but must carry out what had been approved by that high functionary. Had Lord Minto said that he had given his best consideration to the policy of the Partition and that he thought it to be wise and just and expedient and necessary, and accordingly he must not reverse it, then he might have won the respect of the Indian community for his view of the question. But it is a principle of Viceregal subservience that he has enunciated, which can never win the sympathy of the intelligent section of the Indian people. It has been made plain by the above quoted observation of the Viceroy that he will exercise no independence as Viceroy, but will permit himself to be blindly led by the Secretary of Sate.

* * * * * * * *

Then again, even if Lord Minto be taken at his word, he could have, consistently with his idea that the Viceroy existed only to give effect to the mandates of the Secretary of State, undertaken to have the Partition question reconsidered. It was Mr. Brodrick who had approved the Partition and not Mr. John Morley. There being a new Secretary of State, and the Partition having never been before him, the question could have been very well placed before him with the arguments of the opponents to the measure and Lord Minto's views thereupon. Certainly, His Lordship does not hold that he cannot submit any view differing from that of a quondam Secretary of State without being guilty of disobedience to superior official authority. If that be Lord Minto's view, his conception of the position of Viceroy is one that is not sanctioned by the previous history of the relations between the Viceroy and the Secretary of State for India.

The only rational relation that can subsist between such a high and responsible official as the Viceroy and his superior in office, the Secretary of State, is one of thorough independence of both. But when Lord Minto publicly says that it is his duty to carry out a policy approved by the Secretary of State, he gives us a clear glimpse into the nature of the policy that he means to follow. It may be that by implicit obedience to a Liberal Secretary of State, he may be the instrument of conferring on us, Indians, certain distinct advantages; yet on the ground of general principle we must object to the Viceroy being only an executive instrument of the Secretary of State.

* * * * * * * *

Lord Curzon had one commendable trait in his character, and it was an independence, thorough and uncompromising. He knew that the Anglo-Indian officials exercised a perniciously benumbing influence on the Viceroy, particularly during the first one or two years of his career. Lord Curzon was determined from the outset to be a proof against such influence, and it was a determination that he kept loyally. For this reason he was exceedingly unpopular with the Anglo-Indian officials for a considerable period of his career. There is, we are afraid, sufficient evidence to show that Lord Minto is an antithesis of Lord Curzon in this respect. Lord Curzon's independence has not conduced to the welfare of the people of India, but, generally speaking, subserviency in the Viceroy to the bureaucracy is calculated to be more mischievous and harmful than a healthy spirit of strict independence. In his reply to the address of the Indian Association, Lord Minto betrayed the fact that he had been accepting official versions of the Partition and its effects and consequences as Gospel truths. Referring to the state of things in Eastern Bengal, Lord Minto said:—" I am bound to tell you that the ample information at my disposal would appear to prove without a doubt that the action deemed necessary by the executive authority of the province was fully justified." The italics are ours. Now, this betrays clearly his complete dependence on the officials for information and counsel. On the occasion of a crisis, such as Bengal is passing through now, it is the bounden duty of the highest official in the country to depend for light and guidance not only from the officials, but also from the people. Lord Minto has evinced no anxiety :to elicit all that was possible to elicit from trustworthy native sources, then to test the truth of their statements for himself by feasible means, and afterwards to come to a conclusion about the matter. Even when some Bengali leaders expressed their desire to see the Viceroy on the subject of the prevailing disorder in Eastern Bengal, Lord Minto declined to receive them, and when they were afterwarrds granted an interview, their representations though listened to were slighted in effect.

Thus, the glimpses, that we have already got of Lord Minto's policy, are that in all ordinary matters he will be mere clay in the hands of his Anglo-Indian advisers—an easy-going man, shirking the onerous duty of judging things for himself—and that in matters of greater moment he will follow the mandates from the India Office without demur. We do not know what the result of such a policy will be, but that it does not augur well for the country may well be predicted. Our appeal to the Viceroy is that His Excellency may soon discover the advisability of exercising the utmost independence in the decision of all matters that come before him for settlement, and in doing so attach sufficient importance to Indian views and opinions which he should gather not only from the native press, but also from representative Indians. We hope good sense will prevail with our new Viceroy in his responsible career as the ruler of one fifth of the human race.

ADVOCATE,
11th February,
1906.

Question of the separation of Behar from Bengal.

12. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th February, says:—The visit of Lord Minto to Behar and the probability that, as soon as Parliament opens, the question of the partition of Bengal will be discussed, has induced two prominent Behar journalists to consider the case for the separation of Behar from Bengal. These gentlemen themselves are well aware of the feeling of their province and are known for their patriotism. Mr. Mahesh Charan, Editor of the Behar Times, and Assistant Secretary of the Behar Landholders' Association, and Mr. Satchidanand Sinha, Barister at-Law and Editor of the Hindustán Review, have brought out a pamphlet in which an alternative scheme has been discussed to show how it is possible to bring together all Bengali-speaking races and yet carry out an administrative reform for which the people of Behar had been crying all these years. The substance of the pamphlet appeared in the Hindustan Review some time back. This has now been enlarged to show how it is possible to solve the knotty question without exciting all those angry feelings which have come into existence on account of Lord Curzon's scheme. A portion of the pamphlet is devoted to the discussion of the attitude which the Bengali leaders have adopted towards Behar, and the position of uncompromising opposition to partition which they adopted from the very beginning. They, instead of laying down an alternative scheme when Lord Curzon's first scheme was published, opposed the entire scheme and merely asked for the whole province to be raised to the status of a Governorship. The writers bring a charge against Bengalis of indifference towards the interests of Beharis. It is no use raking up old controversies, specially so when the Bengali leaders have seen the mistake of their opposing the separation of Behar. When the first partition scheme was published, had the Bengali leaders consulted the leaders of the different parts of the province, they would have come to the conclusion to which they have come now, and perhaps would have saved themselves all the trouble of carrying on the agitation all these months. Even now it is not too late to mend matters either for the Government or for the people. That the people of Behar want separation from Bengal is apparent from the Government records. In 1896 the Beharis prayed for separation to the late Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the then Lieutenant-Governor of the Lower Provinces, who pooh-poohed the idea and held that neither the Government of India nor the Secretary of State was likely to propose the creation of another Lieutenant-Governorship in Upper India. Even before this formal prayer was made, the inhabitants of centres like Gya, in the course of an address to Sir Charles Elliot, the then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, had expressed a hope that the importance of Behar as a separate province might be recognised in matters of legislation and administration. The feeling is natural, because the Beharis feel that the fact of their being a mere appanage to the bigger province of Bengal interferes with their material progress and intellectual advancement. The idea is patriotic and ought to have been encouraged.

But the Government of India, while considering the Partition scheme, did not consider the question whether it was possible to separate Behar.

* * * * * * *

The writers of the pamphlet want to put together Behar, Chota Nagpur and Orissa, and do not want Assam to form a separate Government. The new Lieutenant-Governorship under the proposed new scheme will contain 33,549,785 people within an area of 109,682 square miles, as opposed to an area of 133,202 square miles with 48,785,503 souls. To Behar Mr. Mahesh Charan and Mr. Sinha would add the Benares division. Even without ceding our permanently settled districts to Behar, the province in itself will be large enough for one Lieutenant-Governor. The physical, geographical and linguistic considerations all favour the new scheme so ably put forward. We think a good case has been made out for an amendment of the Partition scheme, and it deserves consideration at the hands of the Government. It is the duty of the Government to remove all unnecessary heart-burning, and there is no other way to get it removed than by taking into careful consideration a scheme which finds so much support in Behar and which we hope will not be opposed by any considerable section of the people of Bengal. The Bengali-speaking races desire to live under one administration; the Beharis and Hindi-speaking races also desire to do the same. These are noble desires and the Government cannot do better than show consideration for them. The question deserves every consideration, and it is with this view that some time ago we suggested that a Commission should be appointed to consider the whole question for the territorial redistribution of the Indian provinces. A strong Commission will, we hope, in a few months be able to thresh out the question in a manner which is likely to bring peace where unrest and discontent now prevail. The avowed object and aim of the Government of India is administrative reform and not breaking the growing unity of this or that people. It should show regard for the wishes of the people whose goodwill it will gain by re-considering the question of partition, which still continues to excite an amount of ill-feeling throughout the old and the new Bengal Province.

Suggestion for the redistribution of the Provinces of India on a linguistic basis.

ADVOCATE,
11th February,
1906.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th February, publishes the following letter from a correspondent:—Sir,—So far there has been quite a flood of destructive oratory—written and printed—over that very ill-advised partition of Bengal, the last legacy of the Curzonian régime, but no clear constructive criticism has yet been offered, and certainly no comprehensive scheme which would apply to the whole of India. It is time that suggestions towards a better administrative division of India were made. These, if they all run in the same direction, are bound to strengthen the hands of the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale when he goes this year to England to try to promote a Bill for the better government of India in the new House of Commons.

I herewith submit my suggestions as a basis for my countrymen to start a discussion upon.

There should be a rearrangement of all the provinces upon a linguistic basis, each under a Governor appointed direct from England on a seven years' tenure and drawing a salary of Rs. 90,000 or £ 6,000 a year.

The provinces to be grouped are given below:—

(a) Bengal and Assam. (Behar, Chota Nagpur and Orissa to be separated.)

(b) Behar, Oudh and Agra up to Delhi (to be known as the Province of Hindustán.)

(c) Punjab, Baluchistan and Sindh. (This will absorb the newly created frontier Province.)

(d) Bombay, Berar and the other Mahrathi-speaking districts of the Central Provinces and portions of Madras on the West Coast. Aden to be handed over to the Naval Board—being the first coaling station in the East.

(f) Burma and the Federated Malay States.

(g) Nagpur (the present Central Provinces), Chota Nagpur, Orissa and the Uriya-speaking peoples from Madras.

Thus, there would be seven Governors instead of the present many small and varying Provincial Governments. Coorg, Ajmer, etc., to be removed from the Political Department and tacked on to their nearest provinces. This arrangement will also supply the indispensible seaports to all the provinces except the middle Province of Hindustan.

(2) Each province thus constituted to have a High Court under a Royal Charter, a fully developed Legislative Council and a University.

(3) The Bombay arrangement of having Commissioners with large powers almost like Sub-Governors, to be introduced in all the provinces and the Boards of Revenue to be abolished.

(4) Half the High Court Judges to be Indians, to be selected from among the practising vakils and barristers of over 10 years' standing, irrespective of the High Court before which they have been practising.

(5) The Governor General's Executive Council to be enlarged. The Director-Generals, etc., of Commerce, Agriculture and Education to be included under the name of Ministers—a designation which should be applied to all the other members also.

(6) The Foreign Department to be broken up into two—

(a) The Foreign Department proper, the portfolio of which might continue to be held by the Governor General as at present, and

(b) Feudatory India, for which a separate Minister should be appointed.

(7) Some of these Ministers' posts to be reserved for Indians, who could not only be safely trusted, but who would also bring a larger sympathy and a more intimate knowledge of their countrymen to bear upon their work.

(8) With regard to the Viceregal term of service it too might be extended to seven years, as also that of the Ministers. The pay of the Viceroy might well be fixed at Rs. 2,25,000 or £15,000 a year.

(9) The Supreme Government to be restricted to not more than 25 per cent. of the revenue. Much greater freedom of action and responsibility to be allowed to the Provincial Governments with regard to their budgets than at present.

(10) With regard to the India Council, I prefer the earlier attitude of the National Congress, which was for ending and not for mending it; the experience of India of its members is generally so old that it is out of date.

There are a good many other items, but most of them have formed subjects for Resolutions in the Congress, and so have been before the country and its rulers for so many years that there is no use in repeating them here. The suggestions I have put forward above are comparatively new, and fully deserve a thorough discussion, and, if found to stand the test, to be embodied in any document for the future government of India on a better basis.

CITIZEN,
12th February,
1906.

Protest against the Secretary of State's new rules providing for the recruitment of Assistant Engineers for India from among Europeans only.

14. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 12th February, says :—The last issue of the Gazette of India publishes "regulations" as to the appointment of Assistant Engineers by the Secretary of State for India in 1906. These rules require notice because they directly and openly contravene a principle hitherto accepted, if not always acted upon, in appointments to the Public Works Department. It is stated that the Secretary of State will, in the summer of 1906, make not less than 10 appointments of Assistant Engineers to the Public Works Department of the Government of India, in addition to those to be made from the Royal Indian Engineering College at Cooper's Hill. It is added that in making these appointments he will act with the advice of a Select Committee, including at least one eminent representative of the profession of Engineering. It is further stated that the candidate must have attained the age of 21 and not that of 24 years. It is added that "every candidate must be a British subject of European descent, and at the time of his birth must have been a British subject either natural born or naturalised in the United Kingdom. The decision of the Secretary of State in Council as to whether a candidate satisfies this condition shall be final. He must also be of good moral character and sound physique." The italics in the above are ours. It will be seen that no native of India can offer himself as a candidate for any of these posts. They are not open to our countrymen because of their nationality. It is interesting to enquire who is responsible for these rules—the Government of India or the India Office in London. We are not in a position exactly to say which. But we are afraid they both are anxious to close the higher grades of the Public Works Department to our countrymen. When the correspondence relating to the abolition of the Royal Indian Engineering College at Cooper's Hill was going on, a fear was expressed in some quarters that one of the objects of abolishing the College was to debar the natives of India from the higher grades of the Public Works Department, which they could enter after successfully undergoing a course of training at that institution. It appears now that the fear in question was not without good ground.

VI.—RAILWAY.

Suggestion for appointment of a female ticket-collector at the Gorakhpur railway station on the Bengal and North-West Railway.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th February, 1906.

15. A correspondent of the Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 8th February, complains that while female ticket-collectors have been appointed at almost all other junctions of the Indian railways, no such appointment has yet been made at the Gorakhpur station on the Bengal and North-Western Railway. Male ticket-collectors are generally found to misbehave themselves towards Indian female passengers travelling in the third-class female carriage. An instance of this kind lately occurred at the Gorakhpur station; and the authorities would do well to appoint a female ticket-collector at that station in order to prevent such occurrences in future.

Admission of people to the Railway platform at Allahabad.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th February, 1906.

16. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th February, says:—Some time ago, it will be remembered, two young boys staying in Mr. S. Sinha's house were compelled to pay railway fare from Moghal Serai to Allahabad because they were found on the platform, where they had gone to see some friends off, after the arrival of a train. A claim for refund was made on their behalf, and after some delay the money has been refunded. As the fare was illegally and improperly obtained and there would have been no difficulty in recovering it by an action at law, the railway authorities have done wisely in settling the matter out of court. But the main question about the admission of people to the platform to see friends in, or to see them off, remains yet undecided. A protest was about to be forwarded to the Traffic Manager, but the matter has unfortunately been allowed to remain in abeyance, while the scandal continues unabated. The arbitrary regulation introduced at the Allahabad station offends against every law of courtesy and propriety, and ought not to be put up with. The present system makes a person—an Indian, of course—dependent upon the favour of the station authorities for a permit to go on to the platform to meet a friend or see another off. The right to do so should be either open, or regulated by a system of platform tickets, to which there is no objection and which has been introduced at many important stations and on several railway systems. We think it is a public duty that our prominent citizens owe to themselves and their fellow-citizens to carry up the matter to the proper authorities and to have the present state of things corrected by one of the two remedies suggested.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

A complaint regarding the office of the Inspector-General, Railway Mail Service, at Allahabad.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th February, 1906.

17. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th February, says:—In our issue of the 1st instant reference was made to the practice in the office of the Inspector-General, Railway Mail Service, Allahabad, of compelling a number of clerks to attend on Sundays and close holidays for the purpose of closing the camp bags of that officer. The practice is comparatively recent and will doubtless be put a stop to when brought to the notice of the head of the Department. In this connection a very serious complaint has been brought to our notice. These camp bags contain official covers and papers addressed to the Inspector-General. The practice is to keep bound books of what are technically called "transfer lists," in which duplicate entries by means of carbonised paper are made of the contents of each bag. One copy is torn out and enclosed in the bag, and the other is retained in the book. These books, when filled, are put aside, and after some time they are thrown away as waste paper. All waste paper used to be sold formerly and now it is either sold or burnt. Some anonymous person has forwarded to us two sheets torn out from these discarded old books, containing two copies of transfer lists. In one of these there is an entry about a parcel containing "butter," which could hardly have been an official consignment. Should the Director-General of the Post Office in India be disposed to make an inquiry into this matter, we shall be glad to place the papers in our possession at his disposal.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
14th February, 1906.

Present relations between the Hindus and Musalmans.

18. The Aligarh Institute Gazette (Aligarh), of the 14th February, referring to the riot that took place between the Musalmans and the Hindus at Calcutta on the occasion of the late Bakarid festival, regrets that, while the Bengalis professed, only a short time before, a brotherly feeling towards the Musalmans, and wanted them to participate in their agitation against the partition of Bengal, in order to show that the resentment against the partition was general, they should have so soon thrown off their mask of hypocrisy, and fallen foul of the Musalmans in a religious matter, thereby proving what deep-rooted religious hatred exists between the two communities. To cultivate real goodwill between the Hindus and Musalmans, steps should first be taken to spread the light of education among the masses of the two communities, which inevitably tending to promote religious toleration among them, may be expected to lessen their religious antipathy against one another and to finally lead to their becoming one nation.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th February, 1906.

The Statesman, and the Government of India.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th February, says:—The unexpected and satisfactory termination of the dispute between the Government of India and the Statesman cannot be passed over with the commonplace remark that all's well that ends well, and that there has been no loss of dignity on either side. Satisfactory the result undoubtedly is, but it is not altogether so simple as appears on the surface. The entire correspondence is before the public, and any one can satisfy himself whether the end of the incident is dignified all round.

* * * * * * * *

It is now quite clear that if the Government of India, instead of launching its thunderbolt against the Statesman, had entered into some further correspondence with that paper, and had understood the position clearly, there would have been no occasion for the undignified exhibition that has been made. The Statesman consulted its own dignity by neither commenting on the extraordinary circular letter of the Government of India nor agreeing to the preposterous demands made in that letter. The Government has had the doubtful satisfaction of knowing what the entire Press thinks of its action. The second letter in which the original orders are withdrawn is nothing less than a confession of error, and as this is a rare thing for the Government to do it may so far be rightly congratulated.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
11th February, 1906.

The Statesman, and the Government of India.

20. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 11th February, says:—Although the difference between the Government of India and the Statesman has been happily terminated, there is a strong feeling of resentment, which is shared equally by the Indian and Anglo-Indian Press, against the step at first taken by the Government. There is no guarantee that it may not be repeated in another case. The liberty of the Press, which is one of the best features of the British system of Government has never been very considerable in India. The law of defamation and the law of seditious libel are far more stringent in India than in England. In England there is scarcely ever an action in the criminal courts for libel. Take the single case of Truth, which probably had to defend the largest number of actions for libel. If Mr. Labouchere had been criminally prosecuted in every instance and sentenced to a term of imprisonment in case of conviction, he would not have been seen either in the editorial office of Truth, or in the House of Commons, but would have been known in the prisons as a "habitual" criminal. In England it is only a case for damages, the amount being assessed by a jury. For offences by no means more serious than those for which Truth has been repeatedly sued, editors of newspapers in this country have been sent to jail. Until recently, prisoners convicted under section 500 of the Indian Penal Code had to wear the prison garb and they have still to live on the prison diet. The Jury Commission in Bengal, of which Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter was a member, recommended that the offence of defamation should be made triable by jury, but that recommendation has passed unheeded. The law of sedition in this country hardly gives the accused a chance. A state prosecution for sedition has inevitably resulted in conviction and a sentence of imprisonment. In the most important case a conviction was had under the old law, but almost immediately afterwards the section was revised and made more comprehensive. Similarly, the Official Secrets Act, without ever having been found wanting, for no prosecution has ever been instituted under the Act, was recast and made more stringent. Every step in legislation that the Government in this country has taken has been to restrict and (not) to widen the liberty of the Press; but the action recently taken by the Government of India introduces a new instrument of terrorism altogether. It will now be in the power not only of the Government, but any Government official, to boycott any newspaper which may happen to give offence, without bringing itself within the clutches of the law. Government has not only the right to prosecute newspapers, but presumes to constitute itself the judge of journalistic propriety and to punish any breach thereof without recourse to law. It may be doubted seriously whether the action of the Government in regard to the Statesman has raised its prestige, but evidently the word has a very elastic meaning where the Government is concerned. What is needed, therefore, to ensure the Press such liberty as it yet possesses is an assurance that the Government, while perfectly free to prosecute a newspaper under the Official Secrets or any other Act, shall not descend to the device of boycotting a newspaper, and the matter should be carried farther with that end in view.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
11th February,
1906.

Rumoured boycott of the Weekly Chronicle by the Government of East Bengal.

21. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 11th February, says:—Following in the footsteps of the Government of India, it is rumoured that the Government of East Bengal has placed a paper called the Weekly Chronicle under the ban. The report requires verification, as there has been no correspondence on the subject, and no fulmination or excommunication in the Government Gazette. What has happened is this: some time ago the paper in question published an account, with comments, of an outrage committed or attempted on a sweeper woman by a Gurkha at Barisal. The Secretary to the Local Government called on the paper to withdraw the allegation and offer an apology, which the paper declined to do. There was no further correspondence, but the supply of the Government Gazette to the Weekly Chronicle has been stopped, though no formal intimation of any kind has been made to the editor. It is probably too early yet to infer that a boycott has been declared against the paper, and the boycott of a Local Government is not, after all, a very serious matter. Unfortunately, the Government of Sir Bamfylde Fuller is not distinguished for discretion, and is quite capable of following the unwise example of the Government of India, which has, however, hastened to rectify its error. The Government of East Bengal has yet to reckon with the new House of Commons, and probably with the new Ministry.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th February,
1906.

Regret expressed at Allahabad being omitted from the tour programme of the Prince of Wales.

1. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th February, says:—Allahabad has been omitted from the Royal tour, although Their Royal Highnesses have already visited Agra and Lucknow, and will yet honour Benares and even Aligarh with a visit. To include other cities in the programme while excluding the capital is a singularly ill-advised arrangement. Excluding Bombay, which could not have been left out, what would the people of the Panjáb have thought if Delhi, Amritsar and Peshawar had been put down on the programme of the Royal tour and Lahore omitted? Or, again, if other cities in Bengal had been visited and Calcutta left out? Finally, if the Madras Presidency had been honoured by the Royal tourists and the city of Madras were dropped out? The most poignant and sincere disappointment is felt at Allahabad at the arrangement by which this city has been studiously excluded from the Royal tour. The Local Government should have been the first to protest against such an arrangement, but we doubt whether Allahabad holds a large place in the estimation of that Government. Is Allahabad less interesting or less important than even Aligarh, which is merely the headquarters of a district? There is an important public function waiting to be performed in Allahabad, and no one could have performed it more appropriately than His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales—we mean the unveiling of Queen Victoria's statue in Alfred Park. It is one of the two provincial memorials erected to Her late Majesty, and we are quite sure that it would have given the Prince of Wales great pleasure to unveil the statue if invited to do so. The Lucknow Medical College was a much later conception, and yet the Prince of Wales was invited to lay the foundation stone. Was any proposal ever submitted to the Government of India by the Local Government to invite the Prince of Wales to unveil the statue in Alfred Park? His Royal Highness would have acceded to the proposal at once. The programme of the Royal tour in India was not prepared by the Government of India without consultation with the Local Governments. There was plenty of time, and if the Local Government had suggested that the Prince of Wales should be requested to unveil the Queen's statue at Allahabad—the first public statue in this city—no difficulty would have been made. We doubt, however, whether the Local Government made any effort to have Allahabad placed on the programme. This is the kind of treatment meted out to what is supposed to be the capital of the United Provinces. No consideration whatever is shown for the claims of this city, nor are its citizens deemed of any account. Is it any wonder that rumours about shearing Allahabad of the little importance it has left are easily believed, and cause so much heart-burning?

BHARAT JIWAN,
19th January, 1906.

India under British rule.

2. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 19th February, while admitting the blessings of education, peace, &c., which the British Government has conferred on India, complains that the country has markedly declined in prosperity and wealth under British rule. During the Muhammadan supremacy, the Hindus were no doubt greatly oppressed by the Muhammadan rulers generally; but as the Muhammadan conquerors had permanently settled in the country, what they took from the people in the shape of taxation, &c., with one hand, they readily returned the same to the latter as the price of articles they bought, with the other hand, and so the country was never impoverished. But under British rule, a constant drain of wealth in the shape of salaries and pensions of British officers, profits of merchandize, &c.—far exceeding in one year the amounts of money, certain Muhammadan invaders took away from India—is going on from the country, which has produced disastrous consequences on Indian industries, commerce, &c. The various Indian societies and associations would therefore do well to draw the attention of the British nation to this great drawback of their rule in India, which makes their government compare unfavourably even with the late Muhammadan tyrannical rule.

OUDH AKHBAR,
19th February,
1906.

Fifty years of British rule in Oudh.

3. The Oudh Akhbár (Allahabad), of the 19th February, echoes the views which the Advocate of the 15th idem expressed on the broad results of the fifty years' British rule just completed in Oudh, to the effect that though Oudh has gained in many other respects, it has materially gone from bad to worse during the period in question (vide paragraph No. 4, page 65 of the United Provinces "Selections" for 1906).

EXPRESS,
22nd February,
1906.

The Express on the proposed appointment of a Prince-Viceroy of India.

4. The Express (Lucknow), of the 22nd February, says:—The latest suggestion of Mr. Theodore Morison in the pages of the North American Review will be read with interest. He contends that there can be no longer any doubt that the concession of merely political privileges will not allay the rising tide of disaffection in India; for the shortcomings of the Government are not the real causes of the discontent, but the ignominy of being a conquered people.

* * * * * * *

He says the only possible alternative to the existing State-machinery in this country is to find a true basis of Imperial rule in India; and this he finds in the fact that loyalty to an individual is congenial to the temper of all natives of India of every creed, and that this is a trait which spares them the humiliation that must attach to the domination of one race over another. He, therefore, suggests that the Prince of Wales or some Royal Prince should be appointed Viceroy, the present Governor General in Council, who is commonly called Viceroy, being relegated to do the work of Government, while the Prince does the business of attracting loyalty by strengthening the personal ascendency, and the ties of loyalty to the Crown by generating sentiments which would counteract the secessionist tendency. There is undoubtedly some truth in what is said here; and the wave of enthusiastic loyalty, which is passing over the country wherever the Prince of Wales goes, would lend great support to the opinion of the late Principal of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh. But the question is whether he is not absolutely ignoring the signs of the times, whether he does not forget that the spread of education and an awakening sense of political life are enabling the Indian mind to appreciate a rule which is not personal. Are not the natives of India showing some advance, however little it may be, in the domain of politics, and can they be satisfied with a system of government which savours more of one man's rule of olden days than representative government by the ablest intellects and the most experienced hands of the day?

Mr. Morison further points out that at present the Viceroy in India is a dual person, firstly a representative of the sovereign, and secondly a hard-worked Minister, who exercises an active supervision over all the departments of Government. "I submit," he says, "that these two functions might in future be separated." The Prince of Wales or some other member of the Royal Family, might be created Viceroy of India to act as the representative of the King-Emperor; and the duties of the Governor General might then be discharged by a private person who would be the first Minister of the Crown: in Indian phraseology the Prince-Viceroy would be the Raja, and the Governor General his Diwán. The functions to be assigned to the Governor General present no difficulty to Mr. Morison, for he would keep them substantially the same as at present, simply relieving the Governor General of the duty of representing the Sovereign, and thus giving him leisure and quiet in which to devote himself to the business of the State. The position of the Prince-Viceroy in the Government is more precisely defined. Substantially, he would play the same part in India as is played in Europe by a constitutional monarch. He would stand aloof from politics and not interfere personally in the administration, but on public occasions he would appear as the representative of the Emperor. "In British India investitures, reviews and entertainments of foreign notables constitute a considerable tale of work; and in addition to these there is the enormously important duty of receiving the Feudatory Chiefs, who between them govern as much as one-third of the Indian continent. These are functions which are at present discharged by the head of the Indian Government though necessarily in a somewhat perfunctory manner. It would be a public gain that they should be transferred to a Royal Prince who would bring to them greater leisure and long familiarity with courtly ceremonial." But in ensuring these advantages, asks the Observer, did the writer give a moment's thought to the loss in dignity which the Governor General would suffer, and how such lowering of the position of the practical head of the Government would be to the disadvantage of the prestige of British rule in India?

Nor does Mr. Morison pause to consider the question of the cost of Government that will go up materially on this duplication of State machinery; for in certain respects his proposals are tantamount to such duplication. We further find Mr. Morison to seriously emphasise a fantastic reason as embodying an important point in favour of his idea. He says that in addition to the duties referred to above, there is great work to be accomplished which can only be undertaken by an official head of society. Ever since the English took over the government of the country, Indian society has been deprived of its natural leaders: there has never been properly speaking a Court at Simla or Calcutta, and the heads of Government in the district capitals have been hard-worked English officials who have had neither leisure nor aptitude to take the lead in Indian society. But the need of a recognised head of society is every year being more keenly felt, as Indians are reconstructing their social life upon European lines. The most vitally important questions of the day in India are not political but social; and it is in the solution of these great problems that the most important duties of the Prince-Viceroy would lie, and in regard to which he would be able to exercise a far greater and beneficial influence than any Minister who is necessarily associated with controversial politics.

To ask us to suppose for a moment that the Viceroy or any foreigner can or would take an active part in moulding or changing our social system is to demand too much even of Indian credulity, and we refuse to believe that a costly or complicated addition to our Constitution is necessary.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
15th February,
1906.

Need for amalgamation of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court with the High Court at Allahabad.

5. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 15th February, says :—For executive purposes the two provinces of Agra and Oudh are now on an equal footing. The Lieutenant-Governor is Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Oudh as well as that of Agra. Military officers are no longer admitted into the Oudh Commission, which is recruited by Civilians. But no change has been made in the administration of justice. The Judicial Commissioner of Oudh continues to be the head of the judiciary in that province, and of the administration of justice. And to heighten the anomaly, since one Judical Commissioner is unable to cope with the growing work, two other Additional Judges or Judicial Commissioners have been appointed, while the status of the court is neither that of a High Court nor a Chief Court.

* * * * * * * *

No province and no kingdom can have two capitals, although a king or emperor, or an administrator may have two or more seats. In our provinces Lucknow is a larger and more attractive city than Allahabad. As soon as Oudh was annexed it might have been made the capital of the United Provinces and the seat of the Government transferred to it. But there is a superstition against an old capital. With a change of rule there is always a change of capitals. Lucknow is a comparatively modern city; it is one of the most beautiful cities in India; but it was the capital of the Muhammadan Kings of Oudh, and therefore it has no chance of being made the capital of the United Provinces. If this were frankly recognised and acted upon, it would be better for both Lucknow and Allahabad. But here a conflict arises on account of the personal inclinations of the Lieutenant-Governor. Lucknow is to him more attractive than Allahabad. At Lucknow His Honour feels that he is in the midst of all the surroundings of a capital city, with the Taluqdars around him and all the architectural splendours of the city. But he cannot transfer the capital of the Province of Agra to Lucknow, as the Government of India would never approve of such an arrangement. So, while the Lieutenant-Governor is divided between inclination and duty, Lucknow and Allahabad are divided by a perpetual conflict of interest and preferential claim. There is no other instance to be met with anywhere else in India where one city acts as a drag on another, and part of the province is in a spirit of rivalry to the rest. This is the real reason why the United Provinces are the most backward in India. The two provinces have never acted in concert and sympathy, and they have never earnestly tried to help each other. That is why these provinces are behind every other part of India.

Is there any other province in India where a section of the people, and the most influential section in the bargain, would have been content to do without a High Court, although a High Court existed in the Province? The one sentiment that actuates the people of Lucknow and Oudh is that they should have either a High Court at Lucknow or none at all, and they feel it as an indignity to be brought under the jurisdiction of the Allahabad High Court. The feeling at the root of the whole matter is nothing but jealousy, to put it bluntly. Oudh and the Taluqdars of Oudh are strongly disinclined to be under any obligation to the Province of Agra, or in any way inferior to Allahabad. Better to have a Judicial Commissioner in Lucknow than a High Court at Allahabad is what they say. And the hope of having a separate High Court at Lucknow is entertained by the Judicial Commissioner himself. It was seriously believed that the High Court would be transferred from Allahabad to Lucknow It seems inconceivable that Lucknow is to become subordinate to Allahabad and the High Court of Allahabad is to have jurisdiction over Lucknow and Oudh. No thought is given to the consideration that it would raise the prestige and position of the High Court and make the position of Oudh and Lucknow much better and stronger than at present. The whole of India is anxious that the jurisdiction of the High Courts should extend and their power and position should remain undisturbed; but Oudh makes no effort to come under the Allahabad High Court, and would probably look upon such an event as a calamity, as has been already suggested. The anomaly is truly wonderful and makes us despair of the progress of our Provinces. We hear of a hundred different schemes for the advancement of the two Provinces, but the initial difficulty seems to be overlooked. A University divided, since the Medical College is to be established away from the headquarters of the University, a High Court weakened by its narrow jurisdiction, while the anomaly of a Judicial Commissionership is still retained in another part of the Province: the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh are hopelessly divided, indeed, and the future is full of anxiety.

The High Court and Moharram holidays.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd February, says:—Writing to the Allahabad Law Journal a correspondent draws attention to the strange anomaly in the Allahabad High Court by which, during the Moharram, Muhammadans are allowed ten days' leave whereas non-Muhammadans are given only three or four days. Besides the ministerial offices, the distinction is observed even in the case of vakils and others having business in the High Court. The High Court is the last place in the world where such a distinction should be made or enforced. This strange innovation was introduced by Sir John Edge and is likely to be perpetuated unless it is abolished at once. Such a practice is unknown in any other High Court in India. Holidays are holidays, no matter whether they are Hindu, Muhammadan or Christian, and should be enjoyed equally by all. The Durga Puja is a Hindu holiday, but are Muhammadan employés or vakils required to attend the Calcutta High Court during the long Puja vacation? The practice introduced in the Allahabad High Court is open to the strongest objection and has given rise to serious complaints. We think it has only to be brought to the notice of the Chief Justice and the learned Judges to be discontinued. It will be best to make a formal representation to the Court from the Vakils' Association, on which action may be taken and the present objectionable practice dropped.

Protest against the new rule of the Allahabad University regarding the admission of private candidates to the Entrance Examination.

7. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 16th February, says :—Recently it has been ruled by the Syndicate of the University of Allahabad that with effect from the year 1908, a scholar who is pursuing his studies elsewhere than at a school or educational institution of any kind, and who desires to offer himself for the Matriculation (Entrance Examination) as a private candidate, shall, not less than ten months before the date fixed for the next Matriculation Examination, present an application, through the Circle Inspector of Schools, to the Registrar setting out :—

(1) His age at the time of application.

(2) The conditions under which he has, and is now proposing to continue his studies.

(3) The school, if any, at which he has last studied.

No application, from a private candidate for the Matriculation Examination of 1908 will be entertained, which is not sent through the Inspector of Schools of the district concerned, and which does not contain information stated above.

This cancels the rule hitherto in force, and still remaining in force for two years more. Under the provisions of the rule hitherto observed a candidate had only to submit his application directly to the Principal, Headmaster and (or) Circle Inspector of Schools, as the case may be, and had only to satisfy them, that he had not attended a course of instruction at Government, aided or other recognised High Schools for six months immediately preceding the date of the examination. But now, as he has to present his application to a higher authority, he is to make up his preparations a year before ; and is bound to set forth the conditions, under which he has been, and is proposing to carry on his studies, during the coming ten months preceding the examination. This is really a difficult task for a poor candidate !

Education in the United Provinces.

8. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd February, says :—In spite of what has been done by Government, municipalities and private charity, the admitted wants felt still by the public are three : the hostel, the laboratory and the professor ; the last being the greatest. There are two State, eight aided and six unaided colleges in these provinces. Gradually centralisation as to subjects for study has been going on in the State Colleges, the Muir going in more for Science and the Queen's for Oriental subjects. In both progress in education, increase in students and addition to the staff have been steady. Of the aided colleges, Canning College is to shortly realise the ideal of a residential college on account of the generosity of the Local Government and the Maharaja of Bulrampur ; the Bareilly is about to have a building of its own in spacious grounds presented by His Highness the Nawab of Rampur, with funds collected from the Raises of Rohilkhand ; and the Meerut is about to come in possession of an estate, comprising some 63 bighas of land. All these colleges have been adding to the staff, and improving the laboratory ; the Aligarh College has made a speciality of History for the M. A. examination, and the direct method of teaching English and the English college life are its special features.

* * * * * * *

Secondary education suffers seriously, being jammed between the University and the Primary, on both of which much attention and energy are spent.

* * * * * * *

The regrettable fact is that in the numbers seeking English secondary education the United Provinces compare most unfavourably with the rest of India. We should need to multiply the number of scholars by 4 in order to advance to the same stage of progress as the average of the other provinces. The demand for this education is obviously growing, and when the education offered is made in itself more valuable as the result of recent and prospective reforms, and harassing obstacles are eventually moved out of the way, there is no doubt that the people will begin to move forward. The improvement of secondary education has been largely deferred until primary education at one end of the scale and University education at the other have come in for their share of attention. It is now felt that the turn of secondary education has come. Vigorous action at this stage of education may now be expected.

* * * * * * *

The abolition of the compulsory Middle Examination has brought one evil into existence: listlessness and indifference to hard work. Mr. Lewis suggests that the best remedy would be to require boys reading in the highest class of a Middle School to pass the annual examination of the 8th class, not in their own schools, but in those high schools in which they intend to pursue their studies. A slack Middle School should not have the power to drag down the High School to which it sends on its boys; the High School should rather lift up the Middle School which is in this way affiliated to it. Not a bad idea of course. But what do the Inspectors do unless they visit such schools oftener than at present, and prevent the continuance of wholesale bad work in them?

Primary education is the lowest stage no doubt in the scale of instruction, but forms the foundation of all education, general and special.

* * * * * * *

The teacher in this section is the central factor, for with him rests the future of the educational career of every child. If he can attract a scholar, and what is more, instil into him a love of knowledge, he lays the foundation of a good and honest educated and industrious life. The main point is to make school attractive, life in it enjoyable, and the curriculum and the methods of training suited to the capacities and temperament of little children. Small gardens have begun to be a new feature of many village schools where English vegetables grown by the masters and boys are thus brought to the notice of the villagers. Considering the very low rates of fees that prevail in many schools, the question may easily be raised: why not make primary education free and compulsory?

Locality of the Law College proposed to be established at Allahabad.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd February,
1906.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd February, referring to the proposed establishment of a Law College at Allahabad, says:—Some time ago a notification appeared in regard to the proposed acquirement of Darbhanga Castle, formerly known as Lowther Castle, by the Local Government, and it was understood that the building and grounds were wanted for the proposed Law College. There seems to be a great disparity, however, between the respective valuations placed on the property by the Government and the present owner, the Mahárája of Darbhanga, who has filed a claim before the Collector of Allahabad valuing the property at over five lakhs. In this valuation His Highness has the support of competent engineers. Instead of spending time and money over a protracted law suit, the Local Government is casting about for another suitable site for the Law College. There seems to be no reason why the matter should give rise to any difficulty. Just to the north of the Muir Central College grounds there is an extensive piece of ground available for the purposes of the Law College. The whole of it is Government land. To the east there are a few houses, and a large piece of land which could be easily acquired, and the estimated amount of Rs. 1,80,000 would be sufficient for the college and hostel buildings, while the proximity to the Muir College would be most desirable. The play grounds of the Muir College would be common to both colleges, all the hostels would be near one another, and under effective supervision. The northern compound wall of the Muir College could be shifted further north enclosing the large square and the ground to the east. When the ground is available, it would be a great pity to establish the Law

College somewhere at a distance from the Muir College. It is to be hoped the whole question will receive the careful consideration it deserves, and no decision will be arrived at in a hurry.

Suggestion for appointing Sir Pherozshah Mehta as Vice-Chancellor of the Bombay University.

10. Mr. Justice Chatterji of the Punjab Chief Court has already served as Vice-Chancellor of the Punjab University, an appointment which is about to fall vacant again. It is time that Bombay had an Indian Vice-Chancellor also, and Sir Pherozshah Mehta will make an admirable selection.

Certain complaints regarding the famine relief measures in Bundelkhand.

11. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 18th February, referring to the famine relief measures in Bundelkhand, says :—We have been informed that in the matter of gratuitous relief unnecessary distinction is made and very great strictness shown. We do not know how far the report is true, but the information has reached us that certain high officials have cut down the list prepared by some divisional officers with the help of revenue officers, and that some twenty-five per cent. names have been removed from the list. Now, the list was not surely made without personal enquiry, and the testimony of officers actually engaged in the relief works should have been considered final. We are surprised to learn that the names of Brahmins have been removed on the ground that it is easy for them to get alms. The officer responsible for this idea ought to know that during famine and scarcity when people with difficulty get food to fill their own mouths it is not easy for them to be charitable and to give alms to Brahmins. Then the Brahmins who can beg do not generally till the land. In such matters, we say again, the officers on the spot are the best judges and their judgment should not be disturbed. Then we are told that in the poor houses admission is not as easy as it ought to be. We admit that it is necessary that great care should be taken to prevent waste of public money, but in taking care there should be no attempt to minimise the evil, or to encourage economy in any way to the sufferings of the people. [The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 21st February, expresses the same views.]

Famine in the United Provinces.

12. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 19th February, says that another and less formidable name of famine is scarcity in the official vocabulary. When this so-called scarcity can no longer be concealed, its name becomes famine. Famine already exists in the United Provinces, but it has not yet formally received that designation from Government, though it is now soon going to do so, preparations to meet it being made on a large scale. "(But) we have no longer to complain of famine, nor have we any fear of it, because it has now become our permanent guest. Besides, how long can we continue to weep over it, our eyes refusing to supply more tears? This is verily a positive proof of India becoming richer and richer day by day!"

Need for representation of the Central Provinces on the Viceregal Legislative Council.

13. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th February, says :—When the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale put a question in the Legislative Council about the non-representation of the Central Provinces in that Council, the Government practically told him that it was no business of his, and the Central Provinces had no right of representation. That is the worst of officialism. In the eyes of Government a favour is a favour to be granted or withheld at will, but there can be no prescriptive right to a favour. An Indian non-official member has been nominated to represent the Central Provinces in the Governor General's Legislative Council for years. There were Messrs. Bhuskate and Chitnavis, and Mr. Bose was nominated more than once. But after his last term was over, no other nomination was made, and there is no representative now in the Council. The Central Provinces have become larger by the addition of the Berars, but it pleases the Government to deny to the extended provinces the favour that had been granted to the old provinces. There is of course no appeal against the decision of the Government. There is no Legislative Council in the Central Provinces, though it is now time that a Lieutenant-Governor were appointed, just as in Burma after the annexation of Upper Burma. Whether by nomination or by election, a right accrues with time, and except the Government no one will dispute that the Central Provinces have a right to be represented in the Governor General's Council. To withhold even a favour that has been enjoyed for years is to put back the progress of a province; but that is a matter about which the Government is supremely indifferent. The attitude of the Government is that if a favour by reason of its repetition is looked upon as a right, it should be withdrawn at once, so as not to encourage hopes doomed to disappointment.

Lord Ampthill praised as an Indian administrator.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th February, says:—A good man and a capable administrator leaves India, in the person of Lord Ampthill, Governor of Madras. During the time he was in this country he upheld the best traditions of an English gentleman and nobleman. His personal popularity in the Madras Presidency was boundless, and he was held in the highest respect by all classes of people. His personal relations with the prominent citizens of all classes were of the most cordial nature. Even more than his Governorship of Madras, the country has reason to remember his Viceroyalty of India during Lord Curzon's absence in England for nine months. Lord Curzon left the country seething with excitement and indignation. It was not Lord Ampthill's place to initiate new measures, or to originate a new policy, but during the time he was Viceroy he let the country have rest and peace. The one speech of any importance that he made as Viceroy was at Kashmir, and it was one calculated to give pleasure to all Native Princes in India. At parting, both the last speech and the last message of Lord Ampthill will arrest attention, because of their earnestness and the sincerity of his regret. Men of extraordinary ability and vaulting ambition are seldom wanted in India, and the experience is that they invariably do more harm than good to the country. But good men who are kind and sympathetic towards the people are always wanted, and they render real service to the best interests of the Empire. The simple and earnest words of farewell uttered and written by Lord Ampthill will deeply move the whole country, whereas Lord Curzon with all his great gift of eloquence and power of expression could not bid farewell to India in words that struck a responsive chord or made any impression.

Suggestion for requesting Lord Minto to unveil the late Queen Victoria's newly erected statue at Allahabad.

15. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th February, says:—As there is not the least likelihood of the Royal tour being so modified as to include Allahabad, the question arises who will unveil the Queen's statue in Alfred Park? Failing the Prince of Wales, we are strongly of opinion the Viceroy of India should be invited to assist at this important and loyal function. The statue is not a local memorial, but a provincial one. It has been placed in the most prominent place in the city, and will be located in a handsome tower. The Viceroy may be invited to unveil the statue on his way up to Simla, and he would readily accept such an invitation. His Excellency told the Oudh Talukdars that he was looking forward keenly to a visit to Lucknow, and it is probable that the visit will be made at an early date. Why should not the Committee in charge of the statue send up an invitation, through the Local Government, to Lord Minto to come and unveil the statue? The prayer may be well backed up by the public, but through whom is the public to send a representation? There is no public body at Allahabad, or in the United Provinces. When it was announced that Allahabad had no place in the programme of the Royal tour, a public body, if in existence, would have sent a respectful protest and representation against the injustice of such an arrangement, and could have suggested that the Queen's statue should be unveiled by the Prince of Wales. Even petitions are rare things in these Provinces. When some public-spirited or patriotic citizen writes out a petition against a local grievance, it takes long to get some signatures. A petition of the kind we have suggested would have found general favour, but it was never thought of, simply because there is no public body which pays any attention to such questions. Our wisdom consists in doing nothing to help our people or our Province, and we shall not be surprised in the least if no effort is made to carry out the suggestion that Lord Minto should be invited to unveil the statue of Queen Victoria. It is because of our unconquerable supineness and our absolute indifference that the capital city of the United Provinces is so shabbily treated; and, unless we look out, worse things may be in store for us. If not from a sense of duty, then for very shame's sake there should be an end to the apathy and indifference which have so long weighed us down, and have successfully prevented anything like a public organisation or public opinion in these Provinces.

A circular issued by the District Judge, Ahmedabad, forbidding people to enter the local courts with native shoes on.

16. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 19th February, says:—We learn from a communication received from Ahmedabad, that a crusade (against native shoes) has been declared there by no less a personage than the District Judge. We are told that a circular has been issued by the District Judge prohibiting entrance by any person wearing native shoes into any of the rooms connected with the local courts and the Courts themselves. The Judge has not hesitated to express his regret at the display of disrespect even by some of the members of the local bar by entering the Court with native shoes on. It is alleged that the circular has been issued by the District Judge to all his Subordinate Judges, asking them to see that no breach is committed in respect of the circular, and authorising them at the same time to have recourse to the power of repression with which they are invested under Section 480, Cr. P. C., and Section 228, I.P.C. The Názir has been invested with the additional duty of watching the feet of people, so that no one may enter the Court rooms with native shoes on. People wearing such shoes are to put them off at the verandah and then to ascend the upstairs of the Court. The peons, too, are to be punished if they fail to carry out the orders of the District Judge. Surely a more ludicrous figure the learned District Judge could hardly cut than by the issue of this circular authorizing the local courts to carry on a crusade against native shoes. We do not know if by native shoes is meant nagra shoes, or any shoes manufactured in India. The sight of nagra shoes is offensive, it seems, not only to the Ahmedabad Judge but to many other personages in high office. We remember an occasion on which a Deputation to the Calcutta Government House had to beat a hasty retreat, because one or two gentlemen on the deputation took a fancy to the wearing of Punjábi shoes. The notification published on the eve of the last Levèe contained a paragraph prohibiting the wearing of native shoes while attending the Levèe. On this side of the country, however, no restrictions are observed by the Judiciary with regard to shoes. But how is it that the Názir has been invested with the duty of supervising the carrying out of the queer orders of the Judge? Is he to be relieved from his legitimate duties and to sit by the gate to watch the feet of the people entering the Court, and to take steps to see that no breach is committed in respect of the circular? What are things coming to?

The Swadeshi movement, and the Rungpur Special Constables' case in the Calcutta High Court.

17. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 19th February, says:—The judgment of Mr. Justice Stephen, who took a right view of the Special Constables' case, has now been published. Therein the learned Judge clearly shows how both in its inception as well as in its practical operation the appointment of certain respectable people as Special Constables in this case was utterly unjust and illegal. The worst of it was that the appointments were made, as the Judge says, with an ulterior motive of preventing the gentlemen in question from exercising their legal rights, of impeding and hampering their conduct in taking part in certain movements, and of influencing them and others through a fear of their prosecution. According to the Judge, a clear abuse of the law and an act of oppression had been committed in this case. Now may we not ask whether Magistrates and Police officers who perpetrate such illegal and oppressive acts do not deserve to be taken to task therefor? Is it not a fact that as authorised instruments of Government and administrators of laws their responsibility for behaving illegally should be, if anything, far greater than in the case of private and lay subjects? Do they not deserve to be severely punished? Would the ends of justice be served by the High Court simply putting a stop to the prosecution of the oppressed and harassed gentlemen? Would that not be only a negative and an inadequate method of doing justice? There is another aspect of the Special Constables' case. It demonstrates how the spirit of the Government to put the law to an unrighteous use has permeated the executive and even judicial officers of Government almost in every rank.

Presentation of medals at Calcutta by their countrymen to certain persons convicted in connection with the Swadeshi movement.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd February, says:—We can well account for the indignation created by a certain interesting function in Calcutta at which a number of persons convicted in connection with the Swadeshi movement were presented with medals and testimonials by their countrymen, the presentations being made by Babu Surendra Nath Banerjea. Some of our Anglo-Indian contemporaries have called the proceedings scandalous and profess to be shocked at the conduct of our friends in Bengal. To them it will be small satisfaction to read the letter of the Hon'ble Babu Bhupendranath Bose to the chairman of the meeting. Babu Bhupendranath could not attend as he was in mourning, but he expressed full sympathy with the meeting. His reference to Jesus of Nazareth will be especially trying to most of our friends on the other side. Did any one really think that because some people had been convicted of scattering Liverpool salt or shouting Bande Mataram, they would be looked upon as convicts, or the Swadeshi movement would collapse? We may be a subject race, but still we are entitled to have our own opinions, and the power to suppress opinion has yet to be invented. Mr. Balgangadhar Tilak was convicted of sedition, and he has since been tried for other offences; but for all that his position is stronger and higher in the Deccan, and he is undoubtedly the most influential leader in the Bombay Presidency. Has the Government been able to injure him in the estimation of his countrymen? In Eastern Bengal the Government has been trying to put down the Swadeshi movement by persecution, and the consequence is the counterblast that has been sounded in Calcutta. Men and boys have been sent to jail for shouting Bande Mataram; peaceful subjects have been severely assaulted by Gurkhas without cause. The leaders of the two provinces have united to honour these people and to present them mementos for what they have done or suffered. There may be people among us who may be disposed to call this indiscreet and as likely to provoke the authorities still further. But these are the wise men who think the service of self and the seeking of self the highest object of life. If there is anything besides self—and fortunately the world still believes there is—then the parting of ways is unavoidable, and persecution must be called by its proper name. The authorities in East Bengal have done all they could to terrorise the people, and now the people have stated what they think of the proceedings.

Peremptory prohibition of the performance of a play at Mymensingh by the District Magistrate.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd February, says:—As an illustration of the unwisdom which seems to have taken complete possession of the Government of East Bengal, we may cite a little incident that has just taken place at Mymensingh. A travelling theatrical party from Calcutta had announced a performance of a play called Pratapaditya. This is a historical drama, based on the life and career of Pratapaditya, a Bengali King in East Bengal who shook off the Muhammadan yoke in the time of the Emperor Akbar. This play was first produced on the Calcutta stage two years ago, and drew crowded houses for several weeks running. There is absolutely nothing to which exception can be taken, and yet just before the performance, the District Magistrate of Mymensingh forbade it peremptorily. Will the theatrical company or the public of Mymensingh admit the justice of this order, and what possible justification for it can be found? If the play is quite innocuous in Calcutta, why should it be considered dangerous at Mymensingh? People will be curious to know what there is to object to in the play, and they will further believe that the authorities are afraid of allowing the play to be performed. The printed book will accordingly be in great demand at Mymensingh, and numbers of people will run down to Calcutta for the express purpose of witnessing the play that has been prohibited in their town. The Government of East Bengal is making trouble for itself, and it will merely help the popularity of the play and make heroes of the play-actors. It is a very great pity indeed that nothing seems to check that Government in its headlong course of folly and exasperating repression, in spite of its repeated failures to crush the spirit of the people. That Government in fact is making believe to deal with an incipient rebellion, whereas in reality it has merely to do with a movement of lawful indignation.

AL BASHIR,

Al Bashir on the question of the separation of Behar from Bengal.

20. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 20th February, says that the opponents of the late partition of Bengal, into East and West Bengal Provinces, have now hit upon another device to get the partition in question cancelled. Two Hindu editors, who are probably Bengalis (sic.) have recently published a pamphlet in which they, urging that the Beharis are dissatisfied with their being tacked on to Bengal, suggest that it would be better to separate Behar from Bengal, raising the former into a separate province with Orissa joined to it, and leave the whole of Bengal proper, both east and west, under one Lieutenant Governor, and thus satisfy both the Bengalis and Beharis. It is no doubt a fact that the Beharis, especially the Musalman population, who speak the same language, and have the same manners and customs as the people in the United Provinces, have never been content with their lot in the Provincial division of India, and have always expressed their dissatisfaction at it in unmistakeable terms. But the present is not the proper time for the Musalmans to join in the agitation for separation of Behar from Bengal; inasmuch as this agitation is also based on the selfish motives of the Bengalis, who are now anxious to bring the Musalman population of Eastern Bengal under their (harmful) influence again, even at the expense of leaving to the Beharis themselves the loaves and fishes of Behar which they have hitherto generally enjoyed. Hence, though Al Bashir is strongly of opinion that Behar should, somehow or other, be separated from Bengal, yet it thinks that the best course for the Musalmans of Behar to adopt would be not to press their legitimate desire for separation from Bengal for the present, deferring it to some future time until the recent release of their co-religionists in East Bengal from the "clutches" (domineering influence) of Bengalis has been perfectly ensured.

Rumoured proposal for separation of Behar from Bengal.

21. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd February, says:—We are sorry our contemporary of the Behar News spoils a good case by importing into a consideration of it, along with very cogent and convincing reasons, an inordinate amount of bile. The arguments in favour of separating Behar from Bengal have been well put again in connection with the visit of Lord Minto to Behar. In this connection the News has given currency to the rumour said to be very strong among a section of the native community that the Presidency and Burdwan Divisions will be amalgamated with Eastern Bengal and Assam, and the whole formed into the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal and Assam; and that Behar, with the Gorakpur Division, Chota Nagpur and Orissa will be formed into a distinct Lieutenant-Governorship, with Sir Andrew Fraser as the first ruler of the new province. Bankipur, Ranchi and Cuttack will be the three capitals of the new province. The present visit of the Viceroy has, it is alleged, some connection with this re-arrangement of the Partition. Sir Bamfylde Fuller will continue to rule over Bengal, and Calcutta, Chittagong, Shillong and Darjeeling will be his four towns of residence. Dacca is to be quietly left in its present neglected position. The news is, as our contemporary says, too good to be easily believed in, though there are many reasons to commend the adoption of some such measure to the Government.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd February,
1906.

The Indian People on the question of the proposed separation of Behar from Bengal.

22. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd February, says:—Although it may be doubted whether there is anything more to be said about the partition of Bengal, or any fresh light can be thrown upon it, it would be utterly wrong to assume that the whole question is closed. We do not think any one really believes that we have heard the last about the partition of Bengal. The agitation in Bengal itself has broken out afresh, and particular care is being taken that it should be kept up. The change of Ministry may or may not mean anything, but the chances are certainly even whether the question will be re-opened or not. At any rate those who were persuading themselves that the storm had spent itself have noted with uneasiness the constitution of the new House of Commons and the presence therein of certain members who hold very decided views on this question, and who have the power to put their views forcibly before such an assembly as the House of Commons. It is in view of this eventuality that Messrs. Mahesh Narain and S. Sinha have brought out in pamphlet form two articles which they wrote in the Hindustan Review concerning an alternative proposal about the partition of Bengal. The present pamphlet is not exactly a reproduction, but rather an expansion of the original article.

* * * * * * * *

The writers of the pamphlet have considered the scheme carried out by Lord Curzon in all its aspects, and they find nothing in it to approve. But they suggest "an ideally perfect alternative scheme." Their proposal, in effect, is that instead of the arbitrary and unpopular division that Lord Curzon has made, the partition should have been effected by making Bengal and Assam one Province, and Behar, Chota Nagpur and Orissa another Province. The proposal is not altogether original, but there is a good deal to recommend it. It would certainly have produced less friction; it would probably have been the line of least resistence. We do not at all approve of the following quotation from the Pioneer :—"Behar has always been Behar, Bengal, Bengal. The people and the nobles of Behar are justly proud of their country and will doubtless rejoice to see it severed from a common rule with Bengal, with which in climate, in crops, in men, manners or morals, historic traditions or administrative problems, it has nothing in common." We regret that the writers of the pamphlet should have quoted such a passage with evident approval. It is merely the old game of playing one class of people against another, one Province against another, the Behari against the Bengali, the Muhammadan against the Hindu, the Deccani against the Madrasi, and the European against all. If this is the spirit in which the separation of Behar from Bengal is recommended, we must frankly condemn it. We are divided enough already, in all conscience. There are petty jealousies and provincial exclusiveness everywhere. For twenty-one years the Congress has been trying to efface this feeling and to teach us the advantages of solidarity and unity of purpose. The goal we have all in view is not a divided but a united India, for we have been long divided and have lost everything by it. Bengal, Behar, the United Provinces, the Punjab, Bombay and Madras are all united under one rule, and are now moved by a common aspiration. To say that one province has nothing in common with another is an offence against our highest ambition, for every true Indian hopes that the time will come when all India will have everything in common.

This is, however, by the way. The scheme itself is feasible and would have given rise to less keen resentment, though we have noticed a largely and influentially signed letter protesting against the separation of Behar from Bengal. For administrative purposes, the division proposed in the pamphlet under notice would have been preferable.

A missionary's views on the present condition of India

23. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st February, making some quotations from a paper which one Revd. J. T. Sunderland lately read at the Canadian Institute, ascribing the poverty of India chiefly to the decadence of indigenous industries, the heavy taxation, and the large annual drain of wealth from the country, and pointing out certain measures for ameliorating the condition of the people, hopes that as the revd. gentleman is an independent man and has had a personal experience of the country, his views will carry weight with Government.

Protest against the manufacture of articles, on a commercial scale, in jails.

24. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd February, says :—Almost every year while noticing the report on jail administration, we draw the attention of Government to the wrong that is done by them in encouraging manufactures of articles on a commercial scale in jails. Neither the Provincial Government nor the Supreme pay any heed to this cry. The latest information on the subject accentuates the need of united protest against the evil practice. Sanction has been, we are told by the Sialkot Paper, accorded to purchase, for the Montgomery Jail, at a cost of Rs. 60,000, of machinery for spinning wool. The proposal is open to serious objection on the ground that such projects are calculated to injure private concerns. It is highly undesirable that Government should use prisoners, on whom it has to spend very little, as labourers, and then compete in the market, thereby injuring trade. Prisoners cost Government only five pice a day per head, while private concerns pay a labourer 8 annas a day, and have to employ managing agents and a clerical staff on large salaries. The newly started Punjab Chamber of Commerce cannot emphasise its existence better than by memorialising Government strongly against the growing custom. Other Chambers may well be asked to co-operate and move the Supreme Government in the matter.

Need for saving minor girls from leading a life of infamy.

25. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd February, says :—A good step has been taken by the Government of Bombay, and an important decision given by the Chief Justice of the High Court that side, in order to save minor girls from a life of infamy. The Indian Social Reformer reports that a Magistrate acquitted two persons accused of buying a little girl for immoral purposes, on a technical ground. The case coming on appeal from Government, the High Court reversed the order of acquittal passed by the trying Magistrate and sentenced the accused to two years' rigorous imprisonment. This judgment of the High Court is important as bringing out the fact that the previous bad life of a girl is no defence against charges such as those which were brought against the accused. The learned Chief Justice, in disposing of the appeal, said that the first accused appeared to have bought the little girl, aged about ten or eleven, at Manmad, and brought her down to Bombay. She was undoubtedly in his possession when he came to Bombay. It was clear that she passed from his possession into the possession of the second accused. The Magistrate appeared to think that the fact of the girl having been employed in evil pursuits in Manmad, deprived her of the protection conferred by the sections of the Code. There was nothing in the words of the sections by which that protection was lost to her, because of her misfortune of having led an evil life previously. The acquittal by the Magistrate was, therefore, erroneous. The accused were convicted, and each was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. The judgment means an invitation to public-spirited men to take up the cases of minor girls leading a life of vice and misery.

AL BASHIR,
20th February,
1906.

Need for all Indian Railways being provided with double lines to prevent collisions of trains.

26. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 20th February, referring to the late collision on the East Indian Railway near the Sasni Railway Station, says that, while collisions (of trains) are of frequent occurrence on the railway lines where only a single line of rail has been laid, one never hears of such accidents on the railway between Howrah and Moghal Sarai which is provided with double lines, (one for down and the other for up trains). This evidently shows that if all other railways were provided with double lines, collisions between trains would become a thing of the past; and Government would therefore do well to insist on all railway systems in India having double lines of railway, and thus do away with the constant recurrence of collisions once and for all.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd February,
1906.

The late railway collision near Sasni.

27. A correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 22nd February, says :—In these days of growing scientific knowledge we are loth to believe in miracles. But then there are miracles and miracles. We may not believe an ecclesiastical miracle, but when it happens to be an official miracle, we must, willy nilly, believe it to be true. And such an one was this collision miracle or the miraculous collision. Out of the three third class carriages which were smashed, only two passengers were officially killed and six injured. There were some gentlemen travelling in that very train and their estimate of casualties far exceeds the official number. But although they saw the collision with their own eyes, still their statement must not be believed because it is non-official. With due deference to the official statements, we are inclined to disagree with them, and our own idea is that unless a man has taken leave of his senses he cannot believe that the miracle-monger had reserved his energies only to save the passengers, and not to prevent the collision itself.

EXPRESS,
22nd February, 1906.

Suggestion for issue of railway concession tickets during Moharram holidays.

28. The Express (Lucknow), of the 22nd February, publishes the following communication from a Hindu correspondent :—Last year some papers expressed their opinions for concession tickets to be issued during the Moharram holidays, but as it was too late, the matter did not come to the notice of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway authorities.

Everyone knows that as the Christians have concession in Christmas, the Hindus in Durga Puja, so the Muhammadans are also entitled to have concession in Moharram, though these concessions are not confined to the interest of any particular class or creed, but for all classes combined.

As the public is enjoying a great boon from the hands of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway authorities, and especially from the popular Traffic Superintendent, it is earnestly hoped that the desire will be fulfilled, and the concession granted for one and all.

MUSAFIR,
15th February, 1906.

An attack on the legitimacy of the birth of Jesus Christ.

29. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th February, publishes a letter, purporting to have been addressed by Satan to Jesus Christ, in which the former challenges the latter to prove that he was the son of God. Satan doubted the legitimacy of Christ's birth at the time the latter was born and continues to do so now. The people of the world too have grave suspicions as to the true origin of Christ's birth, and tease his followers a good deal on that subject. The fact of the matter is that Christ's birth was a source of great shame and disgrace to the whole family of the poor carpenter, Joseph, to whom his mother had just been betrothed only when he was born. If a person born under such detestable circumstances were to consider his birth a miracle, and himself a son of God on that account, then every person born of an unmarried girl might claim himself to be a Christ. Christ has been on earth, and he knows that the people here consider it very reprehensible that a girl should conceive a child by any one but her own husband; and he would do well to tell his Father in heaven that he had better cease begetting sons from unmarried girls. Properly speaking, both those who conceive and beget children in this way, should be held punishable under law; and Christ should thank (his stars), that he was born in a dark age when people could hardly distinguish between good and evil.

AL BASHIR,
20th February, 1906.

Sacrifice of cows by Muhammadans on the Bakar-id day, and the Hindus.

30. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 20th February, regretting that hardly a year passes without serious riots taking place somewhere or other, between the Hindus and Musalmans, on the occasion of the Bakar-id festival, tauntingly asks why Hindus allow a very large number of cows to be slaughtered in cantonments for supplying food to the (British) army, and in slaughter-houses elsewhere every day, with equanimity, while they will not let a Musalman peacefully take a cow for the purpose of sacrifice on the Bakar-id day. Again, if the cow is really a very sacred animal in the eyes of Hindus, why do they allow numberless animals of the bovine species to die of starvation or to be sold, at say Rs. 3 per head, and be slaughtered for food and hide, during a famine, and take no steps to provide fodder, &c., for them, or to save them from the hands of butchers? What strikes one still more is that while Gwalior and other Hindu States would readily condemn a man to death who slaughtered a cow, they too have not ever taken any special steps to save the cows from starvation on the failure of fodder. Unless the Hindus prove by their practical deeds that they revere the cow as the most sacred animal, the editor cannot possibly give up his belief that they make so much fuss on the occasion of the Bakar-id festival, not because the idea of the slaughter of a cow really lacerates their hearts, but because they bear ill will towards the Musalmans. As regards the Musalmans, the editor urges that such of them who slaughter cows on the Bakar-id day, do so not to hurt the feelings of their Hindu fellow-countrymen, but because they cannot afford to sacrifice goats which are comparatively a more costly business; and sacrifice is a religious duty with them on the day in question.

The Statesman, and the Government of India.

31. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 16th February, referring to the Statesman and the Indian Government quarrel, says :—It is all very fine for the Pioneer to say that the Government of India and the Statesman newspaper have, by a process of mutual concession, arrived at an amicable settlement. But if we look at the arbitrary tone which Government adopted in the first instance we feel sure that they have eaten humble pie by so suddenly, and on the strong protest of the editor, having given in to the indignant member of the fourth estate.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th February,
1906.

Conviction and punishment of the editor of the Marathi paper Bhala of Poona for publishing a seditious article.

32. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 18th February, says :—Not the slightest surprise will be felt anywhere at the conviction of Mr. Bhopatkar, Editor of the Bhala newspaper, on a charge of attempting to excite disaffection against the Government. There would have been considerable surprise had the result of the trial proved different. With the exception of the Bangabasi newspaper, no other newspaper prosecuted for sedition has escaped conviction. The case against the Bangabasi was tried by Sir Comer Petheram, then Chief Justice of Bengal. The jury were divided in the proportion of 7 to 2, the majority being for conviction; but the Chief Justice refused to accept a divided verdict and discharged the jury, and ordered a fresh trial. The British Indian Association interceded with the Bengal Government on behalf of the accused, who got off with an apology. There was no acquittal and it was a narrow escape. In the next case against Mr. Tilak the jury were divided in the proportion of 6 to 3, but Mr. Justice Strachey accepted the verdict of the majority without hesitation, and sentenced the accused to a long term of imprisonment with hard labour. Since then it has been all plain sailing, so far as the Government is concerned. A translation of the article complained of is put in, some formal evidence is called and a conviction follows. In the present case the defence pleaded that the original article looked more innocent than the translation, but the Judge and jury had to depend wholly on the translation. In returning a verdict of guilty the jury recommended the accused to mercy. How far the recommendation influenced the Judge may be judged by the sentence, which was simple imprisonment for six months and a fine of Rs. 1,000. It is only in the nature of the imprisonment that some leniency was shown. We had occasion to point out when the prosecution was first instituted that only vernacular papers have so far been prosecuted and convicted for sedition, and English papers have been let alone. There is not much apprehension that any paper conducted in English will be prosecuted for sedition in a hurry.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
24th February,
1906.

1. THE Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th February, referring to the war preparations that are continually going on in European countries, even in times of peace, and to the great jealousies and rivalries that exist among them, says that it goes without saying that an outbreak of war in Europe is a mere question of time. As regards the attitude of the Christian Powers towards Turkey, though all of them are casting and recasting plans to turn the Turks out of Turkey, yet none of them dare to measure swords with her. Turkey has of late made vast improvements in her army, and it would be no easy task for any European Power to overthrow her now.

The Prince of Wales' gift to the Vishwanath temple at Benares.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th February,
1906.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th February, says :—Since the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to Amritsar and his offering of Rs. 1,500 as a memento to the Golden Temple, we have steadily kept in view the similar offerings made by His Royal Highness. The same amount was presented to the Jama Masjid at Delhi, and a similar sum to the Cathedral in Calcutta. All these gifts display excellent judgment. But nothing whatever was till then offered to any Hindu temple or shrine. When the Prince did not visit the temple at Kalighat in Calcutta, we expected he would visit the Viswanath temple at Benares, but though the temple was not visited the memento has been sent.

* * * * * * *

We are very pleased that this presentation has been made. It is well known that Hinduism is the most ancient religion in India and has the largest following, and the 'mildness' and loyalty of the Hindu proceed chiefly from his religion. All the four principal religions in India, though Sikhism is only a part of Hinduism, have thus had equal consideration from the Prince of Wales.

The Prince of Wales' visit to the Central Hindu College at Benares.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th February,
1906.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th February, says :—The Central Hindu College, Benares, has several grievances, large and small, against the Government, but it has distinctly scored by the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Royal visitors have honoured very few schools and colleges with a visit during their tour, other sights and other things occupying them. But the Central Hindu College undoubtedly stands apart as an educational institution, and the Prince and Princess of Wales readily responded to the invitation to visit the college and boarding house. What made the visit more important was its informal character. The Prince and Princess drove up in a motor car without ceremony, and they cordially shook hands with Mrs. Besant on arrival. The reception accorded to the Royal visitors was picturesque, simple and cordial. Mrs. Besant presented a golden brooch to the Princess of Wales, and she also read the address to the Prince, who expressed himself quite delighted with the visit. No other college in the United Provinces, except the Aligarh College, will receive this great honour, and Mrs. Besant and the Trustees of the Hindu College may be sincerely congratulated upon the Royal visit to that institution.

Omission of Allahabad from the tour programme of the Prince of Wales.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th February,
1906.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th February, referring to the omission of Allahabad from the tour programme of the Prince of Wales, says :—Gwalior will be twice honoured by a visit from the Prince of Wales, but Allahabad has been given a wide berth, and the Queen's statue in Alfred Park will not be unveiled by the Queen's grandson. It is further announced that the Viceroy will visit Lucknow and Agra on his way to Simla at the end of March, but there is no suggestion or proposal that His Excellency will be invited to unveil the Queen's statue at Allahabad. Allahabad is the most central city in India, it has historical and religious associations of a most important nature, and it is at present the capital of the United Provinces. But to all intents and purposes, it is treated as an obscure, out-of-the-way village, not worth a visit by great dignitaries or distinguished tourists.

HINDOSTHAN,
26th February,
1906.

The Liberal Government, and its policy.

5. The English Hindosthán (Kalákánkar), of the 26th February, says:—

What does Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, the Liberal Premier, mean by stigmatising Chinese indentured labour in the Transvaal mines as servile and cruel? What difference is there between it and Indian coolie labour in the Mauritius, Demarara, and the West Indies? They are both paid labourers, indentured to serve for a number of years, at a certain daily wages, and their passage home is paid when their time is up, the Indian coolies returning often with good sums of money and jewellery, which is probably also the case with the Chinese coolies. Owing to the stoppage of Chinese labour, the Káfir Mine shares have already depreciated in value to the amount of eighteen million pounds sterling.

Granting self-government to the Transvaal may perhaps answer; but not to the Orange River Colony, where the Boers by far outnumber the whites. It is certain to lead to trouble, perhaps even to another Boer war. Whenever a Radical Government comes into power, it generally leads to foreign complications. The Liberal Government, however, don't seem to have quite agreed on the matter as yet, so it may perhaps be hung up for the present. The next step may possibly be that the Cabinet will want to scuttle out of Egypt, which would be a great pity after all that has been effected there by means of British capital and enterprise, deserts having been turned into smiling fields of corn, cotton and beans.

The King-Emperor's speech at the opening of Parliament, and the Indian famines.

6. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st March, referring to the King-Emperor's speech at the late opening of the new Parliament, regrets to say that His Majesty did not think fit to express his sorrow at the constant recurrence of famines in India which is his greatest dependency.

RIYAZ-UL-
AKHBAR,
24th February,
1906.

Mr. Gokhale's comparison of Lord Curzon's with Aurangzeb's reign in India, at he last Congress, and the Musalmans.

7. A Hindu correspondent of the Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 24th February, endeavours to assure the editor that when Mr. Gokhale instituted a comparison between Lord Curzon's rule and Aurangzeb's reign in India, in the course of his Presidential speech at the late Congress held at Benares, he never intended thereby to hurt the feelings of his Muhammadan fellow-countrymen in any way. Mr. Gokhale is too great a man to be animated by religious prejudices in his speeches or deeds against any community. His one mission in life is to promote the well-being of the whole of India without making any distinction between the Hindus and Musalmans or other communities. As regards the utility or otherwise of the Congress, the movement is an inevitable outcome of the Western education and Western form of Government the people have received; and even such statesmen as Lord Lansdowne, Sir William Hunter, &c., approved of the same. Why, even His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales most graciously accorded an interview to Mr. Gokhale (sic.), President of the last Congress, and made a kind reference to his Presidential address at that assemblage. And such being the case, what thoughtful man can still doubt the loyalty and good faith of the Congress leaders? Commenting upon the above communication, the Riyáz-ul-Akhbár says that Mr. Gokhale was thought to be a man animated by religious prejudices, not so much because he compared Lord Curzon's rule with that of Aurangzeb, but because in the speech he made at Manchester he represented the beneficial Swadeshi movement as an outcome of resentment against the Bengal partition scheme, thereby proving that he had gone to England to plead the cause of the dissatisfied Bengalis alone, and not that of the whole of India. In the matter of patriotism, surely Mr. Tilak is a man far superior to Mr. Gokhale. As regards the question of usefulness of the Congress movement, the editor holds it to be a premature one and calculated to do more harm than good to the country; and he does not therefore like that his co-religionists should have anything to do with it.

RIYAZ-UL-
AKHBAR,
24th February,
1906.

The Congress and the Musalmans.

8. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 24th February, says that in order to dupe unwary Musalmans into their political agitation, the leaders of the Indian National Congress have now taken upon themselves to assert that their movement was originally started at the suggestion of Lord Dufferin, though he afterwards turned against it. This assertion cannot possibly be believed; for had this been a fact, Lord Dufferin would not have thought fit to so completely condemn the movement subsequently, as he did. Moreover, the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan, who was strongly opposed to the Congress, would not, while condemning that movement in his speeches, have spared Lord Dufferin, if His Lordship had any sympathy with it. Again, the Congressists, referring to the reply which Lord Ampthill recently made to the address of the Anjuman-i-Islamia, Madras, contend that His Lordship, in advising the Muhammadans to bestir themselves, meant that they should take part in political agitation. This could hardly be the object of His Lordship's advice. The Musalmans have not, at any rate yet made sufficient progress to feel themselves justified in demanding political rights from Government. When they are divided even among themselves, they cannot be said to be qualified for joining other Indian communities in political agitation.

AGRA AKHBAR,
28th February,
1906.

The Congress, and the Musalmans.

9. A correspondent of the Agra Akhbár (Agra), of the 28th February, referring to the resolution passed by the late Congress at Benares re the quarantine imposed at Bombay on Muhammadan pilgrims bound for Mecca, says that it was only a dodge of the Congressists to wheedle the Musalmans into joining their movement.' The resolution in question was proposed by a Hindu and seconded by one Mulla Abdul Qayyúm who bore ill-will towards the British Government on account of his late dismissal from the service of the Nizam's Government for interfering with certain plague measures introduced in Hyderabad. None of the other Musalmans too who attended the late Congress could be called to be representatives of their community. The writer therefore warns the Musalmans in general to continue to give a wide berth to the Congress as they have hitherto done, or they will do themselves much harm if they joined that body. Their broad principle of conduct should be their implicit reliance on Government to do what is best for them.

RAHBAR,
28th February,
1906.

The British Government, and India.

10. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February, observing that while the United States has already granted Local Self-Government to the Philippines and Cuba, (after a few years), joins the Statesman in regretting that the British Government, notwithstanding it has now ruled for more than a century in India, does not yet think her fit for a similar concession.

Conviction of a Bengali student at Alipore on the charge of assaulting a police officer on duty.

12. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 26th February, says:—The decision arrived at by the District and Sessions Judge of Alipore, in the case which went before him on appeal, once more confirms the popular conviction that it is useless defending students when prosecuted by the police. Whether or not this conviction is conducive to the interests of justice or to the enhancement of its reputation, it is for the authorities to say. In this case, one Surath Kumar Bose was arrested on a charge of assaulting and obstructing a public officer in the discharge of his duties. Surath Kumar was clad in pants and chapkan when he was waiting for a tram car with a view to going to the town. This fact alone was sufficient to convince a man of average intelligence that the object which induced him to come to the place was quite innocent. The Police version, uncorroborated by independent and disinterested witnesses, was that on being asked by a constable to move away, Surath gave him a slap, and then he was arrested. Man must be brought back to Darwin's primitive stage to give credence to such a strange phenomenon. Is it possible for an intelligent and fairly educated young man, while in the presence of a posse of constables, European Sergeants and a Police Inspector, to commit such a rash act without sufficient provocation, conscious fully of its inevitable result? If we have to pin our faith on the police version, we have to bid farewell to our past experiences. Ask any man, even the most illiterate conceivable, and he will tell you that it is a new and unheard-of experience. Common sense dictates credence in possibilities. Whether or not law influences the mind to incline towards improbabilities, we cannot say for certain. The possibilities for a judicial mind to credit the strange police version creates undoubtedly a new world of faith, beyond the comprehension of an ordinary man. The evidence adduced in support of the defence went to show that Surath received a push and remonstrated with the constable, and the result was that the former was assaulted and arrested by the police. Which of these two versions has on it the stamp of probability? Apart from the impossibility of the police version, and of accepting it as gospel truth, the punishment of a month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 150, passes our conception. On appeal the fine only has been reduced to Rs. 100.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st March,
1906.

A mixed case at Saharanpur.

13. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 1st March, says:—When there is a case of assault between a European and an Indian, it is usually the latter that is the complainant and the European comes into court to answer the charge. In a recent case decided at Saharanpur, the particulars of which will be found in another place, the parts were reversed and it was the European who appeared as the complainant and the Indian appeared as the accused. That was the first peculiarity. But the case presented peculiarities of a still more remarkable character. The complainant is Mr. Leake, Superintendent of the Saharanpur Botanical Gardens, and the accused is Babu Amrit Lal, his Head Clerk. Mr. Leake complained that he had been assaulted in his own house by Babu Amrit Lal, who was further accused of cirminal house trespass. The provocation was that the complainant had reported the accused for embezzlement and a warrant was out against him, and the complainant refused to reconsider the matter when the accused prayed him to do so. The assault was very severe, but the consequences were amazing; for while Mr. Leake, who was assaulted, had not a scratch anywhere on his person, his assailant, Babu Amrit Lal, was found to have lost a tooth, he was bleeding from the mouth and also from the right eye and presented a shocking sight. We are told that it is an unwise man who, in a fit of anger, knocks his head against a wall, but an encounter with a rock could not be more disastrous than was this conflict between Babu Amrit Lal and Mr. Leake. It was stated in evidence that the injuries were self-inflicted, but no motive whatever was alleged for such frightful injuries. The accused made no attempt to implicate any one, or to insinuate that he was assaulted by Mr. Leake or any one else. He merely said he had become unconscious and did not remember what had happened. Seeing that Mr. Leake, his friend Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Leake's men were the only witnesses the accused could not have gained much by inventing a story. He was unconscious when he was removed from Mr. Leake's house. And the punishment that he received in the Sessions Court was imprisonment for 3 months and 4 weeks. We have our doubts as to whether the accused was quite sane at the time, or responsible for what he did, and the punishment appears to be disproportionately severe for what was only a technical assault and trespass. We take strong exception to the remark of the Magistrate that an insult "coming from a native to a European gentleman, and from a clerk to his own superior officer, was as contemptible, as intolerable and as criminal as any insult could possibly be." What was the occasion for the Magistrate to import the race element into the case? A magistrate who thinks and writes that an insult from a "Native" to a European is more serious than an insult from a European to a "Native" is hardly in a proper frame of mind to administer justice.

HINDUSTANI,

1906.

Certain complaints against the officials of the Court of Wards in the United Provinces.

14. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 28th February, complains that the owners of the estates under the management of the Court of Wards are generally illtreated by the Sarbaráhkars and ziladars appointed by the Court. The officials in question who get only small salaries, live in great pomp and splendour, freely making use of the tents, carriages, horses, furniture, &c. of the owners of the estates. If an owner does not readily concede to the wishes of the sarbaráhkar, the latter intimidates him with the threat of speaking against him to the manager and getting his maintenance allowance stopped. The Government would therefore do well to either abolish the posts of Sarbaráhkars altogether or make such arrangements that the latter may have nothing to do with the owners of the estates. It would also be well if enquiries were made from the owners every year if they had any complaints to make against any officials of the Court of Wards, and the officials found guilty of any fault punished.

Continual increase in the number of persons accused of being bad characters

15. A correspondent of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 28th February, is at a loss to understand why, now that the British Government is firmly established in India, there should be a continual increase in the number of persons accused of being bad characters from year to year, and people of one class or faction should always be trying to make the Government suspect the loyalty of another class. It is much to be regretted that the police should not have the least scruple to represent any person, however respectable, with whom they are displeased, as a bad character, to the local authorities, and thereby pave the way of his being brought into disgrace at any moment.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
4th February, 1906.

A new class of swindlers in the Meerut district.

16. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 4th February, received on the 28th idem, regretting the increase in the forms of swindling practices in India, says that a new system of cheating by means of coupons has lately been devised. A swindler issues a coupon to a person at a certain price, and promises to give the purchaser some article or articles worth double the amount of the price paid, after a week or so. The result is that many thoughtless villagers are easily entrapped, and when the swindler has duped a number of simple people, he decamps to lay his snare elsewhere. This kind of practice has lately been carried on in the villages of the Meerut district by certain Panjabis who represented themselves to be the agents of some merchant in Umballa. Government ought to take steps to save unwary people from the frauds of such swindlers.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,

A suggestion for locating public prostitutes in some out-of-the-way place in the towns in the United Provinces.

17. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th February, says that the residence of public prostitutes in the midst of the people in large towns is one of the most potent causes of so much prevalence of venereal diseases. Many promising youths of respectable families readily fall victims to the seductive charms of bázár women who are generally diseased; and the various Municipal Boards in the United Provinces would do well to remove these pests of society to some out-of-the-way place in their respective towns, so that young men may not readily find access to them, without incurring ill name and disgrace among their relatives and others.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
28th February, 1906.

Coming revision of the assessment of the water-rate at Agra.

18. The Nasím-i-Agra (Agra) of the 28th February, says:—That as the time for the reassessment of the water-rate at Agra is drawing near the Municipal Board is going to ask Government for the services of an extra European official to revise the assessment. But the Municipal Secretary is a well paid official, and is said to be a good engineer, to boot, and there is no reason why he should not be required to perform this duty, and an extra man be deputed to do it, at an additional cost to the Board.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th February, 1906.

Minimum age-limit for the Entrance Examination of the Indian Universities.

19. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 24th February, referring to the fixing of the minimum age-limit for candidates for the Entrance Examination by the several Indian Universities, says that this restriction was quite uncalled for. There will always be some exceptionally brilliant students who, if they receive education systematically, can go up for the Entrance Examination at the age of 14, so that the restriction in question will simply stand in their way, and compel them to wait two long years before they can move forward in their educational progress. The restriction of age is, therefore, calculated to bring the educational policy of Government into discredit, and will lead the people to contemplate it with distrust and misgivings.

CITIZEN,
26th February, 1906.

The Bombay University and the minimum-age limit of candidates for the Matriculation Examination.

20. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 26th February, says :—The Senate of the Bombay University has after all treated as a mandate the Government recommendation to fix the age-limit at sixteen for the Matriculation Examination. We had, indeed, expected that the University would not go down on its knees, and make a somersault by rescinding its own resolution arrived at some time ago, fixing the age-limit at 15. The arguments employed by Government were hollow, though somewhat high-sounding, and consisted in vainglorious platitudes. Their main object was the uniformity of age in all India for the Matriculation students, which was surely a meaningless purpose. The fixing of the age-limit is ordinarily superfluous, would unnecessarily operate unjustly and harshly in exceptionally rare cases. Further, the University had decided to meet Government half way by deciding to maintain 15 as the age limit. The ludicrous exhibition of the change of mind of a few who had voted in favour of 15 years' age-limit is indeed pitiable. The Bombay University has shown a deplorable want of strength of mind.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th February, 1906.

Location of the Law College proposed to be established at Allahabad.

21. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th February, says :—We hope there is no foundation for the report that a particular house and a particular place at a considerable distance from the Muir Central College have been fixed upon as the site for the proposed Law College. There should be no misunderstanding on the subject. The scheme for the foundation of a Law College at Allahabad has the heartiest support of the general public, but it would be a mistake to locate it away from the Muir College if a suitable site happen to be available close by. As we have pointed out there is a sufficiently large piece of land available for the purpose, adjoining the grounds of the Muir College, and we trust an inspection of the locality will be made if the idea has not been already entertained. To have the Law College side by side with the Muir College, with the MacDonnell Boarding House on one side and the Muhammadan Boarding House on the other, will be to create a great educational centre well worthy of the Provinces and the Local Government. If there were no land available near the Muir College, the case would be different, and the Government would have no option but to look out for another site for the Law College. Besides the open square to the north of the Muir College, all the houses on the west could be acquired, and the western wall of the Muir College could be extended along the City Road northwards down to the corner of the open ground. The entire range of buildings, with the splendid edifice nearing completion and which will be known as the MacDonnell Boarding House, will be one of the principal attractions of Allahabad, and a fitting monument to the interest of the present Government in the cause of education.

OUDH AKHBAR,
26th February, 1906.

Alleged bad influences of the Aligarh College upon the Muhammadan students.

22. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 26th February, in a long article, not only denies the greater usefulness of the Muhammadan College at Aligarh, in the matter of secular education, than other colleges in the United Provinces, but endeavours to show that boys in that college readily imbibe the religious ideas of the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad, as expressed in his commentary on the Qurán—which entirely upsets the established doctrines and beliefs of the Muhammadan faith—and adopt a costly mode of living which is generally beyond the means of their parents, and is likely to prove ruinous to them in their after-lives. The students of this college have also lately been taught to go about begging for subscriptions for their Alma Mater, which is calculated to make them contract the bad habit of begging for their private purposes afterwards, without feeling shame.

OUDH AKHBAR,
26th February, 1906.

Certain educational complaints in the United Provinces.

23. A Musalmán correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 26th February, referring to the memorial recently submitted by certain residents of Sitapur to the Director of Public Instruction, United Provinces, urging certain modifications in the curricula of studies, especially in the Urdu courses prescribed for the Anglo-Vernacular schools, approves of the suggestions of the memorialists in general. But in order to prevent unsuitable books being prescribed for school boys in future, it is very necessary that the present constitution of the Provincial Text-book Committee should be changed. With the exception of only one man, there is hardly any other person on this Committee who can be said to be an authority on Urdu literature. Again, only the books compiled by the members of the Committee are generally prescribed as text books, to the exclusion of even better and more suitable works of others. The number of non-official members on the Committee is only about half of the official members, and the result is that the latter are able to do everything in their own way. The majority of the men appointed to select books for schools should, properly speaking, be teachers. The writer also protests against the study of Arabic having been made compulsory (along with Persian), the fixing of the minimum age-limit for the Entrance Examination, and the restrictions imposed on private candidates for that Examination, and suggests that a memorial complaining about these matters also should be prepared and submitted to Government.

ADVOCATE,
1st March, 1906.

Reforms proposed in the curricula of Anglo-Vernacular schools in the United Provinces.

24. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st March, says:—The citizens of Sitapur are to be congratulated on the excellent memorial which they have submitted to the Director of Public Instruction praying for reform in our Anglo-Vernacular schools.

* * * * * * *

We agree with the memorialists in thinking that drill and geography should be discontinued in the Primary Section, and that shikasta reading should be abolished altogether. "Shikasta writing," as the memorial states, "as an art is obsolete now," and the teaching of script reading serves no useful purpose whatsoever. We are however not in favour of the abolition of drawing. Drawing is one of the most interesting and most instructive subjects to which children may be introduced and the importance of the co-ordination of the hand and eye can hardly be over-rated. Only—and this proviso applies to all subjects of the school curriculum—the teacher must know how to teach it. The teacher who knows his business can, in teaching drawing, provide ample scope for the irrepressible manual activity of the children, and at the same time develope their mental and æsthetic faculties. The same may be said of Elementary Science, which in the lowest classes should take the form of object lessons.

As for the teaching of English in the Primary Classes, we think that it should be done by the most skilful teacher on the staff, preference being given to the Headmaster, if he be an Englishman. The old method of cram must be discarded in favour of the modern method of conversation. Concerning the text-books on English grammar, we are decidedly of opinion that the Grammatical Primer published by the Christian Literary Society of India (London and Madras) is the most suitable for the boys of our Primary Classes. The question of the suitability and unsuitability of Urdu text-books need not be discussed. We have reasons to believe that the new vernacular text books approved by Mr. Hardie's Committee are satisfactory.

The practical suggestions made by the memorialists for the redistribution of the Arithmetic course are very sound. The initial mistake in this connection was made by the Department when hankering after symmetry, it equalised the Vernacular Middle and Anglo-Vernacular Middle courses. The mistake was rectified to some extent by the Committee of 1899; but the distribution is still uneven and ought to be remedied. The tale of nineteen exercise books enumerated in the memorial also needs pruning. Much of the work for which copy-books are now required can be and ought to be done on slate, e.g, Arithmetical school-work, English and Vernacular dictation, &c. Some of the subjects for which two copies, one rough and the other fair, are demanded now ought always to be satisfied with only one.

To sum up, we think that the Department ought to go back to a considerable extent to the curriculum, which was in use prior to 1889; for it will not only lighten the burdens of the boys, but will also set free the energies of teachers to be applied to sounder and more rational modes of teaching: for as a correspondent truly remarks "the new methods of teaching which they (the trained teachers) have learnt at their college, are of little avail unless something towards reducing the bulk and number of subjects is done."

ZAMANAH,
January, 1906.

An appeal to Indians to promote Swadeshism.

25. The Zamánah (Cawnpore), for January, congratulating the Bengalis on their starting the Swadeshi movement, even though in resentment against the partition of Bengal, and not from a pure sense of patriotism, is glad to notice that the movement is spreading fast throughout the whole country. So long as Indians continue to use foreign goods, it is absurd on their part to lament on the increasing poverty of their country. If they have the least regard for the well-being of their coming generations, or for the good name of their mother-land, they should take to using their indigenous articles, even though these be not so fine as, or be more costly than, foreign goods. They must be prepared to make some sacrifice if they sincerely desire to better the conditon of their country. They should start new factories to supply all their wants at home, send their youths for industrial education to foreign countries, and do every thing else that is calculated to promote Swadeshism in their midst.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th February,
1906.

The Swadeshi movement, and the Government.

26. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 16th February, in an article headed "Government's misgivings at the Swadeshi movement," says that India is the only unfortunate country in the world, where every public movement, even though it be calculated not only to benefit the people, but the Government also, is looked upon by the authorities with grave suspicion, as if it were a prelude to revolt. The fact of the matter is that the British being foreign rulers of India, they are not sure of the stability of their Government in that country, threatened as she is by rival Powers on her different frontiers; and hence they are anxious to squeeze as much wealth out of her as they can possibly do during their rule. Such being the case, the British Government must always pay greater heed to the interests of English merchants and exploiters than to those of the children of the soil; so that one could not possibly expect the Government to sympathize with the Swadeshi movement of the Indians, even if it were not the immediate offspring of the Bengal Partition scheme. But the editor warns the Government that though it need not mind much the Musalmans, who are practically an apathetic and dull people, it should carefully consider the danger of giving deep offence to the 24 crores of Hindus by assuming a positive hostile attitude towards their Swadeshi movement.

OUDH PUNCH,
22nd February,
1906.

The cry of Bande Mátaram, and European officers in Bengal.

27. A correspondent of the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 22nd February, referring to the various harsh measures which the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam is reported to have hitherto adopted for preventing the Bengalis from shouting Bande Mátaram, and indulging in other objectionable forms of Swadeshi agitation, says that though the "faint-hearted" European officers of that province are extremely annoyed and vexed at the shout, the Bengalis do not yet give up "the heart-sickening" cry, notwithstanding that they have already suffered so much for it. The writer only heard from Mullás (Muhammadan theologians) that *la-haul (lit. there is no power but in God) drives away the devil from one's vicinity, but he now actually finds many a Sahib log (European) writhe with pain and

---

*This is an exclamation used by Muhammadans when they want to express aversion or contempt, and supposed to be especially efficacious in driving away Satan.

run away on hearing the cry of Bande Mátaram. The Sub-Divisional officer of Kishorganj in the Dacca Division being greatly put out at the students' cry of Bande Mátaram, lately asked the Divisional Inspector of Schools, Mr. Stapleton, to devise some means to stop the cry; and the latter has accordingly written to the Head-master of the Kishorganj School to make all the students in the first and second classes to write out neatly the charm "I will not waste my time in shouting Bande-Mátaram," five hundred times each, and send the same to him. When an Indian baby cries much or wakes from sleep with a start or scream, his mother thinks that the child has been either frightened or affected with an evil eye, and she immediately tries to secure some amulet or charm from an expert in the matter, and ties it round his neck to cure him. Similarly, Mr. Stapleton has, it would seem, ordered a large supply of the special charm in question, and he might send one to every European officer in Bengal directing him to tie it round his neck with a view to protecting himself from the evil effects of Bande Mátaram on him, or, better still, to dissolve the charm in water and swallow it, to make himself perfectly secure from the terrors of the cry. [The Dil Shád (Meerut), of the 15th February, expresses the same humorous views, and, adding that in support of the Hindus' cry of Bande Mátaram, the Musalmans in Bengal have taken to shout out Bande Mádaram, (I am servant of my mother, i.e., motherland) and Alláhu Akbar (God is great), says that Bande Mátaram has now come to be regarded by European officers as a war cry, some of whom dread it as much as one would a cannon-ball, while others take it to mean bándho (seize) and máro (beat)].

ARYA MITRA,
24th February, 1906.

An appeal to Indians to promote Swadeshism.

28. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th February, publishes an animated Hindi poem, received from a correspondent, in which he, pointing out that England, America, Germany, Australia and Japan have grown great and rich by patronizing their respective home manufactures, pathetically appeals to Indians to shake off their lethargy and indifference, and make a pledge to use India-made goods (exclusively) in future, this being the only well established means for ameliorating the condition of one's country. If the Indians have any spark of patriotism left in them, if they are anxious to recover the greatness of their illustrious ancestors such as Ram Chandra, Harish Chandra, &c., if they desire to rid themselves of the designation of semi-barbarians applied to them, if they want, in short, to be called men, then they should give up using foreign articles in favour of their indigenous goods, and, cultivating good will and amity among their fellow-countrymen, do their best to co-operate in bringing the vessel of their country sinking in the midst of the sea (of impoverishment) to the haven (of prosperity) with the help of true patriotism by promoting the cause of their own industries.

AWAZAH-I-KHALQ,
24th February, 1906.

The Swadeshi movement, and abuse of Lord Curzon.

29. The Awázah-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th February, publishes a number of Urdu verses from a correspondent, in which he briefly recounting some of the events of the last year, says that the Swadeshi movement, that took its birth in Bengal, has been welcomed by the whole of India, but that it is dreaded by the British members of the Civil Service as if it were death. The writer then referring to Lord Curzon, without mentioning his name, calls him a blasphemer of India, a deadly enemy of the Indians, a partitioner of provinces, a plunderer of the Indians' wealth and honour, a black serpent, a great oppressor of the people, and ends by observing that he had ultimately "to retire from" India, in disgrace, and praying that God may not allow his blackened face to be seen (again) in this country.

ADVOCATE,
25th February, 1906.

Officials and Swadeshism in Eastern Bengal.

30. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th February, says:—If you hold any office under Government, paid or honorary, you cannot be a Swadeshi, rather should be a preacher of bideshi, if not wilati, goods—at least in Eastern Bengal and Assam. The Bengálee reports incidents of District and Sub-Divisional Officers in the new Province going out into the bázár, and not only enquiring into and recording the sales of goods of foreign and indigenous make—which is, by the way, a perfectly legitimate course— but samjháoing the shop-keepers in certain cases against the policy of boycott. On account of private instructions received by District Officers to keep an eye on the progress of the Swadeshi movement, and more on the workers in the cause, many persons fight shy of endeavours made in several towns to open Indian stores. The A. B. Patrika gives a practical proof of the antipathy of Sir Bamfylde Fuller towards the good move for the encouragement of Indian arts and manufactures. The Eastern Bengal and Assam Gazette contained the following: "Notification :—The 9th February, 1906; No. 820J.C. —Babu Tara Nath Bal, Magistrate of the second class in the District of Mymensingh, is removed from his office under section 26 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act V of 1898.—(Sd.) P. C. LYON, Chief Secretary."

On the same day, Mr. Lyon sent the following memorandum to the Commissioner of the Dacca Division:—

"Memo. No. 82J.C., dated the 9th February, 1906. Copy forwarded to the Commissioner, Dacca, for information and favour of communication to the Honorary Magistrate who should be informed that it was passed after consideration of his letter to the District Magistrate, dated the 9th December, 1905.

By order, etc. (Sd.) P. C. LYON, Chief Secretary."

Now, the letter referred to above was in reply to the Magistrate of Mymensingh's memorandum to Mr. Bal, informing him of his suspension. Therein he writes further: "Thanking a gentleman for his noble and perfectly loyal conduct and taking part in the proceedings of such a public meeting, are perhaps not grounds for the suspension or dismissal of an Honorary Magistrate. Had it been so, Babu Surendra Nath Banerjea, a Presidency Honorary Magistrate, and Messrs. Bose, Chaudhuri and Mazumdar, Members of the Bengal Legislative Council, would have been removed from their respective public functions, as they are the most prominent leaders of the recent agitation. In conclusion, I regret to take exception to the term 'under suspension' in brackets in your aforesaid memorandum before the Local Government has decided or gazetted one way or the other." The District Magistrate in reply expressed his regret and withdrew his memorandum. The matter should have ended there as every sensible man thought it did. But no, it went further. Result—fall of Government in public estimation.

CITIZEN,
26th February,
1906.

Young Irishmen's congratulations to Indian students on their Swadeshi movement.

31. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 26th February, says:—While the students of Bengal have devoted their heart and soul to the Swadeshi movement here, it is interesting to note what the younger generation in Ireland is doing with the new movement there, called Sinn Fein policy, which would seem to be only a Gaelic rendering of our own Swadeshi policy. They have ceased, we read, in a foreign exchange, to look to England. At a recent gathering of students in Dublin, "there was not a word about the great Oxford or Cambridge." They also decided to issue a manifesto to the general body of students in Ireland, pointing out the duty they owed to their country. And that they wanted to keep themselves in touch with national movements in other parts of the world, became very evident from a series of resolutions which they adopted, in regard to the student-movement in Bengal. We quote here these in full:—

Whereas, England is a manufacturing country and depends to a large extent on her colonies for a market; and

Whereas, England, by keeping as far as possible her subject races in ignorance, uses one to oppose the other;

Resolved—that we congratulate the students of India for taking their place in the van of the movement.

Resolved—that we invite them to co-operate with us that by concurrent action we may render more effective assistance in checking the power that has created periodic famines in India and Ireland; and it is further

Resolved—that copies of these resolutions be sent to the Davis News Agency and Indian press.

CITIZEN,

Stoppage of the performances of a play at Mymensingh by the District Magistrate.

32. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 26th February, says:—The District Magistrate of Mymensingh in the Eastern Province of Bengal has, we hear, in one case actually prohibited the performance of the drama of Pratapaditya which was to be given by a local dramatic company. The company had taken previous permission of the District Magistrate and announced the performance. But at about 10 o'clock at night the police, it is said, entered the theatre and stopped the performance in the name of the District Magistrate, who, they said, had withdrawn his permission. Pratapaditya is a national hero and the drama in question was actually performed several times in Calcutta. One wonders, therefore, why the District Magistrate of Mymensingh should have behaved so strangely in the case of an innocent dramatic piece which, though performed in the capital, had not the effect of upsetting the Bengal Government. It is supposed that the object of the District Magistrate was to cut down one more opportunity for the people to shout out the shibboleth of Bande Mátarum. But assuming that it was so, we wonder in how many directions and to what unreasonable extent the District Magistrate may not have to extend his legal arm to bring about the result which is apparently so much at his heart.

The Muhammadan party at Aligarh, and the Swadeshi movement.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
28th February, 1906.

33. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 28th February, referring to the allegation of the Paisa Akhbar of Lahore that Maulvi Muin-ud-din had been removed from the editorial staff of the former journal for writing, some time ago, an article in support of the Swadeshi movement, says that the allegation is not "quite" correct. The fact was that the journal was lately found to be a losing concern and bankrupt in spite of the annual aid of Rs. 1,200 received from the funds of the Muhammadan College at Aligarh, and Maulvi Mehdi Ali, the honorary editor, thought it proper to stop the publication in consequence. In the meantime a Director of Public Instruction was wanted in the Bhopal State, and the post being offered to Maulvi Muin-ud-din, he accepted it, and Maulví Wilayet Husain, who agreed to undertake to edit the journal without receiving any payment, was taken on the editorial staff. As regards the article on the Swadeshi movement by Maulvi Muin-ud-din referred to above, it did not mean that the Musalmans should join the movement, but that they, too, should turn their attention to promoting arts and industries or they would be left behind in this matter also in the same way as they were, by their indifference in the beginning, outstripped in the acquirement of Western education by their other fellow-countrymen. The Muhammadan party at Aligarh certainly desire to see special efforts being made to improve Indian industries, as does the Government itself, but they do not advocate holding out the threat of boycotting English goods with a view to gain any special object from Government.

Need for promoting indigenous industries in India.

OUDH AKHBAR,
28th February, 1906.

34. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 28th February, says that one of the most prominent causes of the impoverishment of the people of India is their neglect of their indigenous industries, and their fond desire to enter Government service, which entails the loss of one's liberty and self-respect, and, bringing a fixed and limited income, as it does, can never make one a rich man. Hence, in order to improve the financial condition of India, the Indians should promote their indigenous arts and industries and take their country's trade into their own hands by establishing their own trading firms in foreign countries.

Swadeshism and Musalmans at Agra.

ARYA MITRA,
1st March, 1906.

35. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st March, expatiating on the benefits of the encouragement of the use of Swadeshi articles in India and referring to the bazar which Babu Kedar Nath, Vakíl, has lately opened at Belanganj in Agra, for the exclusive sale of indigenous goods, regrets that Musalmans are very rarely seen either among the shopkeepers or customers in the said bazar.

Debate on the Partition of Bengal in Parliament.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st March, 1906.

36. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 1st March, says:—The long expected and anxiously awaited debate in the House of Commons on the partition of Bengal is over, and the last hope of the question being reopened or reconsidered is at an end. Those who have followed the different stages of this question with dispassionate consideration will not feel surprised at what has happened, nor will look upon the result as quite unexpected.

* * * * * * *

As regards the debate itself, the greatest interest attaches to the speech of Mr. John Morley who wound it up, and left the proposer and seconder of the amendment no other alternative but to withdraw it.

* * * * * * *

Mr. John Morley frankly and fully admitted that the partition made wholly disregarded the wishes of the majority of the people of Bengal. This admission is of the very greatest importance, and the fact that the wishes of the majority of the people of Bengal can be disregarded with utter impunity is a clear proof of the helplessness of the people of this country. Sir Henry Cotton, in seconding the amendment, had suggested the inclusion of Assam in Bengal and the creation of a new province westward with its capital at Patna. Relying on this admission Mr. John Morley said that a redistribution was necessary, whereas the wishes of the people were apparently a negligible quantity. That is precisely the attitude of the Government in all matters relating to India. The thing has been done whether with the consent of the people or in utter disregard of their wishes is immaterial and it cannot be undone.

What jars on the ear is Mr. Morley's reference to Lord Curzon. He is reported to have said :—" India had had a period of energy in administration, and the time had not arrived to pass a verdict on the great administration of Lord Curzon. His fine powers, great gifts and supreme devotion to what he believed to be the public interest were undeniable, and he thought at the end of this great period India should be allowed to take breath." If there is any covert irony anywhere in Mr. Morley's speech it is here. Is that administration, or that energy great which drives a country out of breath, or is the public interest rightly served by disregarding the wishes of the majority of the people ? That part of the amendment which referred to the demands of the Indian people for a larger share in the administration and with which Mr. Morley also dealt is a separate question and must be separately treated. The people of Bengal, it seems to us, are chiefly concerned at present with one single expression of opinion by Mr. John Morley, and it is this : the partition of Bengal, said Mr. Morley, 'was a settled thing,' and it was unreasonable to ask Government to start afresh, especially as he was assured on the highest authority that the feeling regarding the same was subsiding ? We all know who the highest authority is. What can the people of Bengal do to bring home to the mind of Mr. John Morley the fact that the feeling regarding the partition is not subsiding ? Since the fact is admitted that the wishes of the people were disregarded when the partition was made, it should be possible to convince the Secretary of State that the wishes of the people of Bengal have not changed nor has the feeling subsided. Since the people of Bengal introduced a form of protest hitherto unknown in this country, the sympathy of the Government was lost from the outset. The partition will now stand, but will the Swadeshi movement and the boycott of English goods be abandoned ? It is for Bengal to answer this question and to hold demonstrations to prove that the feeling has not subsided. In East Bengal the Government has been employing force to put down the agitation, and this matter has not yet been brought forward in the House of Commons. If the agitation can be kept up in spite of persecution, then alone can Bengal discharge the duty that rests upon it more heavily than ever.

OUDH AKHBAR,
24th February,
1906.

A suggestion for memorializing the Government of India for an extension of the term of office of Sir James Digges LaTouche.

37. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 24th February, referring to the proposal made, in May last, by the late Shaikh Muhammad Raza Husain Khan, a taluqdar of Oudh, re the extension of the term of office of Sir James Digges LaTouche, as Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces, says that as His Honour will complete his five years' rule a few months hence, it is high time that the taluqdars and other leaders of the Oudh province memorialized the Government of India to move the Secretary of State to grant two years' extension of office to His Honour, to enable him to complete the various measures of sanitation, &c., he has already initiated in Lucknow. The writer hopes that the people, who appreciate and know well what Sir James has already done for their well-being and prosperity, will lose no time in taking up this suggestion, and doing all in their power to get the term of His Honour's Lieutenant-Governorship extended.

SIPAHI,
27th February,
1906.

Protection of India and native soldiers.

38. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 27th February, says that though the British Government may increase British troops in India, the protection of this country will mainly depend on the bravery and valour of the native soldiers themselves, who have always rendered most faithful and heroic services to the Government both here and in other countries.

SIPAHI,
27th February, 1906.

Need for increasing the pay of Indian sepoys.

39. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), of the 27th February, regrets that though Indian sepoys and officers have always been loyal to the British Government, not hesitating even to fight against their own countrymen on behalf of that Government, yet they continue to receive very poor salaries with which they can hardly make both ends meet. An ordinary labourer in a mill earns Rs. 15 a month, whereas a native soldier is paid only Rs. 9 per mensem, and is liable to be dismissed at any moment he happens to displease his officer. The lot of the native sepoy is very hard indeed, and the authorities would do well to ameliorate it.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st March, 1906.

Supply of grass for cavalry horses, and zamindars.

40. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 1st March, says :—Wherever cavalry is stationed, there is necessarily a large number of horses to be fed. The Commissariat Department arranges for the supply of gram and oats for the horses, but no arrangement is made for grass. Sometimes grass is purchased, but there is no regular supply of grass in that manner. The grasscutters have to go out and find grass for the horses.

*   *   *   *   *   *   *

These men go out every morning and each one has to bring back a full load of grass. If there were a Government Reserve Forest at every station where a regiment of cavalry is quartered, the difficulty would be easily solved, but since there is no such convenience the grasscutters have to go and get grass wherever they get it. The roadside grass, whether belonging to the District Board, the Municipality or the Government, is sold, and there is not enough to provide fodder for four hundred horses. The practice of the grasscutters is this : they go in a body of fifty to a hundred strong in some field belonging to some zamindar and cut as much grass as they need. Remonstrations are useless, for the men come prepared to employ force, if necessary, and to fight if resisted. In case of a disturbance, or a breach of the peace, the zamindar and his men get the worst of it, and the police invariably side with the grasscutters. The result is that owners of fields and grass-lands submit to this form of exaction uncomplainingly in the same way as they have to provide rasad for officers on tour without expecting to receive any payment for what they supply. It is of course nobody's business to enquire how grass for cavalry horses is obtained, or who pays for them. There is, however, a definite and substantial grievance calling for redress and should be widely ventilated. The proper course to adopt would be for the zamindars to send a bill to the officer commanding the regiment for the grass taken from their fields, and to bring the matter to the notice of the police and the executive authorities. But land-owners have seldom the courage to adopt any of these courses and consequently no complaints are heard. If they had the slightest hope of redress or an assurance that they would not incur the displeasure of the authorities, they would be found ready enough to come forward with their complaints.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
1st March, 1906.

A suggestion to high Government Officers for going incognito among the people, to know their true condition.

41. The Cawnpore Gazette (Cawnpore), of the 1st March, observing that in former times high Government officials used to go (occasionally) incognito among the people to find out their true condition, and opinion re the conduct of subordinate officials towards the public, says that if the old practice were revived, it would prove of immense advantage to the administration of the country.

AL BASHIR,
27th February, 1906.

Al Bashír on the alleged efforts of the Arya Samajists to substitute Sanskrit for Arabic and Persian words that have become quite common in the Hindustani language.

42. The Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 27th February, complains that the Arya Samaj journals are now trying to use as many Sanskrit words as possible in Hindustáni, rejecting Arabic and Persian words which have now become quite common and are readily understood by the people.

DAYANAND PATRIKA,
February, 1906.

Gambling speculations in opium.

43. The Dayánand Patrika (Meerut), for February, regrets to say that the people have lately come to indulge very largely in opium speculations in many large towns, the consequences of which are as disastrous as those of regular gambling. It is high time that Government took steps to authoritatively put down these gambling speculations.

MOHINI,
23rd February, 1906.

Suggestion for preventing Indian lads from indulging in intoxicants.

44. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 23rd February, observing that liquor, opium, hemp drugs and tobacco are extremely injurious to the health of man, says that Government would do well to prevent Indian youths from indulging in them, as it must shatter their constitutions.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th February,
1906.

Protest against the standardization of time in Bombay.

45. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th February, says :—A public meeting of the Indian community was held in Bombay, on the 21st instant, to protest against the imposition of standard time on the city of Bombay. Sir Bhalchandra Krishna presided. In his opening speech the chairman said that, from the Indian point of view, standard time caused great hardship to their religious ceremonial observances and the casting of horoscopes. Being artificial time great difficulty was experienced in its use in these and cognate matters. A resolution bearing 15,000 signatures was afterwards adopted praying the Bombay Government and the Municipal Corporation to return to local Bombay time in the same way as was the case when Madras time was in vogue for railway purposes. To make standard time an official fad, and to impose it upon a large city like Bombay, seem to be the height of unwisdom. It not only involves an inaccuracy in the marking of time, but also serious inconvenience to the native population. What was wrong with the old arrangement by which Madras time was kept at all railway stations, and local time at large cities? The European mind has the reputation of being very accurate and precise, but when there is a hobby to ride no account is kept of time or anything else. We can understand that for railway purposes and working the telegraph a uniform standard of time may be desirable; but is that any reason why in a place like Bombay or Calcutta the clock should mark 12-30 when the sun-dial points to 12?

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
28th February,
1906.

Establishment of a cow-protection society in the Pilibhit District.

46. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 28th February, has heard that one Lala Ram Parshad, rais of Amrita, district Pilibhit, has established a cow-protection society in that village; and, expressing its approval thereof, urges upon the Indians in general to adopt similar measures (in other parts of the country) for the preservation of the bovine species upon which they depend so much for their agriculture, and supply of milk and ghi.

VI.—RAILWAY.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th February,
1906.

A complaint regarding the shortage of goods wagons at the stations of the Allahabad-Fyzabad railway.

47. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th February, says that the supply of goods wagons at the stations on the Allahabad-Fyzabad Railway line is generally very short, which causes much inconvenience and loss to traders. Consignments received at the stations in question, especially at Mau Aima, cannot be despatched, at times for as long as two months, because the railway authorities at the headquarters at Lucknow do not readily comply with the requisitions of the station masters concerned. The popular Traffic Superintendent of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway would do well to see to the matter.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
25th February,
1906.

Suggestion for providing separate carriages for the accommodation of low classes on the Indian railways.

48. A correspondent of the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 25th February, says that as no separate carriages are set apart for the accommodation of sweepers, chamárs and similar other low classes on the Indian Railways, higher classes feel greatly dissatisfied in having to travel with them in the same carriages. Both respectable Hindus and Musalmans consider sweepers, chamárs &c., as "untouchable;" and the railway authorities would do well to provide separate carriages for the latter classes.

RAHBAR,
28th February, 1906.

Certain complaints regarding the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

49. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February, complains that as only one or two Intermediate class carriages are generally attached to the mail trains running on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and as some of the compartments of even these few carriages are reserved for Europeans and Indian females, Indian gentlemen travelling intermediate class are much inconvenienced for want of sufficient accommodation. Again, invidious distinction is made between Europeans and Indians in the 1st and 2nd class carriages, those reserved for the former being more comfortable than those for the latter, while the fares charged are the same. Surely Mr. Pope, the popular Traffic Superintendent of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, ought to be able to do away with the distinction of colour on the line.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st March, 1906.

Admission of Indian public to the platform of the railway station, Allahabad.

50. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 1st March, says:—A letter, numerously and influentially signed, has been sent to the Traffic Manager, East Indian Railway, protesting against the present practice of permits for the platform of the Allahabad Railway Station. As we have pointed out several times no one, not an actual passenger with a railway ticket in his possession, is allowed to go on the platform without a permit from the Station Master, or one of his subordinates. This rule is enforced only in the case of Indians, Europeans being of course exempt from its operation. The signatories to the letter request the Traffic Manager either to do away with the present regulation, or if that is found impossible, to introduce a system of platform tickets as obtains on other railway systems and also at some stations of the East Indian Railway. In case the Traffic Manager does not see his way to comply with either of the two requests, the signatories are prepared to go up to the Railway Board or higher, if necessary. It is to be hoped, however, that the Traffic Manager will realise the invidiousness of the regulation and the inconvenience attendant on it as well as the reasonableness of the request made, and will either abolish the existing rule, or replace it by a system of platform tickets.

VII.—Post Office.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th February, 1906.

Need for appointment of a professional letter-writer to fill up postal forms for illiterate persons and to sell postage stamps, etc., to the public at the Head Post Office, Bara Banki.

51. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th February, says that as no separate vendor of postage stamps is appointed at the Head Post Office at Bara Banki, and postage stamps, postcards, etc. are sold by the postal clerks themselves, the public have generally to wait a long time before they are supplied. Again, illiterate people are much inconvenienced in getting postal forms filled up for them for want of a professional letter writer at the office in question. The postal authorities would, therefore, do well to appoint a professional letter writer at the office both to sell the stamps, &c. and fill up forms for illiterate persons, as has already been done at Moradabad, Bareilly, and some other places.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
24th February, 1906.

Certain complaints regarding the Postal Department.

52. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th February, complains that while the Postal Department is the most useful and hard-worked of all the public departments in India, it is most stingily worked. The officials of this Department are not only comparatively poorly paid, but obtain leave with much difficulty, however urgently they may require it. In another article, the editor referring to the very hard life which postal runners and postmen have to lead in the discharge of their duties, says that they receive very low pay, and strongly urges that suitable increments should be made in their salaries.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

MUSAFIR,
23rd February, 1906.

Attack on Christ's birth.

53. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd February, publishes a second letter purporting to have been addressed by Satan to Christ. In this letter, Satan ridicules the idea that God was the father of Christ and that his mother could have conceived by God appearing to her in the shape of a pigeon, as stated in the Bible.

MUSAFIR,
23rd February,
1906.

A religious controversy between the Musáfir and certain Muhammadan papers in the Punjab.

54. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd February, publishes a long article in reply to some objections taken to the Vedic religion as advocated by the Árya Samajists by the Tegh-i-Islám and certain other Muhammadan papers published in the Punjáb. A religious controversy, it would appear, has long been going on between the editors of the Musáfir and the Muhammadan papers in question, in which both parties have been calling each other names, and attributing absurdities to each other's religion in objectionable language, which sometimes borders on indecency and vulgarism.

AN-NAJM,
23rd February,
1906.

Complaint against the vilifiers of the Muhammadan religion.

55. A correspondent writing in An-Najm (Lucknow), of the 28th Zil Hijjah (corresponding to 23rd February), calls those, who attack the Quran or prophet Muhammad, to be impudent, mischievous, ill-begotten, ill-bred and similar other names. He is especially very angry with one Pandit Bhoj Dat for his utterances against Islam, and regrets that the Musalmans should so entirely occupy themselves with performing such superficial religious duties as holding milads (meetings where the life of Muhammad is recited), mourning assemblies (re the deaths of Hasan and Husain) tazias, &c., without showing any resentment against the vilifiers of their sacred religion. [Two other correspondents of the same paper are very glad to inform the editor that during their six months' stay at Lárkana (in Sindh) they have been able to make as many as 1,962 new converts to Islam in the face of the most determined opposition of the Árya Samajists and others.

ADVOCATE,
25th February,
1906.

The casualties at the Kumbh fair at Allahabad.

56. The Allahabad correspondent of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th February, says:—I am feeling rather curious to know if any member of the Local Legislative Council will have the pluck to interpellate the Government regarding the sad deaths that took place on the occasion of the last Kumbha. It is a very serious matter and I shall be sorry indeed if the popular feeling is not given expression to in the Council Chamber. These deaths are said to have been due to an unfortunate mistake; but what about those whose want of experience or lack of foresight brought about such a disastrous result?

But it is idle to expect our members to move in the matter. These good people fight shy of proper use of the right of interpellation. The one desire of their hearts is to be dubbed as 'moderates,' and they revel in their moderation. Moderation which is purchased by sacrificing the interests of one's own country or people is contemptible. We really want a few genuine "extremists" of the Bradlaugh type, who will never mince matters and will always speak out the real feelings and sentiments of the people in plain, unvarnished language. But let us wait and keep our souls in patience.

ADVOCATE,
25th February,
1906.

The late Kumbh fair, at Allahabad, and Sádhús.

57. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th February, says:—The one great defect in the Police arrangement of the Mágh Mela was that all attention was centred round the convenience of Sádhús who were allowed to visit the bathing-ghát with all pomp and splendour, while little attention was paid to regulate the visit of the Ghrista population. The last Kumbha is full of lessons to the police, and we think the authorities will be fully justified in preventing the Sádhús from crushing the Ghristas, and in telling them not to discharge a religious function with pomp and splendour; and the action of the Government will be fully supported by public opinion.

ADVOCATE,
25th February,
1906.

Singing of obscene songs at the Holi festival by policemen and others.

58. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th February, says:—Our correspondent from Allahabad draws prominent attention to one most objectionable aspect of Holi, and that is the singing of obscene songs. There is a great deal of force in what our correspondent writes. Though we do not know if the police force, as a body, can be entrusted with the task of arresting people found singing obscene songs on the public road: in this matter it is the people to whom the Government officers can look for help. Some prosecutions must be instituted at the instance of reform societies. The task is unpleasant, but shall have to be undertaken. The men who go mad during Holi and use foul language or sing obscene songs are not men who require a week's stay in jail to be rid of the very bad habit, but men who require warnings, and these warnings must be given at the instance of the people rather than at that of the police.

But without going to set the machinery of criminal laws of the country in motion, the Government can do a great deal. Its officers can use their moral influence in favour of the purity movement. There is no doubt that the police and the military, whenever they happen to come to the city, set a very bad example. They, days before the actual Holi, sing obscene songs at the near approach of women. Any man, even the policeman shorn of his uniform, cannot use foul language towards even the lowest woman on any day other than Holi; but vested with brief authority, many of them are not ashamed of bringing disgrace on the uniform they wear in publicly singing obscene songs. The people not knowing their powers coolly put up with these insults. Even without going to the length of punishing the police, the Inspector-General of Police can do a great deal by issuing orders to the effect that any policeman found using obscene language in any police post or his beat will be severely reprimanded and incur the displeasure of the higher officers. On Dhulandi the policemen generally form parties and go with a tomtom from house to house in their circle singing obscene songs and accepting such presents in cash as are given to them. This is surely degrading and ought to be put down. It is no part of his religion that a Hindu should go from house to house and smear his neighbour's face with powder, and certainly no policeman can raise the cry of religion in danger if he is prevented from degrading himself in the eyes of the people by doing things which are surely disgraceful and scandalous. We must say that there is much improvement in the popular attitude. There is now less of those frivolities which disgrace society. There is less of drinking publicly in respectable families of even drinking castes. There is a tendency to put a stop to the most deplorable features of Holi. The forces that are working for the purity of thought and action deserve encouragement from the State. The encouragement, to begin with, should take the form of a warning to the police, and through the police to the people. The leaders of public opinion can set an example by organizing literary entertainments or other amusements to keep away young men from bad company. The entertainments can in course of time become centres to attract people desirous of enjoying holidays in the best possible manner. [The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 28th February, expresses the same views.]

AL BASHIR,
27th February,
1906.

Al Bashír's comments on the late Bakar-id riot at Calcutta.

59. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 27th February, referring to the late Bakar-id riot between the Hindus and the Musalmans at Calcutta, says that the Bengalis were only a short time before trying to induce the Musalmans to join their agitation against the partition of Bengal by professing much affection for them as their fellow countrymen, and regrets that the latter should so easily allow themselves to be duped by the "lip professions" of the former who on the very first opportunity were ready to interfere with the performance of a religious duty of theirs.

AL BASHIR,
27th February,
1906.

Al Bashír's suggestion to the Hindus not to leave their houses for three days during the _Bakarid_ festival to avoid falling out with the Musalmans.

60. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 27th February, says that the Indian People (sic.) lately made a suggestion that in order to avoid Hindu-Musalman riots on the occasion of Bakar-id, the Musalmans should sacrifice cows in the local public slaughter-house of their residences, and not in their own dwelling-houses in future, sending the cows intended for the sacrifice to the slaughter-house a day before the festival. This plan would hardly be found feasible and satisfactory: the Hindus might still interfere with Muhammadans taking cows to the slaughter-house a day before the festival just as they do now when they see a cow being taken for the purpose on the festival day. Besides, why should the Musalmans be compelled to change their present custom of making their religious sacrifice? Again, illiterate members of the Musalman community can hardly be expected to agree to adopt the suggestion simply to please (over-sensitive) Hindus. The easiest solution of the whole matter would, in Al Bashír's opinion, be for the Hindus not to leave their houses at all for three days during Bakar-id, or if they go out at all, they might do so blindfolded.

OUDH AKHBAR,
16th February,
1906.

Muhammadan religious endowments, and uses to which they can legitimately be put.

61. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 1st March, while admitting that the incomes of the Muhammadan religious endowments existing in various parts of this country are not generally strictly applied to the purposes for which the donors intended them refuses to agree with those educated Muhammadans who think that the greater portion of the endowments in question may rightly be appropriated to the use of the Muhammadan College at Aligarh. This will, so far as the writer can form an opinion on the subject, be a most reprehensible sacrilege, diverting, as it would, the proceeds of the endowments to purposes other than those for which the donors made them. It is not necessary to open here the question whether the Aligarh College is really the centre of education for the entire Musalman world in India or not; but the writer thinks that the Muhammadan theologians would do well to discuss the question fully as to whether a Muhammadan endowment can be diverted from its original specific purposes and appropriated, in part or whole, to any other object of any public utility whatever. A verdict of Muhammadan jurists on the question is urgently needed, especially because even the Government has thought it fit to interfere with the proper use of certain endowments, though it has done so in favour of objects of public good.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

UNION GAZETTE,
21st February,
1906.

Conviction and punishment of the Bhala of Poona for publishing a seditious article.

62. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st February, referring to the conviction and punishment of the editor of the Maráthi newspaper, Bhala of Poona, for publishing a seditious article, regrets that, in spite of the recommendation of the Indian Press for dealing leniently with the offending editor, he has been relegated to jail. This shows how risky journalism is in India, and how greatly the position of editors in this country differs from that of their confrères in England.

A suggestion to the editor of the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar to call upon its readers to contribute to the funds of the Hedjaz railway under construction.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
4th March, 1906.

1. A Muhammadan correspondent of the Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 4th March, in recounting the advantages that are likely to accrue to the Musalman world from the completion of the Hedjáz railway which has been under construction for some years, says that it will not only greatly facilitate the pilgrimage of pious Muhammadans to Mecca and Medina from India, and all other parts of the world, but will introduce education and civilization among the Bedouins and other Arabs, and, what is of still greater importance, enable the Sultan to readily despatch military reinforcements to protect Arabia from the possible invasion of the European Powers who have long being designing to wrest that country from His Majesty and thereby weaken his power and influence on the followers of Islam. Such being the prospective importance of the Hedjaz railway, the sooner it is completed the better. And to promote this object the writer urges the editor to keep the subject well before the minds of his readers, and induce them to freely contribute their mite to the funds of the railway in question. The editor had better open a fund for the purpose, as the Watan and Vakil have already done in the Panjab, and remit what subscriptions he is able to collect for the purpose to the proper authorities.

Famine in Japan and India.

ADVOCATE,
8th March, 1906.

2. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 8th March, says:—The Ally of the Mikado has opened a Mansion House Fund for the relief of the famine stricken in Japan. More than eleven thousand pounds sterling have already been subscribed. Of the Colonies, Australia has come forward with help in kind; the Victorian Government is forwarding fifty tons of flour. It is a pity the Fund opened in this country does not show much progress. Is it because of another widespread famine that has the people in its grip? Be it what it may, the smallness of the amount is to be regretted, considering the promptness with which Japan came forward to our rescue both in the last famine and the severe earthquake.

Condition of Indians in the Transvaal.

ADVOCATE,
4th March, 1906.

3. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th March, says:—In view of the probable grant of responsible government to the Colonies of the Transvaal and Orangia, the fear has been expressed that Indians would then fare worse than at present. This impression has affected some members of the Commons also. Hence a question was put on the subject. Mr. Wilston Churchill in reply said that the Government would allow no opportunity to slip away without trying to secure the satisfactory status of Indians in the Transvaal. Well and good. But what is the satisfactory status? So long as the status is not defined and the assent of the Colonies got on it, we may as well take the assurance to mean next to nothing, if not merely a play upon words.

Indians in the Transvaal.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th March, 1906.

4. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th March, referring to the deputation which the Indians in the Transvaal propose to send to England for redress of their grievances in the former country, does not think it will produce any good result. Who has ever heard the complaint of a slave, against one's own flesh and blood?

The Liberal Ministry and its predicted fall at the next General Election.

HINDOSTHAN,
2nd March, 1906.

5. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 2nd March, says:—It is probable that at the next General Election Mr. Chamberlain and his followers will come again to the front. In the first place the public will soon become disgusted with the Radical Government, as their policy in South Africa is likely to reduce that country to a state of bankruptcy, and perhaps cause a panic among banking and commercial circles in London. They also want to disendow the established church in Wales, and reduce the number of public-houses, which will render them extremely unpopular among the church and liquor parties. Then again, the British public have not as yet had time to decide upon the merits of protection over free trade, as it is said a large number of British manufacturers favour it, though others oppose it, but will probably in time alter their views. The return of Mr. Balfour by a majority of over 161,000 (sic.) votes shows the Unionists are gaining ground.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th March, 1906.

Mr. Morley on the question of giving the Indian people a larger share in the administration of their country.

6. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th March, says :—In the amendment moved by Mr. Herbert Roberts relating to the Partition of Bengal, the second part of the proposition referred to the demands of the Indian people for a larger share in the administration of their country. Mr. Roberts alluded to the deep impression the rise of Japan had made on Indians. The continuance of the present policy would, he added, result in the loss of India. This is a contingency that neither the Government here nor the Ministry in England ever contemplates. With the infinite resources of the Government and the immense strength at its back the loss of India is deemed to be impossible. The indifference of the Government to the feelings of the people, the calm determination with which the most unpopular measures are carried in the teeth of the most bitter opposition show that the possibility of the loss of India never occurs to the Government. And there is no Government in the world which has sufficient foresight to provide against such a contingency. India, of course, is in no immediate danger of being lost, because the people themselves are clinging to the British rule; but even when America was actually lost the British Government had no idea of what was about to happen. Mr. Morley did not deny the justice of the claims of Indians to a larger share in the administration. He said he 'was not likely to depart from the general principles of Liberalism and those knowing India declared the people were admirable material on which a system might be built up in which they would have a far greater share in the administration, but it was folly to pretend that immediate action in that direction was possible.' This is very cold comfort indeed, and they are not wrong who hold that, so far as India is concerned, there is nothing to choose between a Tory and a Liberal Ministry. If immediate action cannot be taken, when is action to be taken, if at all, and the claims of the people of this country recognised? If the people of India are admirable material, when is that material to be worked upon? The one conclusion to which we are driven is that the less we depend upon the Government the better for our future. Every step that we advance without the help of the Government will be a sure advance, and it will be only when we have made certain advancement that the Government will entertain our claims seriously.

HINDOSTHAN,
5th March, 1906.

Mr. Herbert Roberts' apprehension from the present policy of British Government in India.

7. The English Hindosthán (Kálákánkar), of the 5th March, says :—Mr. Herbert Roberts in moving his amendment in connection with the Partition of Bengal, also alluded ambiguously to what he termed "the deep impression that the rise of Japan had made on Indians," adding "the continuance of the Government's present policy would end in the loss of India." We have frequently heard such silly nonsense being expressed both inside and outside of the House of Commons. If any impression whatever, that is intended to mean, has been made in Bengal, it certainly does not go outside of Bengal proper. Of course there are many Bengalis scattered over India, throughout the three Presidencies, who have vainly tried to enlist followers in the cause of opposition to the Partition question, but have ignominiously failed.

CITIZEN,
5th March, 1906.

Expression of delight at the prospect of the grant of Home Rule to Ireland.

8. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 5th March, says :—There is a strong bond of partially latent but deeply felt sympathy between Ireland and India. Politically they sail in the same boat. They have the same master, and both are equally looked down upon by him. For these and other reasons, it is no wonder that both will sympathize with each other. Indian newspapers have always evinced a special interest in the vital Irish questions, and many of the Irish papers have always written sympathetically on questions of Indian grievance, as they have cropped up from time to time. When Lord Ripon was vehemently opposed by Anglo-Indians in carrying out his liberal measures of Self-Government, and of granting to Indian magistrates the right to try natives of Europe, such leading organs of the Irish people, as the United Ireland and Irish Times lent their hearty support to Lord Ripon and to the people of India. About the same time when the Russians occupied Panjdeh near the Afghan frontier, and the Russian bugbear was causing much uneasiness to Englishmen, one of the then members of the British Cabinet, Mr. Goschen, publicly condemned the sympathy of Ireland for Indians and took educated Indians to task for reciprocating the friendship of the Irish. This betrayed the fear that the British Government felt of an active combination between Irish Home Rulers and Indian political bodies for the united furtherance of their political designs. The fear was, however, born of guilty conscience, and what they feared was never actualized. There is another fact which shows that the Irish heart feels the Indian's woes, and it is this that among the white champions for the cause of just and progressive Government in India there have been not a few Irishmen, most prominent among them being the two O'Donnels who wrote respectively the famous "Black Pamphlet" some quarter of a century ago, and "India under Lord Curzon" quite recently. The American Irish, too, are most eager to express their sympathy for their Indian brethren in distress, as is evident from the fearless and candid writings that appear regularly in the columns of such papers of weight and respectability as the Gaelic American.

It is with particular delight that all India has noticed the change that has recently come over the spirit of England's dream in regard to Ireland. It is about twenty years ago that the late Mr. Gladstone launched his scheme for Irish Home Rule. It was a scheme which, though not meeting with the full approval of extremists among the Irish Home Rulers, was yet accepted by them as a partial solution of their national political problem. But it came as a surprise, nay as a thunderbolt, upon the majority of the British public, who had already been suffering from what was then called Jingoism and is now known as Imperialism. Mr. Gladstone's scheme of Home Rule was rejected by Parliament, and a definite outcome of it was the formation of a strong party of politicians, the chief plank of whose platform was the maintenance of the Union between Ireland and England as between a slave and master or an oppressor and oppressed. But twenty years have worked a transformation, and now the party of Unionists has been reduced to a pitiable minority. The change in this respect is remarkable, and a most hopeful feature in the present reformed political life of the British people. Every one of the 460 Liberal members of the present House of Commons is a supporter of the proposal for granting Home Rule to Ireland.

* * * * * * *

There is no longer any manner of doubt that the new Liberal Ministry is determined to introduce Home Rule in Ireland, although its scheme about it may not be as radical and perfect as the most forward of the Irish Home Rulers in the House of Commons may desire. For our part, we fervently hope that the Home Rule to which such true Liberals as Mr. John Morley, Lord Ripon and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman will subscribe will be as faithfully Gladstonian as the present circumstances will permit.

* * * * * * *

The granting of Home Rule to Ireland will be hailed throughout India, and that for two reasons—first because a nation equally circumstanced as we are will have obtained much of that political emancipation for which they have fought so long, so bravely and so perseveringly, and secondly because it will have instilled into us the hope that India will one day attain a similar result in her efforts to obtain for herself a system of self-Government or Home Rule suited to her and her aspirations.

Ireland teaches us the great truth of political patience and perseverance, and India must lay it to heart and profit by it. Nothing, we must say, would encourage us more in our constitutional struggle for self-Government than to see the Irish triumph in their long-continued, patient and heroic effort to obtain Home Rule. Our fervent prayer is for the triumph of the Irish.

AWAZAH-I-KHALQ,
16th February, 1906.

Prohibition of Government servants from making any contribution towards a political object.

9. The Awázah-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th February, regrets that, while Government servants have already been debarred from taking part in political meetings, they are now ordered not to give any subscription for a political object. But this restriction will practically be ineffectual. A person desiring to contribute towards a political object, might do so in the name of another person.

ADVOCATE,
4th March, 1906.

Prohibition of Government servants from subscribing in aid of any political meeting.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th March, says :—The Panjábi learns that, in connection with the forthcoming session of the Khatri Conference at Rawalpindi, a question has arisen whether the Khatri Government servants, in view of the recent orders of the Government, can take a direct or indirect part in the Conference, since, among other resolutions, the Conference every year appeals to the Government to throw open the doors of the military service to the community, and remove the ban to which it was never subjected in the pre-British days, though the members professing the Sikh religion are not subjected to any such disability. We agree with our contemporary in thinking that merely for asking a boon from the Government, no Caste Association can become a political body, and every faithful Government official who is so inclined can join such a movement and contribute towards its funds. But the doubt created in the minds of the Panjab Government officials is not meaningless; they have a good ground for fear inasmuch as the new amended rules have in a manner further encroached upon the independence of Government officials and have created an artificial barrier between the Government officials and the people, and alienated their sympathies with affairs of their own country. The rule, as it stood before 1904, was sufficiently strict, the amendment makes it still more strict as it objects to the Government officials not only joining any political movement, but also to their subscribing in aid of it. As the definition of the word political has been left to the discretion of officials, its meaning can be twisted and conclusions drawn which may not be altogether fair. Rule 20 for the conduct of Government servants before 1904 stood as follows :—

"A Government servant may not take part in any political agitation or meeting or attend any political meeting his presence at which is likely to be misconstrued or impair his public usefulness."

The rule as now amended has got, we are told, the addition of two phrases, namely, or subscribe in aid of and in India or relating to Indian affairs.

These rules have been stiffened as far as Government officials, who are Indians, are concerned. They are not allowed even to send their humble mite to any movement which is considered political. But Anglo-Indian officials appear to be at liberty to take any interest in the affairs of their own country. The words "in India or relating to Indian affairs" have been apparently added to allow Anglo-Indians to take part in their Home politics. So it is only Indian affairs which are not to be touched by an official. He may, if he chooses, take interest in the affairs of any country, whether it be England, Turkey, Afghanistan or even Japan, but not India. It is in the public interest that a Government official should not be allowed to take active part in any political movement. Their presence in any political meeting is not participating in it. But to prevent him from subscribing to a movement or an association which aims at the political advancement of the people is very hard, specially so when it is too difficult to define what is meant by a political movement. If in the Punjab doubt can arise whether a Caste Conference can be regarded as a political movement, if in Eastern Bengal Government officials can take part in Anti-partition meetings without being called upon to explain why they joined a political meeting, if Anglo-Indian officials can join the Chamber of Commerce and criticise the Government policy, surely the amendment introduced requires revision, and the ban should be removed, which affects the private conduct of public servants.

AL BASHIR,

The Congress and the Musalmans.

11. Al Bashír (Etawah), of the 6th March, quotes a passage from the Arya Gazette (a Panjab paper), of the 16th February, according to which it is lost labour on the part of Hindus to seek unity with Musalmans when the latter are found so frequently ready to wound the feelings of the former by going to the length of even destroying their temples, &c.; and asks that when such views are expressed by a paper whose chief editor is Lala Lajpat Rai, one of the prominent Congress men, how the Musalmans can expect to derive any benefit from joining the Congress movement led by men holding such views.

A suggestion for the Government to take notice of the conduct of the Gorakhpur Tahsildar in connection with the late Gorakhpur defamation case.

13. The Awázah-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th February, referring to the late Gorakhpur defamation case of Munshi Achal Behari, Subordinate Judge, versus Mr. Alfred Nundy, asks if Mr. Nundy's letter which gave rise to the suit was of such a nature that the High Court should have made an enquiry into the character of the complainant. Government should, at any rate, take notice of the conduct of the Tahsildar of Gorakhpur in the matter.

ZUL QARNAIN,
28th February, 1906.

The late contempt of court case at Agra.

14. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th February, referring to the particulars of the case in which two military officers were lately guilty of contempt to the Small Causes Court at Agra presided over by a native Judge, says that it would seem that the punishments prescribed for contempt of court are all for native and not European offenders as well; otherwise the accused would not have dared to leave the premises of the Court in defiance of the Judge's order for their arrest with impunity. The case has created a great sensation among the native community; and it remains to be seen how the offending members of a civilized nation are ultimately dealt with in the matter.

UNION GAZETTE,
28th February, 1906.

A native beaten to death by certain British soldiers at Lahore.

15. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 28th February, stating that a native was recently beaten to death by certain British soldiers at the house of a prostitute at Lahore, regrets to say that in spite of the great efforts made, and stringent orders issued, by the Government of India to prevent European soldiers doing violence to natives, such unfortunate accidents are still not uncommon. The reason is not far to seek. Owing to race feeling and undue regard for colour, European offenders in such cases are generally let off by the courts that try them; and hence their (nominal) trials have no deterrent effect on their fellow countrymen. If the Judicial authorities (before whom the offenders in this case will be placed for trial) would duly punish the accused, sentencing them to a sufficiently long term of rigorous imprisonment, if not to death, it would remove the stain of miscarriage of justice that generally exists in the trial of mixed cases.
